"I find it difficult to comment on that because I have not talked to the great majority of MPs about it. I simply give my opinion that most MPs would be happy for openness".

The hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith), Chairman of the Select Committee on Members' Interests, when asked the same question, replied, not committedly but quite fairly:

"I think there are arguments on both sides of this question".

It is therefore quite wrong to allege that the proposal for the disclosure of amounts received is simply the work of partisan and ill-disposed Labour Members of Parliament. That is quite false; it is the considered judgment of the Nolan committee and of many people who gave evidence to it.

Mr. King: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Shore: I am sorry, but there is a 10-minute rule.

Of course I understand why there are strong objections to the proposals. According to the present and limited register, 168 Members of Parliament with 356 consultancies have paid agreements with outside bodies. The ban on advocacy will almost certainly lead to the termination of a number of those consultancies, and to a resulting loss of income to their recipients.

As for the rest, the great bulk of consultancies, there is inevitable disquiet, because publication will almost certainly lead to demands that Members of Parliament justify their consultancy earnings. If their constituents are satisfied that these activities promote the public interest and that the Members involved are able to combine those outside paid activities satisfactorily with their primary duty to represent their constituencies and to participate in national affairs, they will have little to fear, but those who cannot so satisfy their constituents will obviously be under pressure to bring the arrangements to an end.

These anxieties, while wholly understandable, do not outweigh the basic need to restore in the public at large confidence in their elected representatives in the House of Commons. The country has a gut feeling that Members of Parliament are here above all to serve them and the nation, and that anything that interferes with that must be justified rather than taken for granted.

The House will recall that the Nolan committee was set up in October last year

"to examine current concerns about standards of conduct of all holders of public office including arrangements relating to financial and commercial activities".

No one should minimise the extent of current concerns about the standards of conduct.

Failure to disclose amounts earned from all Parliament-related consultancy agreements will inevitably lead people to conclude that Members of Parliament have something to hide and cannot justify their consultancy arrangements. Nolan was set up to restore public confidence in elected Members. It will not succeed in that task if the House rejects its major recommendation: to disclose earnings.

5.46 pm

Sir Terence Higgins (Worthing): I declare the various interests that I have recorded in the register.

Ultimately, standards in public life will depend on the talent, ability, skill and integrity of those who are elected to the House. Nolan himself recognised that the issues that he was considering could not be divorced from the issue of Members' pay. I argued at column 1193 on 26 October 1995 that we are in a serious recruitment crisis in the House, not in the sense that there would be too few candidates to fill the seats but that the number of people suitably qualified to come to the House, and more particularly to be drawn from the House to become Ministers, is likely to be adversely affected if we continue the present position with regard to Members' pay.

The situation is such—I analysed it in some depth in my earlier speech—that, if we were to get Members back to the same relative position in relation to the rest of the country, in real terms, Members' pay would have to be doubled and Ministers' pay trebled. I believe firmly that we must also consider that issue in looking at and putting into context today's debate.

I suggested, since Nolan clearly has managed to establish a remarkable degree of independence, that the matter should be referred to him. He pointed out that it was outside his present terms of reference. I believe that those terms need to be changed, and we need a series of all-party discussions so that we can tackle that problem. The matter is urgent, because, if it is going to be done, it has to be done towards the end of this Parliament for implementation in the next. Given the interest in the debate today and the general atmosphere at the present time this may well be our last chance to get the matter sorted out. If we go on the same way in the next 10 years as we have in the past 30, I fear that in 10 years' time a large number of Members in the House will either be placemen or paranoiacs—[Laughter.] It is not a laughing matter. I believe that it is a very serious matter indeed.

It is generally agreed, certainly between hon. Members on the Front Benches and all the members of the Select Committee, that the Select Committee worked in an extraordinarily efficient way. We were frequently reported in the press to be deadlocked, but we spent very little time on the matter on which we were deadlocked because it was apparent that we were deadlocked and that the matter would have to be resolved on the Floor of the House.

We spent 25 sittings on this report, and 39 in total, trying to clarify the overall report of the Nolan committee. With the greatest respect to the right hon. Member for

[Sir Terence Higgins]

Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore), I must say that we had a great deal of clarification to do. As my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House pointed out, we had to examine the whole issue. He dodged the issue of consultancies; he referred it to us, and we had to come up with what I believe to be a much more sensible solution in relation to banning advocacy. We have defined it pretty precisely—and to the extent that we have not, the new Commissioner for Standards and the new Select Committee will be able to smooth the rough edges.

I must express concern to my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House in regard to a rather complicated point that arose in interventions on his opening speech. We spent many hours discussing how we were to deal with the problem of speaking if advocacy was banned; the results of our deliberations are recorded in paragraphs 21 to 26. I had assumed that there would be a catch-all motion saying that we approved the general tone of the report, or the general references in it, but that has not appeared.

There is a motion stating that the drafting will be difficult, and that there will have to be a code of conduct; but, if we pass the motion as it is currently drafted, we shall end up with an interregnum in which speaking in the circumstances in which we envisage it to be permitted will be prohibited until the code has been established by the new Committee. We are constrained by time, as we have been throughout our proceedings on this matter and as the Nolan committee was; but perhaps we can try to resolve that problem this evening.

We have little time for debate. I am sorry that we cannot have a series of separate debates on the various issues—the question of deputations, for instance. Let me conclude by picking up the points made by the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney. The fact is that Nolan viewed the question of disclosing amounts in relation to the confused scenario that he envisaged. He did not envisage, as we do, the total banning of advocacy. Clearly, in that context the question of disclosure simply does not arise any more. One of the main evils—perhaps the main evil—with which Nolan sought to deal was the idea that people exert influence on this place from outside by paying money to hon. Members. We have now ruled that out, so in that context it does not arise.

As for the provision of advice, as the report points out, the amount paid is likely to reflect either the resources of the recipient of the advice or the quality of that advice; but it will not affect the performance of hon. Members in the House. If it does, it will be caught by the rules and suitable sanctions will be applied. Another point made by the right hon. Gentleman needs to be dealt with, however. He said that we should reveal the amounts that are paid to hon. Members as a result of their election to the House. The implication is that hon. Members are spending considerable time outside, dealing with consultancies and so forth, rather than being in the House.

We all know perfectly well what the position really is. Many hon. Members with large outside interests are among the most enthusiastic and hard-working parliamentarians; probably no hon. Member works less than would be regarded outside as a normal working week. On the other hand, there are hon. Members—including some of those who are keenest to suggest that Members of Parliament should be full time—who do not, perhaps, serve as much as they might on Standing or Select Committees. The amount that is paid is no indication of the amount of time that Members spend in the House. I believe that we are all full-time Members, regardless of whether we have other occupations outside.

Let me return to the main issue. I do not believe that disclosure is necessary. I disagree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen); I take his point about public limited companies—no doubt his and my remuneration as directors are recorded in the annual reports—but I do not think that that justifies the extension advocated by Opposition Members. I hold that view not least because it is difficult to define whether a particular interest arises from membership of the House. Many hon. Members are now doing, on a much smaller scale, what they did before—probably in return for a much smaller income than they received then. Any statement of what they are receiving as a result of membership of the House should perhaps also take into account how much they were receiving before, and the amount by which their income has dropped as a result of that membership.

For all those reasons, I do not think that we should go along with the idea of disclosure of amounts. It has been overtaken by developments advocated by the Select Committee, which I consider a substantial improvement. Because disclosure has been the sole issue on which the press and, to a large degree, the Opposition have concentrated, we are overlooking the great extent to which we are tightening the rules with regard to the Commissioner, the new Committee and the banning of many practices which I—along, I believe, with many others—regard as completely wrong.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North said, the atmosphere has changed; but I believe that we should be able to support the changes that we are now proposing in front of our constituents. I hope that the House will not accept the Opposition amendment.

5.55 pm

Mr. Alfred Morris (Manchester, Wythenshawe): Inexplicably, the right hon. Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins) excluded the possibility that Members of Parliament can be both placemen and paranoiacs. I think the House might have spared him a minute or so more to explain why.

I have long had the honour of being sponsored by the Co-operative movement, which does not make secret donations in any form—directly or indirectly—to any Member of the House. My interest is one that I declare with pride. There is nothing hole-in-corner about Co-operative sponsorship. No payment is made to the Member of Parliament and the contribution made to her or his allowable election costs is there for all to see. It is out in the open, fully disclosed and fully accounted for: a model of open dealing and political cleanliness.

Along with the hon. Member for Shipley (Sir M. Fox), I am also joint parliamentary adviser to the Royal British Legion, which is a wholly honorary role, both in my case and in his.

Full disclosure of what is spent by private interests to influence decisions of the House—in particular, what is paid to individual Members—is now essential to the health of our democracy. If the mandatory declaration of

Members' earnings for work done in a parliamentary capacity for outside interests is not secured today, the battle for transparency must go on—and go on it will until no organ of opinion has cause to write, as one not unfriendly to the Government now does:

> "Do Tory MPs realise how grubby they make themselves look? By fighting tooth and nail to keep secret how much they earn on the side, they give the impression they have something to hide. They should stop acting like Arthur Daleys and realise that the public has the right to know what extras they are raking in."

That is not from The Guardian, New Statesman and Society or The Observer; it is from a leader in The Sun and, as every test of opinion shows, it reflects the view of the vast majority of the British people. They now no longer request, but insist, that backstairs payments for political favours must cease.

Mr. Rupert Allason (Torbay): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Morris: I have a time limit.

Mr. Allason: I shall be very brief. Those of us who advocate complete transparency accept what the right hon. Gentleman says, but does he agree that it would be a good idea to extend that transparency to payments to constituencies by trade unions?

Hon. Members: It is already happening.

Mr. Morris: As has been explained to the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Allason), what he seeks is happening now. I am saying that backstairs payments for political favours must cease.

The response of some hon. Members will be to say that what they decide to keep secret about their outside earnings for parliamentary work is their business, and their business alone: that it has nothing to do with The Sun, with hon. Members who take a different view or with anyone else. I implore them to think again before we vote tonight. In particular, I ask them to stop being so self-indulgent, to the detriment not only of parliamentary colleagues but of the institution of Parliament itself. Taking and concealing money for parliamentary favours is demeaning to us all and puts an undoubted stain on the reputation of this House. That is why what they do in the matter that we are debating today is our business too.

The vast majority of the electorate also insist that everything that we say and do here must now be said and done in the open. As the House knows, I serve on the Privileges Committee. I made plain, from the moment the Committee was reconstituted in July 1994, my view that it should never meet again in secret except where, for some compelling reason, more especially one involving any possible breach of natural justice, it unavoidably had to do so. Yet we still meet wholly in secret even when there is no conceivable legal or other reason for so doing and even if a witness specifically requests to be heard in public, as Peter Preston did in the case of his appearance before the Privileges Committee earlier this year.

The Prime Minister has told me that his support for secret meetings of the Committee is based on respect for precedents. "That's how it has always been" is his justification. But in the light of the seven principles of acceptable conduct in public life that were enunciated by Lord Nolan—selflessness, integrity, objectivity, accountability, openness, honesty and leadership—the Prime Minister's stance is no longer tenable. The Nolan committee puts precept into practice and I hope that its example will very soon bring the proceedings of the Privileges Committee out of the shadows and into the 20th century while there are still a few years of it left. That would help to cleanse the reputation of the House and, at the same time, improve the quality of justice that is dispensed by its most powerful Committee.

The public now want not only to hear talk about principles but to see them rigorously applied. They are entitled to see beyond the doors of the Committee Rooms of the House, to know what is happening as it happens, and to expect the Nolan committee to bark ever more loudly for the highest achievable standards in public life. I find it a matter for deep regret that the decision by the Special Select Committee on full disclosure of earnings that arises from membership of the House was taken by a casting vote, and that members of the Committee divided wholly on the basis of party allegiance.

I hope that, after this debate, the divide on full disclosure will no longer be one between right and left but will be seen in all parts of the House as one between right and wrong. It is not too late now for us to unite in the cause of open dealing and restoring the reputation of this honourable House.

Sir Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): I declare all my interests as entered in the Register of Members' Interests. None of them has any connection with parliamentary affairs.

Madam Speaker was kind enough to call me in our earlier debate on these issues, and I was hesitant about taking part today. However, there are one or two matters that I should like to mention. First, with the greatest respect to my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, the whole of this affair has been appallingly handled and today has been an excellent example of that. We are squashed into a three-hour debate on an important, controversial and complicated subject. There has been little discussion of the other major issues in my right hon. Friend's speech and in his report simply because there is not enough time.

It has not been possible to interrupt some hon. Members because they can immediately say, quite rightly, "I have only 10 minutes." This is no way to conduct the business of the House of Commons. I do not blame the Leader of the House, because he is under tremendous pressure, above all from Opposition Front Benchers who have been screaming the whole time for rapid decisions because they want a decision on the revelation of Members' incomes.

I adhere to all the points that I made in my earlier speech and, in particular, to what I said about the appointment of a commissioner. I do not think that the House altogether recognises the problems that will face him. Any political agitator in the country will be able to write to him making allegations about Members' conduct in the economic sphere, and the commissioner will be bound to investigate them. In the course of that, all the allegations will become public.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: No.

Sir Edward Heath: Of course they can become public. The hon. Lady cannot simply think that, when the commissioner starts investigating, the chap who put the allegations will not give them to the press. It will all come out and be published. If the allegations are irresponsible, there is no reason why they should be thrown to the public, and that is the problem that the commissioner will face. [Interruption.] The hon. Gentleman likes to indulge in unjustifiable allegations. We have had infinite examples of that, but perhaps he will desist for a moment.

I say to the Liberal Democrat spokesman, the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), that the proposed bands if incomes are reviewed are absolute nonsense. What justification could there be for that? Are we to say that, if an hon. Member is only mildly dishonest, we should do so and so, but that, if he is tremendously dishonourable, we should take certain other actions?

The hon. Gentleman is also wrong to say that, if an hon. Member had only his parliamentary income to live on and is offered £1,000 or £2,000, that is important to him. If he is a barrister earning £250,000 a year from fees, £20,000 is neither here nor there. We cannot categorise people's morality and honesty by trying to move financial barriers up and down. That is a great failure of his argument.

The argument with which I agreed was about the difficulties of industry, and in some cases the professions, in dealing with the Government. In this country there is an enormous gap between them, and people in industry do not know how to deal with Government Departments. I discovered that 30 years ago in the European negotiations, when I found out how close businesses in the other European Union countries were to their Governments and Ministers. Business men flew to Brussels to brief them while they were carrying on negotiations. If I mentioned that I was going to Brussels, business men would ask, "What for? Where is Brussels anyway?" That is a weakness in our structure and that is why business takes the view, "These people can help us and advise us and tell us how to do things." That is why the market has grown in such a remarkable way.

I shall now deal with the question of the public having a right to know. Of course people have a right to know about our public salaries, but we have a right to privacy. Why should people have a right to know about the financial rewards for our individual private activities? That does not stand up to any examination. It has just become a cry, "They have a right to know about us." The public have a right to know about our public position and public rewards, but not about our private activities—[Interruption.] That argument has gone out of the window. What is the point of publishing the private income of hon. Members?

Mr. Bryan Davies (Oldham, Central and Royton): We are not proposing that.

Sir Edward Heath: In that case, the hon. Gentleman disagrees with the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor), who says that it has to be published if someone is registered at the moment.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for allowing me to correct the impression that he is giving. I am not saying that everything that is registered at the moment should be declared in terms of the amount earned. At the beginning of his speech, the right hon. Gentleman said that none of his outside interests was related to parliamentary activities. In that case, none of them is covered by my amendment requiring disclosure of amounts.

Sir Edward Heath: The hon. Lady is on two entirely separate points. The first is about activities related to parliamentary activities, and they are registered. She went on to say that of course those that are not related must also continue to be registered. But what is the point of registering them if they are not connected with parliamentary activities? There is no relationship at all.

On activities concerned with parliamentary activities, what is the argument for publishing the private income that a Member receives? There is no argument for it—none at all. It is just that the Labour party wants and has always wanted to publicise what Conservative Members are earning because it has always had a doctrine of envy and hatred. We know it—we have been dealing with it for a long time. The Labour party cannot produce a single valid argument for publishing those incomes connected with parliamentary activities.

Whatever Nolan may have said, he justified this House as being a very honourable House, and so it is. No justification exists for getting into the complicated arrangements that are set out here. That is why I have continually objected to these things and to the way in which they have been handled here. There has not been proper time to examine them. The Leader of the House will agree that his Select Committee has not had proper time. It has had to sit all through the summer recess. That is no way to handle the business.

This House has always been known as an honourable House and Members have been known as honourable Members. That is the way that we should behave in future and the matter should not be tied down with the machinations of Labour Members. If we want to know their real purpose, one has only to consider their handout which was released last weekend, entitled "News From Labour". What does it say? They are going to write to 125 Members—I have not received a letter—and say, "You must tell us what your income is."

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock): Read it.

Sir Edward Heath: I am not going to take up time reading out the handout—Labour Members have got copies anyhow. It says, "Unless you tell us what your income is, we shall come time and time and time again, demanding that you reveal what you are being paid." What does that mean?

Mr. Bryan Davies: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Sir Edward Heath: No.

That means that the next election will be fought by Labour party agitators going to meetings and interrupting the whole time with only one question, "What is your income?" They want to fight an election not on policies but on envy, greed and dislike for the people in politics.

6.11 pm

Dr. Tony Wright (Cannock and Burntwood): The most devastating paragraph in the Nolan report is paragraph 58, which deals with the failure of the House over the years to put itself into some sort of order. It says that, if the House had only done that, had attended to reports such as the Strauss report and to recommendations such as those of the Salmon commission in 1976 and had dealt with the need to have an effective Register of Members' Interests and bring it up to date, it would not have brought the present situation on itself. At the end of paragraph 58—this is the one sentence that I want to quote because it is a consummate understatement of the position in which the House finds itself—the Nolan report says:

> "The overall picture is not one of an institution whose Members have been quick to recognise or respond to public concern."

That surely is the root of all that we are talking about today.

I welcome the advocacy ban, because it is an attempt finally to get to grips with things that the House thought it had established almost half a century ago, in 1947. It turned out that it had not. The House failed to respond, which is why we are at this point today.

The ban as described in the motions is not effective enough without the amendment, because it leaves open all the ways in which, informally, hon. Members can still make representations on the part of interests for which they are paid. That cannot be right. That gap must be closed to make the ban effective, but it is nevertheless important.

There are two principles in all this. One is prohibition. The House should say clearly, without any room for doubt, that it is not acceptable for a Member of Parliament to do certain things such as taking money from outside organisations to promote causes in this place. That is what the advocacy ban will do.

The second principle is that of transparency. People must be able to see what is going on here, how we conduct ourselves and what we are doing. The right hon. Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen) caught the essential mood of the moment when he said, "We have to take into account not what we say about these things but what people outside are saying." If hon. Members cannot recognise the country's mood now, they do not really understand what people are trying to say to them. People want to see that we are able to clean up our act. If we seem unable to do so, they will reach conclusions that will take us into ever more desperate circumstances.

I do not believe that some of the distinctions that the Select Committee on Standards in Public Life has tried to make are ultimately tenable, as the distinction between multi-client and single-client organisations was untenable: it fell away once it had begun to be scratched. The distinction between Parliament-related activities and non-Parliament-related activities is not effective and it will begin to disintegrate when the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards begins to consider it, which is why I tabled an amendment that I suppose stands as "the income tax return" amendment. It is not that—it does not require that—but that is what it stands as.

People want to know the answer to certain questions. First, they want to know whether Members of Parliament have other jobs and, secondly, if so, what those other jobs are for. Thirdly, they want to know how much they get paid for those other jobs and, fourthly, how much time they devote to them. No doubt our constituents and the people of this country are awfully naive about these things, but those are precisely the questions that they are asking of us. They happen to think that they elect us to be Members of Parliament and to represent them, and that it is a job in itself. If that is not true, now is the moment for the House to tell the people of this country that it is not true.

I notice that, over the weekend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster stumbled into that matter when he said that being a Member of Parliament was a part-time occupation. I congratulate him on the direct way in which he approaches the issue, but, if that is the House's answer to those questions, let it answer openly and not in terms of arguments about spurious distinctions that do not stand up.

Having said that, I have been prevailed upon and persuaded that Conservative Members would not understand if I were to press what is called "the income tax return" amendment—amendment (n). They say that they are confused about all this and that their confusion will be increased if the amendment is allowed to stand. From the interventions that were made earlier, it was clear that Conservative Members were mightily confused about what was proposed. In the interests of enlightenment and the reduction of confusion, I am prepared to withdraw the amendment.

On any view, we are at a moment when the House and Parliament must take a view on whether they want to start the process of fundamental reform, of which this is only a part—indeed, it is only the beginning and, in some ways, the least significant part—or watch themselves decline ever further in public esteem.

The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath) said that people effectively had no right to know certain things. People do have a right to have confidence in their public institutions and, above all, in Parliament. At the moment, Parliament is getting dangerously close to eroding that confidence. What it decides today will decide whether it starts to restore it.

Sir Timothy Sainsbury (Hove): I hope that the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright) will understand if I do not respond in detail to what he said, much as I am tempted to do so, because we are limited by time. I rather agree with those who have said that it would have been better to have a longer debate on these issues. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen) said, that would have enabled us to put the issues into a wider context, and they would then have been more easily understood.

If we are to achieve our objective—which I hope we all share—of protecting the good name of Parliament, it might have been better to consider all the issues together. Instead, we are dealing with only one of three closely related issues—the advocacy or consultancy services provided by Members of Parliament in their capacity as Members of Parliament. I recognise, as have others who have spoken, that there are difficulties of definition. However, I believe that the Select Committee is broadly right in its proposals on advocacy and that the Nolan committee and the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) are broadly right in what they say on consultancies.

I have some reservations. Indeed, the hon. Lady's amendment would attract more sympathy from me—and, I suspect, others—if it dealt with several other issues. First, there is the issue of timing. Before we began our debate, several hon. Members tried to establish whether we could consider implementing full disclosure at the start of the next Parliament, rather than the next Session. That would be a fairer and simpler system, which would allow a new Parliament to start with a new set of rules. I am not saying that we should not implement other aspects of the Nolan recommendations immediately, but full disclosure, which is a radical change, should be introduced with the next Parliament. The Opposition would attract more sympathy if they accepted that.

It would be helpful if we could have a clear declaration from the Opposition Front Bench that there is no longer the intention to move to the "income tax return" suggestion of the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood, and repeated several times, from a sedentary position, by the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). They rather contradicted the hon. Member for Dewsbury.

The second issue that I believe the House should be debating today is the need unequivocally to declare support for the Nolan committee on another point. I refer to paragraph 19 of the first report, where the committee states clearly that it is desirable for the > "House of Commons to contain Members with a wide variety of continuing outside interests."

I sincerely believe that we will do this House and the country a grave disservice by any suggestion that all outside interests should be banned or fully disclosed.

The third issue that should be debated now has already been raised many times, but no more eloquently than by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins). I refer to the absurd and wide disparity between the pay of Members of Parliament, especially Ministers, and the salaries and remunerations that can be obtained outside the House. When I was a Minister at the Department of Trade and Industry, I found it bizarre to be spending much of my time in negotiation and discussion trying to help industrialists being paid five, 10 or even more times the salary of a Minister of State. Again, the House will do itself and the country a disservice if it does not agree now to deal with that issue before a general election and on an all-party basis.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing set out the reasons, facts and figures clearly. However, I want to contribute a few ideas. Perhaps it might be possible for pay to be improved in part by a much wider range of Members receiving additional payments. For example, perhaps all Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen, not just a small number, should receive additional payments. Perhaps additional payments should be made to the Chairmen of Select Committees, as they clearly carry a considerable burden.

I think that the whole matter has been a little rushed and we have not had sufficient time to debate it. We are not dealing with the whole range of issues. It might have been better if not only the proposals put forward by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, but those put forward by the Opposition had been taken away for more thought.

Mr. John Evans (St. Helens, North): I proudly declare that I am a skilled member of the Amalgamated Engineering Union, and have been since I was 16. That organisation pays the sum of £600 to my constituency Labour party as well as an agreed amount of my election expenses. Those are duly recorded in the candidates' return, and always have been.

I pay tribute to the Leader of the House and to my hon. Friend the Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) for the way in which, together, they led the Select Committee and worked hard to seek considerable areas of unanimity. However, I make the plea that never again should the House of Commons inflict such a duty on hon. Members and expect them to produce such a detailed report in such a short time.

I shall comment on two issues, one of which was raised by the right hon. Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins), who served on the Committee: the absurd suggestion that if the House tonight agrees to the recommendation on disclosure of earnings, it will result in far fewer people wishing to stand as Members of Parliament. Indeed, according to the Deputy Prime Minister, it would change the very nature of the House of Commons. There was a story in The Observer last week, which I understand emanated from the Paymaster General, that if the House votes that earnings should be revealed, about 100 Tory Members will leave the House at the next election.

If there is any truth in the claim that a whole phalanx of Tories will stand down and that there will be great difficulty in attracting new candidates to take their place, that is a shocking commentary on the modern Tory party. Essentially it means that the principal interest of so many Tories is not to be elected to the House to serve their constituents or their country, but to get their hands on fat juicy consultancies to enhance their standard of living. I do not believe that there is a single word of truth in such utter nonsense. However, if senior members of the Government make such statements, it is hardly surprising if people begin to wonder what on earth the Tory party is up to.

The second point that I want to raise relates to delegations to Ministers, something on which the Committee spent some time. I made it clear in Committee that I felt it to be one of the gravest areas of concern in the entire issue of sleaze in public life. After all, if a consultant to a company can arrange a meeting for the chairman or chief executive of that company with a Minister of the Crown, he certainly justifies his salary of £5,000, £10,000 or £20,000. If the allegations in The Sunday Times about the hon. Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Porter) were anywhere near the truth, the position is even worse than I suspected. It is not just a question of paid Members of Parliament fixing meetings for their own employers, but apparently individual Members of Parliament are anxious to meet clients who want to meet Ministers.

I can only assume that the statements of the hon. Member for Wirral, South in The Sunday Times are true, a newspaper with the background of The Sunday Times would not print them. The matter will be raised with the hon. Member for Wirral, South and he will have to deal with the occasion on which he was approached by business men claiming to be acting for the good of British industry. The hon. Gentleman said:

> "And I say,'oh yeah.' In fact, what they are doing is try to use some sort of political input to advance a commercial interest. Nothing the matter with that. I have no complaint about that at all. But if it's a commercial enterprise, I'm commercial."

That is the clearest indication—

Mr. Barry Porter (Wirral, South): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Evans: I wrote to the hon. Gentleman. I cannot give way because I have only 10 minutes. I will talk to the hon. Gentleman outside the Chamber.

Mr. Porter: I am much obliged to the hon. Gentleman for the courtesy of letting me know that he was going to raise this matter in the House. Perhaps he would be good enough the read the last paragraph of what The Sunday Times said. In case he does not have it, I shall remind him. It said that I am not in breach of any rules of this House or of any law.

Mr. Evans: The hon. Gentleman has put his finger on the kernel of the argument. If he is not in breach of any rules then, by God, the rules of the House need changing.

Of course, such conduct will be dealt with in future by the new parliamentary Committee and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards. The need for such an expensive post—and it is expensive, at £78,000 for a four-day week—has been created by the activities of a handful of hon. Members who were willing to take cash for questions or expensive freebies in the Ritz hotel in Paris and by the Prime Minister's knee-jerk reaction to the allegations of sleaze and his establishment of the Nolan committee.

The Nolan committee established that there is widespread public concern about declining standards in public life. According to an opinion poll on page 108 of the Nolan report, 64 per cent. agreed with the statement:

> "Most MPs make a lot of money by using public office improperly".

Nolan also revealed that 168 hon. Members had 356 consultancies between them. The fact that most of those 168 are Tories revealed the size of the problem that the Prime Minister inherited when Nolan called for disclosure of the earnings of Members of Parliament.

The Prime Minister dealt with the problem in typical fashion by setting up another committee, the Select Committee on Standards in Public Life, and charging it with producing a report before the summer recess. It did; and recommended—and the House accepted—the appointment of a new commissioner, a new Select Committee on Standards and Privileges and a new code of conduct for Members. However, the Committee was divided on the issue of disclosure of earnings. Labour Members backed Nolan and, to no one's surprise, Tory Members on the Committee rejected disclosure.

The Chairman of the Select Committee on Standards in Public Life, the Leader of the House, dared not, at that stage, reject Nolan out of hand. After all, the Prime Minister had on 20 May, just two days after the acrimonious debate on 18 May, stated:

> "I do not just accept the broad thrust of Nolan. I agree with it."

The Leader of the House produced a formula for the debate on the Select Committee's first report on 19 July which stated that the Committee needed more time to study all the aspects of disclosure of earnings. The Leader of the House—he will not mind me saying this—was conducting a charade. The Tory members of the Committee had no intention whatsoever of supporting disclosure. In the Select Committee, we were not deadlocked over the issue, as the press frequently reported. The only discussion we had on the subject took about five minutes, when we had a vote on the principles of the five options relating to Lord Nolan's demand for disclosure of earnings.

The options started with full disclosure, which the Opposition parties voted for, and then moved, by stages, further away from disclosure until there was no absolutely no disclosure—and the Tories voted for that. The Committee then agreed, without further ado or debate, that both sides would write their own versions of what they wanted in the final report and that we would vote on them in the Committee's formal and final session. That is what we did.

The Tories have made a silly mistake. A third option was available to them which called for disclosure of earnings to the new commissioner only. If they had accepted that, many Conservative Members who are concerned about the matter would have been happy. They could have lived with that and voted for it. Of course, the Tories rejected it.

If the Tories win the vote tonight, they will again leave the British people with the impression that they have something dreadful to hide. That will not go away and, as the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath) said, it will certainly be an issue at the next general election.

Sir John Stanley (Tonbridge and Malling): The two issues that have run through the debate are the declaration of earnings and the implications of the ban on advocacy, which, I believe, are much more profound than some hon. Members have suggested.

I will state my position on the declaration of earnings. I believe that the Nolan recommendations were poorly drafted. They certainly failed to clarify what was meant by "contract" and by "agreement". As to the basic principle, I do not have any objection on grounds of principle to the proposition that, where hon. Members supplement their income by providing parliamentary services to outside bodies, both the source and quanta of the sums earned should be declarable. I shall support that Nolan recommendation tonight.

The main issue before the House tonight is the implications of the declaration of the ban on what has been known as paid advocacy. The hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) suggested in her opening remarks that the 1947 declaration against paid advocacy has had a material effect on the conduct of the House. In the more than 20 years that I have been in the House, paid advocacy has been alive and well throughout the House.

There have been any number of debates featuring hon. Members who have declared an interest in an outside organisation, whether a trade association or trade union, and who have clearly advocated the interest of that organisation in the course of the debate. I do not know that the 1947 declaration has had much impact, if that was indeed for what it was intended.

The so-called addendum that the Government are moving is designed to carry the matter further. That has some very real implications for what I believe to be the most fundamental right of hon. Members—the right to speak in our proceedings in a wholly uninhibited way and to take part in our proceedings on the same basis as would any other hon. Member.

I draw the House's attention to the fact that the motion before us, over which the hon. Member for Dewsbury skipped extraordinarily lightly, proposes to a huge extent the banning of the initiation of debates by those who receive not only payments but benefits in kind, direct or indirect. I should have thought that that would have been a matter of some interest to the Labour party. The Nolan committee reported that there are 221 hon. Members with sponsorships, financial consultancies or other sorts of financial interests from trade unions. I wonder why the Labour party is not more concerned about the implications of that ban on initiating debate.

Mr. Jeff Rooker (Birmingham, Perry Barr): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Sir John Stanley: I have only a short time.

My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House said in opening the debate that, although such hon. Members may not initiate debates, they could take part in them. However, my right hon. Friend used a form of words whereby he said that, although they could take part, they would have to choose their words with care. He used the same expression in his interview on the "Today" programme last Friday. No Member of this House should be in the business of some form of self-imposed censorship—choosing his or her words carefully. I do not intend to choose my words carefully within the bounds of parliamentary expression. I am obliged to say what I think and be absolutely straight about what I believe is on the agenda.

Moreover, there is not merely to be an inhibition of power to be able to initiate debates. Paragraph 23 of the Select Committee's report postulated that hon. Members might, in some circumstances, be debarred from taking part in debates at all. That is a most profound inhibition and potential intrusion on hon. Members' right of free speech. The relevant sentence says:

> "On the other hand, it is not practicable to lay down in advance, with the precision that a Resolution of the House would require, all the circumstances in which it would or would not be proper for a Member with a paid interest to take part in a debate."

It will have profound consequences if we contemplate circumstances in which a large number of hon. Members were prevented from initiating debates, obliged to choose their words with care if they were to take part in debates and, in some circumstances, were unable to participate in debates at all.

Those are profoundly important matters, and it is not sufficient for the Select Committee simply to say that they should be left to the new commissioner, who is simply an official of the House, the new Select Committee or the new code of conduct. I do not criticise the Committee, which has done a Herculean job. It has had to work under a totally artificial time constraint, which seemed to be dictated by the political requirements of the Opposition.

I see no need to rush these proposals, because the implications of a ban on advocacy for the most fundamental right of all Members of Parliament—the right of freedom of speech—must be thought through infinitely more carefully. We must know precisely who will be banned from what, which is not clear at present. The motions before us tonight should be withdrawn and the matter referred back to the Select Committee. It is for the whole House, and the House alone, to decide who will be banned from what in participating in our proceedings.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): My interests are recorded in the Register of Members' Interests in the usual way.

It gives me no pleasure to say that we heard a mischievous and disagreeable speech from the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath). It was totally distorted, as is his article in the Evening Standard today. He gave the impression in his speech that all is well in the House, there is no need for change and we are an incorruptible Assembly. I would remind him—he is no longer in his place—how this matter began and why the Nolan committee was set up in the first place: it was the cash-for-questions scandal.

When we first debated the matter, I said that The Sunday Times should be not criticised for what it did. Rather, it should be congratulated because, had it not carried out such an investigation, those matters would not have come to light and the reforms and recommendations before the House today would never have been agreed to. Although I am willing to, and often do, criticise that newspaper, I believe that it was in the overall interests of the House and of parliamentary democracy to bring those matters to light. That is why I believe that what it did was justified.

It is important to recognise—the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup did not recognise this—that the main controversy over financial disclosure arises not from some sinister Labour party plot but, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) said, from the Nolan committee's recommendation. The Prime Minister was right to set up the Nolan committee and had our full support in so doing, so it is difficult to understand why, having said when it reported that he would support it, he has now opted out.

He has caved in to Conservative Back Benchers—some of whom are here tonight; others are not—who were totally opposed to setting up the Nolan committee in the first place. They made it perfectly clear that they did not like the idea and saw no reason why the committee should be set up. Their agitation alerted the Tory Whips to a position that has led the Prime Minister not to support a crucial part of the Nolan recommendations.

On privacy, I believe that some aspects of our personal lives are indeed our business. There was no justification for the tabloids recently exposing some of the so-called "scandals", be they about Conservative or Opposition Members, because the public interest was in no way involved. Certain aspects of hon. Members' private lives have no relevance to their parliamentary duties. However, hon. Members cannot take the view, which some Tory Members wish to take, that financial matters are purely our business and that there is no reason why the public should know what we earn from outside sources. I do not accept that view for a moment. In other countries, such as the United States, far more information must be given than what the Nolan committee recommends.

I doubt whether many hon. Members would dispute that there is public support on the crucial question whether matters relating to parliamentary activity—those financial details—should be given. There is overwhelming support in the country, far outside the Labour party, for the recommendation. Conservative Members who are adamant in their opposition to it form a small minority in the country. Even the newspapers that would normally support the Conservative cause have not supported the Tory Members who are opposed to Nolan on this issue. I cannot but emphasise, and I doubt whether any Conservative Members could disagree, that among the public at large there is overwhelming support for giving information on activities that arise from our parliamentary duties, as recommended by Nolan, in bands. What is wrong with that? Why are Conservative Members so reluctant to give that information?

If we lose tonight's vote, it will be a defeat not just for this crucial amendment but for the House. It will demonstrate that we are unable to reform ourselves, which will reflect on us all, including those hon. Members who vote for the amendment. There will continue to be a general feeling in the country that we are all in this for ourselves and are all on the make. That would be a most unjust attitude to take, but it is undoubtedly being taken.

As some of my hon. Friends have said, if the amendment about financial disclosure is not carried tonight, the issue will not go away. It will come back in this Parliament and even more so in the next. It will be a continued sore within the parliamentary and democratic system. Why do not we demonstrate our courage tonight and admit that parliamentary reform of this nature is necessary? It is what the country wants and I believe that the country is right to want it. If it is justified, why should we defy public opinion in this way? I trust that, despite all the difficulties of getting a majority for the amendment tonight, it will be carried.

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): Even though I have no interests covered by the resolutions, I decided to become actively involved in the matter because I am fed up with being called a sleazebag. Every time that all Tory Members of Parliament are attacked, I am included, and quite frankly, it hurts. I have absolutely no doubt, however, that the overwhelming majority of Members of Parliament, whatever their political party, are decent, honourable and hard-working people. However, the public no longer think that that is true. They have reached that conclusion because of the well-publicised activities of a few hon. Members. Tonight, we have the chance to put that behind us. If it hurts us to do that, I am afraid that we have only ourselves to blame.

Because time is short, I want to confine my remarks to one issue—the disclosure of relevant outside earnings. I have come to the conclusion that we simply must disclose them. I admit that, in an ideal world, I would disagree with that and would not want to disclose such information; but we do not live in an ideal world, and we are not in an ideal House. In my judgment, the disclosure of relevant earnings has become the price that we must pay. If we do not pay that price tonight, the issue will come back, and next time the price will be higher. If we do not pay it then, the issue will come back yet again and the price will have gone up once more.

I understand the arguments of colleagues and hon. Friends—that privacy is important, and that the slippery slope beckons. My constituents and the contents of my mailbag tell me that the public do not buy those arguments. They do not believe that the Select Committee has gone far enough.

The recommendations of the Select Committee go further in respect of advocacy, and my constituents and everyone else I have spoken to are absolutely delighted about that. The Select Committee stopped short, however, of the Nolan recommendations on the giving of advice. The public will not understand that, and will not be reassured by that.

Recent history has left us in the House with no choice other than not only to be above reproach but to have 150 per cent. proof that we are so. That is why we have to pay the price that some of us do not like.

I should like to mention two matters of detail covered by my amendments. The first relates to the question of disclosing bands, to which my amendments (d) and (e) refer. I am against disclosing income in bands, for two simple reasons. First, the Select Committee report requires us to draw up contracts in detail, and to submit them. If we go for bands, we shall have to Tippex out the amount in the agreement and then write another letter. I do not particularly want to do that.

Secondly, I hope that it has occurred to hon. Members that, if we agree to bands and someone chooses to pay us £100 for giving advice, we will then be put in the band ranging from £1 to £1,000. You can bet your bottom dollar, Madam Speaker, that The Sun and the Daily Mirror will report that we have received £1,000, not £100, because we are in that band. I caution against bands, but I will not go to the stake for that principle.

My amendments (j) and (o) would make financial information declarable after the next general election. I must make it clear, however, that my amendments are not designed to put off the decision of principle until after the election. We shall take that decision of principle tonight, and we will then be left to implement everything barring making a declaration about amounts of money. I believe that that is the correct approach, for two reasons.

First, some hon. Members find a salary of £33,000 more than enough, and I respect them for that. Others come to the House, however, with certain commitments, and having made salaries well in excess of a hon. Member's salary. I respect them for that, too. There is absolutely nothing dishonourable about being in that position. If we expect those people to change the circumstances in which they find themselves, I judge that five months is not time enough for them to do so. I believe that they should be given until the date of the next general election.

Secondly, the declaration of that financial information should be put off until after the next election because of the antics of some on the Opposition Benches. I respect and agree with the official line of the Labour party that such available information is for the good of the House. Some Opposition Members, however, are already grubbing around for votes. Some of them are crowing merrily and saying, "Just you wait until the next general election, when we have the resolution. We will use it for party political purposes." I deplore such an attitude. By removing the temptation to acquire any such financial information before the next general election, my amendments enable the Labour party to prove that its members are not grubbing around for votes.

[Mr. David Wilshire]

Tonight, the House faces a clear, straightforward and simple challenge: do we have what it takes to restore public confidence in the House of Commons? Are we prepared to swallow hard and pay a high price to redeem our reputation? Tonight, we do not have to decide whether we support the Government or the Labour party. Over the past few days, journalists have kept on asking me whether I intend to vote with the Labour party. One even asked me whether I planned to do the same as the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth). The answer to that was simple—hell will freeze over before I join the Labour party.

Tonight, I am not voting for the Labour party; tonight no one will be voting for Labour—people will be voting for Parliament. I am not voting against my friends and my Government, but I am voting against sleaze, and I urge the House to do the same.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): My constituency receives financial support from Unison.

I congratulate the Select Committee on producing an excellent report after a lot of work. In particular, I further congratulate it on going down the route that I think I might modestly say that I set out during the course of my contribution to the July debate, when I referred to an extension of the 1947 resolution.

In the seconds available to me, I should like to pose the House a series of questions. What does the House believe that the public believe having read the article in yesterday's edition of The Sunday Times? Does the House believe that the public would expect us to deal with the issue of hon. Members being paid to seek introductions to Ministers for their clients? Does the House believe that that is what the public want, or does it believe that we should leave the matter alone and not meddle?

As the resolutions stand on advocacy, we are doing nothing to deal with the problem that was highlighted in The Sunday Times. The practices of those who want to sell access to Ministers will remain under the resolutions before us tonight. I believe that that is wrong.

The two amendments in my name deal with access to Ministers. The first deals with meetings—their initiation and arrangement, and participation in them. The second deals with correspondence with Ministers. In so far as both would prohibit such actions by Members of Parliament, I believe that they should be carried by the House this evening.

Mr. Salmond: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. There is only one amendment on the Order Paper, amendment No. 2(p), which deals with one of the key issues in Nolan—the banning of multi-client lobbying public relations organisations having contracts with Members of Parliament. As you have not called anyone to speak for that amendment, Madam Speaker, how on earth can the debate be considered to be balanced? Is it the fault of the Leader of the House, who called a three-hour debate and so restricted the right of hon. Members to propose those amendments?

Madam Speaker: I think that a number of hon. Members will find themselves very disappointed and frustrated today because of this short debate. They have not been called or even been able to expand on the views that they already hold.

Mr. Jeff Rooker (Birmingham, Perry Barr): As a result of the debate, right hon. and hon. Members have become aware of the importance of the resolution of the House of 15 July 1947 relating to privileges—a resolution which probably no one has ever read and which probably was never drawn specifically to the attention of a Member on being elected to the House, because we have no induction procedure of any description.

I want to comment briefly on what the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) said. Although he supported disclosure, he asserted that motion No. 1, which is in the name of the Leader of the House—he appeared to believe that it was in the name of my hon. Friend the Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor)—on amending and adding to the 1947 resolution, comes to the House with a unanimous recommendation from the Select Committee. The motion is in the name of the Leader of the House, whom we sincerely hope will be supported.

If right hon. and hon. Members want to sell for money their right to initiate debate on any issue, that is up to them; they do it knowingly and accordingly must be accountable to their constituents. There is a marked reluctance to reform. That has led directly to a failure to keep pace with the attitudes, outside the House, of a more mature and alert electorate.

Lord Nolan and his Committee did not invent that problem. Nor did the media invent that problem. During the debate, mention was made of yesterday's Sunday Times. One thing must be made abundantly clear about that. If, a year ago, as I understand it from The Sunday Times, it believed that a Member of Parliament, the hon. Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Porter), had done something wrong, it was the duty of The Sunday Times to draw the matter to the attention of the Register of Members' Interests, not sit on it and use it in the scurrilous way that it did yesterday.

One or two hon. Members have asked why we should be treated differently from other people. The answer, I submit, is simple. We really are different. We are a unique group of 651 ordinary people, elected to carry out an extraordinary task on behalf of our fellow citizens. As a group—as an institution—we have lost a good deal of trust from, and are held in very low esteem by, our fellow citizens. We must win back that trust as quickly as possible, for the House, our institution of Parliament, is on trial.

I do not speak from the Opposition Dispatch Box for the Labour party, any more than the Leader of the House spoke earlier for the Conservative party. If we make the vote a party battle, we demean the House and ourselves. [Interruption.] Hon. Members may chaff at that, but that is the reality. I speak for those who accept the need for reform radical enough to show that we understand the public anxiety. That is what it is about.

The reform must involve transparency, to show that we are not on the make. Secrecy about earnings that are directly related to elected membership of the House sends a message that we are on the make. As the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) said, that taints us with sleaze. I genuinely believe that transparency will sterilise the sleaze argument once and for all.

The right hon. Member for Hove (Sir T. Sainsbury) made an interesting and constructive speech. He mentioned a couple of issues that deserve a response from the Opposition, and certainly from the person on the Opposition Dispatch Box who is winding up the debate. We chose the amendments to operate from the new Session on 15 November, simply to stay as near in line with Lord Nolan's Committee's proposals as possible. We deliberately sought not to deviate from the Nolan Committee report, although I accept that the right hon. Gentleman's argument has validity.

I also want to say to the right hon. Member for Hove, on behalf of my hon. Friend the Member for Dewsbury and myself—for I do not speak for the Labour party on that subject but I know that I speak for a considerable number of Opposition Members—that we have no long-term aim to abolish outside interests or to seek disclosure of an hon. Member's total income. We have no long-term agenda in that respect.

I say to those hon. Members who might feel that the issue has already become too partisan, that I regret that, as do my hon. Friends. I know what it is like to sit on the Government Benches, wondering whether to support my tribe, and being effectively forced to do so by the antics of the tribe on the Opposition Benches. That does not, however, alter the fundamental issue, which is winning back the trust of the public through transparency.

I ask all hon. Members tonight to reach outside those tribal boundaries—we are freely elected to do so occasionally, and tonight is one of those occasions—in the interests of winning back the trust of those who sent us to this place.

7.5 pm

Mr. Newton: Those right hon. and hon. Members who have been present throughout the debate—which has done, as did our previous debate, considerable credit to the House in spite of occasional heated moments—will realise that, on many of the issues that were mentioned, there is little that I can add to what I said in my speech opening the debate. I certainly do not wish to take up the time available to other Members, making a long, repetitive speech. However, obviously I should comment further on some issues.

First, I shall say a word about what my right hon. Friends the Members for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath) and for Bridgwater (Mr. King) and several others said during the debate, or said sotto voce by coming and whispering in my ear as I sat on the Treasury Bench, about the rush with which everything has been done and the disadvantages that they believe have resulted. No one who has served on the Committee or taken part in the process would wish to dismiss that. Obviously, everything has been done in a great hurry, but that, I say to my colleagues on both sides of the House, is the position in which, as a House, we were placed by the situation that had developed.

I have no doubt that, had we sought another six, eight or nine months of delay, in which we would have been attacked collectively, not from one side or the other, for failing to respond to public anxiety, and had we let those arguments range and rage in the way that they have done, it would have gravely further damaged the reputation of all of us and of the House. Therefore, it was right to proceed fast. Although I did not wish to spend virtually every waking hour in a Select Committee, trying to do the job that we have done, I believe that it was worth it, and that we have made real progress to the advantage of the House.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins) and several others raised the question that my right hon, Friend put as if there were created some hiatus or gap between our comments in the paragraphs of the report referring to speeches, and the terms of the resolution. I would not dismiss what has been said, but it is inconceivable that the commissioner and the new committee would totally disregard the clear basis on which the House has been invited to take a decision tonight. Were that to happen—I do not believe that it could—I would certainly want to give careful and urgent consideration to the position that that would create, for example, for my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) and others. I will say—I mention something that my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Mr. Budgen) said—that that would be a much stronger argument were I seeking to persuade the House tonight to pass an Act of Parliament or a set of regulations in which we really would be subject to a great deal of legalistic textual interpretation. However, I do not believe that that fear is well founded.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup mentioned unfounded complaints being widely circulated. Paragraph 26 of our first report states:

> "Where, however, the Commissioner decided that no prima facie case had been established, he would merely report the facts to the committee. The Committee would inform both the complainant and the Member concerned, but no details of the complaint would be published."

That passage is underlined in red, so it must have been mentioned earlier. In view of what my right hon. Friend said, it is important for me to put that on the record again.

The other worry that has echoed through today's debate—I understand why, as we on the Committee also wrestled with it—was most eloquently expressed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen). He doubted whether the line could be held in the position where the Committee had proposed it. He may be right on that. One of the problems that we all have to wrestle with is that the world has moved on—that is true even since I entered the House in 1974, and since the creation of the Register of Members' Interests. New problems have arisen, public perceptions have changed, the view about what should be disclosed or registered has changed. Clearly, there may have to be further changes in future. I believe that we could respectably hold the line on the Select Committee's proposal and my resolutions.

The hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) invited me to confirm what I had said about her amendment (b) not taking us straight to the publication of tax returns. I readily confirm that that is my reading of her amendment. I want to reiterate that I am concerned that her proposal will make it much more difficult to hold the line proposed by the Select Committee and will push us steadily further down a path that almost no one in the House wishes to tread and very few think right or desirable.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I confirm that I do not wish to go down that path, and neither do the amendment's co-proposers. Will the Leader of the House confirm that the amendment that I tabled on disclosure relates only to the agreements that he is recommending, which should be deposited with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards, and is therefore limited?

Mr. Newton: That is certainly my understanding. I have never sought to mislead anyone about anything in the affair. I hope that the hon. Lady and all hon. Members will bear in mind when they decide how to vote that I have no doubt that, even though the hon. Lady says that she does not want to move in that direction, her amendment (b) will create a far greater risk of an inescapable slide towards the end that she does not want. I therefore cannot recommend her amendment to the House, and I hope that it will approve my motions.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved,

That the Resolution of the House of 15th July 1947 relating to Privileges shall be amended by adding at the end the words—

'and that in particular no Member of the House shall, in consideration of any remuneration, fee, payment, reward or benefit in kind, direct or indirect, which the Member or any member of his or her family has received is receiving or expects to receive—

(i) advocate or initiate any cause or matter on behalf of any outside body or individual, or

(ii) urge any other Member of either House of Parliament, including Ministers, to do so, by means of any speech, Question, Motion, introduction of a Bill or amendment to a Motion or Bill'.

Madam Speaker: I remind the House that votes should always follow voices when a Division is called. Will the Leader of the House now move formally motion No. 2?

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That—

(1) with effect from Wednesday 15th November 1995, any Member proposing to enter into an agreement which involves the provision of services in his capacity as a Member of Parliament shall conclude such an agreement only if it conforms to the Resolution of the House of 6th November 1995 relating to Conduct of Members; and that a copy of any such agreement, excluding the amount of any fee or benefit payable, shall be deposited with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards at the same time as it is registered in the Register of Members' Interests;

(2) any Member who has an existing agreement involving the provision of services in his capacity as a Member of Parliament which conforms to the Resolution of the House of 6th November 1995 relating to Conduct of Members, but which is not in written form, shall take steps to put the agreement into written form; and that no later than 31st March 1996 a copy of any such agreement, excluding the amount of any fee or benefit payable, shall be deposited with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards and registered in the Register of Members' Interests; and

(3) any Member who has an existing agreement which does not conform to the Resolution of the House on 6th November 1995 relating to Conduct of Members shall, by 31st March 1996, either redraw the agreement so that it conforms to the said Resolution or withdraw from the agreement; and that a copy of any such redrawn agreement, excluding the amount of any fee or benefit payable, shall be deposited with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards and registered in the Register of Members' Interests by that date.—[Mr. Newton.]

Amendment proposed: (b) in line 6, leave out from 'a' to 'shall' in line 7 and insert

'full copy of any such agreement including the fees or benefits payable in bands of: up to £1,000, £1,000-£5,000, £5,000-£10,000, and thereafter in bands of £5,000.'.—[Mrs. Ann Taylor.]

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

The House divided: Ayes 322, Noes 271.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Madam Speaker: Amendments (c) and (d) fall. May we be clear that amendment (e), in the name of the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire), is withdrawn in favour of amendment (f).

Mr. Wilshire: I withdraw the amendment.

Amendment proposed: (f), in line 9, at end insert

'and made available for inspection by the public'.—[Mrs. Ann Taylor.]

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

The House proceeded to a Division.

Mr. Devlin (seated and covered): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Amendment (f) appears to repeat the wording of the last line of the amendment on which the House has just voted. In my view, therefore, amendment (f) is necessary.

Madam Speaker: The House is dividing on amendment (f).

The House having divided: Ayes 325, Noes 202.

Question accordingly negatived.

Main Question, as amended, agreed to.

Resolved,

That—

(1) with effect from Wednesday 15th November 1995, any Member proposing to enter into an agreement which involves the provision of services in his capacity as a Member of Parliament shall conclude such an agreement only if it conforms to the Resolution of the House of 6th November 1995 relating to Conduct of Members; and that a full copy of any such agreement including the fees or benefits payable in bands of: up to £1,000, £1,000-5,000,

£5,000-£10,000, and thereafter in bands of £5,000, shall be deposited with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards at the same time as it is registered in the Register of Members' Interests and made available for inspection by the public;

(2) any Member who has an existing agreement involving the provision of services in his capacity as a Member of Parliament which conforms to the Resolution of the House of 6th November 1995 relating to Conduct of Members, but which is not in written form, shall take steps to put the agreement into written form; and that no later than 31st March 1996 a full copy of any such agreement including the fees or benefits payable in bands of: up to £1,000, £1,000-£5,000, £5,000-£10,000, and thereafter in bands of £5,000 shall be deposited with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards and registered in the Register of Members' Interests and made available for inspection by the public; and

(3) any Member who has an existing agreement which does not conform to the Resolution of the House on 6th November 1995 relating to Conduct of Members shall, by 31st March 1996, either redraw the agreement so that it conforms to the said Resolution or withdraw from the agreement; and that a full copy of any such agreement including the fees or benefits payable in bands of: up to £1,000, £1,000-£5,000, £5,000-£10,000 and thereafter in bands of £5,000 shall be deposited with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards and registered in the Register of Members' Interests by that date and made available for inspection by the public.

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That this House agrees with the recommendations in the Second Report from the Select Committee on Standards in Public Life (House of Commons Paper No. 816) relating to—

(1) the recording of deputations in the Register of Members' Interests (paragraph 31); and

(2) the cessation of paid advocacy (paragraph 54).—[Mr. Newton.]

Amendment proposed: (a), in line 4, leave out paragraph (1).—[Mrs. Ann Taylor.]

Question accordingly agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House agrees with the recommendations in the Second Report from the Select Committee on Standards in Public Life (House of Commons Paper No. 816) relating to the cessation of paid advocacy (paragraph 54); and further that a Member with a paid interest should not initiate or participate in, including attendance, a delegation where the problem affects only the body from which he has a paid interest.

Ordered,

That—

(1) Standing Order No. 128 (Select Committee on Members' Interests) be repealed;

(2) Standing Order No. 121 (Committee of Privileges) be repealed when the Committee of Privileges shall have reported to the House in respect of the matters of the complaints referred to it; and

(3) Standing Orders (Committee on Standards and Privileges) and (Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards) below be made.

Standing Order (Committee on Standards and Privileges)

(1) There shall be a select committee, called the Committee on Standards and Privileges—

(a) to consider specific matters relating to privileges referred to it by the House;

(b) to oversee the work of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards; to examine the arrangements proposed by the Commissioner for the compilation, maintenance and accessibility of the Register of Members' Interests and any other registers of interest established by the House; to review from time to time the form and content of those registers; and to consider any specific complaints made in relation to the registering or declaring of interests referred to it by the Commissioner; and

(c) to consider any matter relating to the conduct of Members, including specific complaints in relation to alleged breaches in any code of conduct to which the House has agreed and which have been drawn to the committee's attention by the Commissioner; and to recommend any modifications to such code of conduct as may from time to time appear to be necessary.

(2) The committee shall consist of eleven Members, of whom five shall be a quorum.

(3) Unless the House otherwise orders, each Member nominated to the committee shall continue to be a member of it for the remainder of the Parliament.

(4) The committee shall have power to appoint sub-committees consisting of no more than seven Members, of whom three shall be a quorum, and to refer to such sub-committees any of the matters referred to the committee; and shall appoint one such sub-committee to receive reports from the Commissioner relating to investigations into specific complaints.

(5) The committee and any sub-committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and records, to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the House, to adjourn from place to place, to report from time to time and to appoint specialist advisers either to supply information which is not readily available or to elucidate matters of complexity within the committee's order of reference.

(6) The committee shall have power to order the attendance of any Member before the committee or any sub-committee and to require that specific documents or records in the possession of a Member relating to its inquiries, or to the inquiries of a sub-committee or of the Commissioner, be laid before the committee or any sub-committee.

(7) The committee shall have power to refuse to allow proceedings to which strangers are admitted to be broadcast.

(8) Mr. Attorney General, the Lord Advocate, Mr. Solicitor General and Mr. Solicitor General for Scotland, being Members of the House, may attend the committee or any sub-committee, may take part in deliberations, may receive committee or sub-committee papers and may give such other assistance to the committee or sub-committee as may be appropriate, but shall not vote or make any motion or move any amendment.

Standing Order (Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards)

(1) There shall be an officer of this House, called the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards, who shall be appointed by the House.

(2) The principal duties of the Commissioner shall be—

(a) to maintain the Register of Members' Interests and any other registers of interest established by the House, and to make such arrangements for the compilation, maintenance and accessibility of those registers as are approved by the Committee on Standards and Privileges or an appropriate sub-committee thereof;

(b) to provide advice confidentially to Members and other persons or bodies subject to registration on matters relating to the registration of individual interests;

(c) to advise the Committee on Standards and Privileges, its sub-committees and individual Members on the interpretation of any code of conduct to which the House has agreed and on questions of propriety;

(d) to monitor the operation of such code and registers, and to make recommendations thereon to the Committee on Standards and Privileges or an appropriate sub-committee thereof; and

(e) to receive and, if he thinks fit, investigate specific complaints from Members and from members of the public in respect of—

(i) the registration or declaration of interests, or

(ii) other aspects of the propriety of a Member's conduct, and to report to the Committee on Standards and Privileges or to an appropriate sub-committee thereof.

(3) The Commissioner may be dismissed by resolution of the House.—[Mr. Newton.]

Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards

8.41 pm

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): I beg to move,

That Sir Gordon Stanley Downey, KCB, be appointed Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards on the terms of the Report of the House of Commons Commission (HC 789), dated 30th October.

It might be helpful if I say a few words about the role of the House of Commons Commission. It was given the task of coming up with a name acceptable to the House, believes that it has done so and invites the House to accept the proposal.

8.42 pm

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): I want to raise a number of points. As a Government Back Bencher, I find it offensive that the House, through the House of Commons Commission, should seek to appoint Sir Gordon Downey as the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards at a salary of £72,500. I admit that he is a distinguished person, but he is retired and in receipt of a very substantial index-linked pension, yet he will be assessing the position, salary and circumstances of Back Benchers who, for a full week's work, will be in receipt of less than half of his salary. Setting up this gentleman in the position that he will hold is offensive to Parliament. I believe that it is the first time in history that this High Court of Parliament will, to all intents and purposes, have an outsider deciding its behaviour—in short, the behaviour of Members of this House. I do not believe that we should agree to that.

Tonight, the House of Commons has committed suicide. The independence of the House is now very much in doubt, as is its authority and influence. To all intents and purposes, we have set up a House of Commons that will be ruled by the civil service, because the overwhelming majority of hon. Members will have neither the experience nor the authority to exercise an influence that is good for Government, good for Parliament and good for this country.

I say to the House that it will rue this day and rue the decisions that have been taken. It is a pity that the Press Gallery is almost deserted, because it is only a matter of time before Sir Gordon, or a successor, will be looking at the interests of those privileged individuals, the Lobby journalists, who exercise immense influence—dare I say it, much more influence than a Back Bencher? The abilities of Back Benchers will be immensely restricted by the decisions that the House has taken.

I must ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) what expertise Sir Gordon has—

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Bugger all.

Mr. Winterton: The hon. Gentleman is, from time to time, pertinent and accurate in his remarks. I must confess that, while I disagree with the language, I admire his plain speaking.

We have an outsider to this High Court of Parliament. Surely this High Court of Parliament can rule itself, judge itself and, when necessary, penalise those who abuse their position. But to have an outsider, indeed, a retired outsider, on such a substantial salary—more than twice as much as a Back Bencher and more than a Cabinet Minister—presiding over the standards of those in public life and responsible for standards in this place is offensive.

I know the problems that you face, Madam Speaker, and I well understand why the amendments in my name and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) have not been selected, but perhaps there are times when we should look to other democracies to see how they would operate in such circumstances. Of course, in the United States of America no public servant is in receipt of a salary higher than that of a member of Congress. That rule should obtain in this House. If it did, Members of Parliament would be very much better paid—which they all deserve for the hours that they put in and for the increased work that Parliament decides they should undertake—and, dare I say it to hon. Members on both sides of the House, would better meet the expectations of their electorates.

I rise to speak briefly on this part of our debate in sadness and with regret. I put the question again to the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed—

Mr. Skinner: He is a Liberal.

Mr. Winterton: Indeed, he is a Liberal Democrat—educated in my constituency at King's school, but that is only an aside.

What qualifications does Sir Gordon Downey have to undertake the tasks that the House is allocating to him? What justification is there for giving him, as a retired civil servant in receipt of a substantial index-linked pension, a salary of more than twice as much as the people whose standards of behaviour he will be assessing? That is an insult to democracy and a disaster for Parliament. I am very unhappy and sad at what the House has done today to the authority of Parliament.

When I came to the House nearly 25 years ago—

Mr. Nicholas Budgen (Wolverhampton, South-West): A quarter of a century.

Mr. Winterton: My hon. Friend says a quarter of a century ago. It is not yet that long. I hope that I may be honoured to serve my constituents for a quarter of century and beyond. I hope that they will accept that at no time in the years that I have been the Member for Macclesfield have I done anything dishonourable about which I would not be prepared to talk to them openly.

How can the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, who chairs the House of Commons Commission—I apologise Madam Speaker: you chair it and he speaks on its behalf—justify to the House what the Commission is doing in appointing this individual to deal with what I agree are very important matters? I believe that standards of behaviour are critical. Sadly, I do not believe that what the House has done tonight will improve the image of Parliament in the eyes of electorate. That can be done only by the individual examples of every right hon. or hon. Member.

I seek to set an example and I know that many other hon. Members do so too. The fact that there are a few rotten apples in the basket does not mean that the whole House should be summed up in that way. I believe that Parliament has served the United Kingdom well. I fear that it will not be able to do so in future and I hope that the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed will justify what we are supposed to agree to tonight.

8.52 pm

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): I understand that some years ago the Government Whips Office offered a jeroboam of champagne to anybody who spotted the late Bonner Pink and Sir Frederic Bennett in the Division Lobby at the same time. I do not know whether that champagne was ever called upon but it could also have been offered for the first occasion on which my name and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) appeared together on an amendment to a motion.

My hon. Friend and I proposed amendments because we both have a keen sense of the ridiculous. As someone who has wanted to be a Member of the House for as long as I can remember, and as someone with a sense of history and of the traditions of the House, I am worried that, despite all the partisan glee on the Opposition Benches—which will continue as the night goes on—we are in severe collective danger as a House of Commons of making ourselves ridiculous.

It is worth pausing and reflecting for one moment on how we got into this position at all. It was because two stupid, silly greedy Members did something that most of us would never do. The story that both sides of the House should have run with was that, of the 20 hon. Members approached, only two behaved in that way—80 per cent. did not. That is the message that we should have communicated to the people outside. We signally failed to do so.

After that, it was downhill all the way, with a committee presided over by a judge who made it clear at the outset that he had already reached his conclusions and was hoping to find some evidence to back them up. Those of us who have made a living in the courts often suspected that that is what the judiciary did but we had not expected to have it confirmed in such a spectacular way.

From inauspicious and tiny beginnings, we have reached the position that we are in today. Whatever else we say, we should not disguise from ourselves the anomalous and paradoxical situation that we have created. How on earth can we ask Sir Gordon Downey to police a distinction between our advisory work and the other things that we do?

For example, I heard the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) on a radio programme yesterday. He was being employed not for the lightness of his wit or the elegance of his table manners but because he was a Member of Parliament.

I have a high regard for my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) but having briefly, in a misguided moment, dipped into "A Parliamentary Affair", I should think that people would read that book not because they think that she is the personification of Tolstoy but because they think that, as a Member of Parliament, she might have something to say.

Those are examples of hon. Members receiving remuneration that arises directly from their membership of the House. They are not included in the proposed arrangements. Why not? It is because too many Labour Members would suddenly find that they had to declare their income. It would mean that we would have to find out—because morality is absolute and does not start only tonight—from the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) how much she was, until recently, really paid by Westminster Communications. We could find out how a former Labour Prime Minister was able to buy a Suffolk dairy farm on the wage of a Back-Bench Member of Parliament.

We could go into a great deal to try to get a vision of the matter. A commissioner for ethics? I do not know where Opposition Members have been. I have about 75,000 commissioners for ethics—my electorate. I have the judgment of my peers, of my hon. Friends and of Opposition Members. There are many examples of hon. Members whom one may not like but whose probity one understands. The idea that we can substitute the judgment of our electorate, of our hon. Friends and of the House of Commons by setting up a commissioner for ethics is bizarre.

Consider the salary involved. Ethics are relative; they vary. One has to put oneself, to an extent, in the position of those who are making those difficult judgments—the judgments that we all have to make. We make those judgments when we back our Government's view against our inclinations. As party people on both sides of the House, hon. Members realise that we can make progress only if we combine in a political party. That can produce some pretty hard choices for hon. Members, especially for those in government.

There are all sorts of difficulties, such as when one feels that one has a duty to one's region but there is a conflict with the interest of one's county. Such conflicts happen all the time. All hon. Members deal with them by working a seven-day week and by earning £33,000 a year.

I understand why some of my hon. Friends have done so, but I have never criticised the payment of a parliamentary salary under the present arrangements. If, however, the commissioner for ethics is to do anything other than sum up what a ridiculous spectacle we have made of ourselves, he should have some insight into the people on whom he passes judgment. He might even care, as my third amendment proposes, to be on the salary of a Back Bencher. Alternatively—I note that he thinks that he can do the job in four days a week—perhaps he would like to work for four sevenths of the salary of a Back Bencher and nod along on £18,000 a year.

I tabled the amendments to make the point about how ridiculous this proposal is. I do not suggest for a moment that Members of Parliament—we may hear cries of "Shame" in a moment—should be paid £126,000 a year, but if Sir Gordon Downey is giving us an example of what a Member of Parliament should be paid for his four days, that is what the salary would amount to. It would make us look ridiculous. The idea that, ultimately, we shall impress our electorate, raise the standards of this House or serve our constituents better by employing somebody at that salary makes us a laughing stock.

When was the job advertised? Are we supposed to believe that, despite all the efforts of the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), no one could be found to do a four-days-a-week job for less than £74,000? Perhaps it comes to this: if one is to do such a ridiculous job, the very institution of which underlines and undermines everything that the House should stand for, the salary must be made very high indeed.

I have no criticism of Sir Gordon Downey, who has clearly had a career of distinguished public service. In his twilight years, he must have thought that this was the best thing that had ever happened to him. On one level, so say all of us, but when this House legislates not to try to take forward the condition of the people but to exact political revenge on its opponents, it has a good night out but it demeans itself and this institution.

In due course, the lawyers among us will swarm over the fine print of the recommendation to make sure that it hangs Opposition Members when we really get stuck into the nature of their trade union funding. The mere fact that we can enjoy that does not alter for a moment the fact that what we have done tonight, in a spirit of rancour on one side of the House and sheer cravenness on the part of many of my hon. Friends, undermines an institution to which our constituents sent us to preserve. Many of us should be ashamed of ourselves.

Mr. Michael J. Martin (Glasgow, Springburn): I favour the appointment of Sir Gordon Downey. It is sad that we have had to make such an appointment, but we have had to do so because there have been abuses. It is a red herring for Conservative Members to argue about his salary. When unemployed people in my constituency look at my salary and those of other hon. Members, they wish that they had such a salary. It cannot be argued that a Member of Parliament should not be appointed because of his salary.

I have seen problems that could be referred to an independent body. I left the Select Committee for Trade and Industry because I was deeply concerned about what hon. Members were doing when they visited countries at the expense of this House. When I went with the Select Committee to China, we were treated like royalty. I was deeply ashamed when members of the delegation handed out their business cards, which were written in Chinese for the benefit of their hosts, and said, "This is my business card. Get in touch with me if you need advice on a particular industry." One day, an hon. Member took an interpreter supplied to us by the Chinese Government to a meeting on private business for a telecom company with which the hon. Member was involved. Now that this appointment has been made, hon. Members can at least go to the commissioner, say that something is worrying them and ask whether he will look into it so that standards do not deteriorate.

Hon. Members on both sides of the House have seen the setting up of all-party groups. Anyone can tell that those groups are set up to become involved in lobbying in the House. Sir Gordon Downey, and even we in this House, could look into that ridiculous set-up. We have the best facilities that can be offered in the centre of London. They are given free of charge to hon. Members with an important all-party affair that they want to bring forward. Yet at this very moment, lobbyists are going around Parliament seeking to set up all-party groups for their own ends. Perhaps Sir Gordon will also look at the activities of those so-called all-party groups.

Dame Jill Knight (Birmingham, Edgbaston): I am following the hon. Gentleman's argument carefully. Surely, a Member who suspects that another Member is doing something wrong can report that either to Madam Speaker or to the Chairman of the Privileges Committee, or some such body. What is wrong with that?

Mr. Martin: It is getting to the stage when so many complaints are made that the Chief Whips and you, Madam Speaker—I know that I should not draw you into the argument—are fed up with listening to Members like me talking about the type of abuses that are going on.

Dr. Robert Spink (Castle Point): Rubbish.

Mr. Martin: The hon. Gentleman and many others have attacked me because I am a sponsored member of a trade union. I have put on my declaration the information that my constituency party, not me, gets £150 a quarter. There is a big difference between that and what some hon. Members are getting from promoting their consultancies in the House.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: We appreciate the service that the hon. Gentleman gives to the House. I have never cast any aspersions on what sponsorship or support he may get, but a little earlier he cast aspersions on a member of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry which visited China. He said that one or more members of that delegation handed over a business card, as he put it—a visitors' card, or personal card—to those Chinese people whom they met in the People's Republic of China.

Does the hon. Gentleman accept that, when Members of Parliament go abroad, those whom they meet, whatever their position—Members of Parliament, civil servants, business people and people in social work—frequently give them a card? I have thousands in my desk that I have been given over the years. Does the hon. Gentleman not understand that that frequently happens?

Madam Speaker: Order. Let me remind hon. Members that we are straying from the motion on the Order Paper. We have little time for this debate. Many wish to speak, so I hope that Members who are called will make their points briefly.

Mr. Martin: I will be brief, but I should like to point out that I sat through the previous debate, so I have not just come into the Chamber.

Let me spell it out to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton)—I do not think that he listened to what I said. Certain Members gave out their private business cards when they were part of a delegation visiting China on the business of the House. One hon. Member took away the interpreter who had been supplied for the benefit of the Select Committee in order to do business for a private company. That is the point that I am trying to make, and if the hon. Gentleman has not picked it up, there must be something wrong with his hearing. You are right, Madam Speaker: perhaps I am straying from the motion. I see standards deteriorating all the time. That must stop, for the benefit and good name of the House.

I hope that the commissioner will also look at the activities of some people in the press, because they are not so honourable. They are prepared to take payments to write certain stories that suit their own ends. There are also lobbyists going around this building who are interested not in our constituents or in the honour of the House but merely in their own private and personal gain.

9.8 pm

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): I regret that the decisions made earlier this evening will make it necessary for us to appoint Sir Gordon Downey. That is no criticism of Sir Gordon, whom I have known for many years. He is a man of great ability and integrity. There are few people we could choose who would do the job better than him.

The difficulty is that what we have done this evening has created a situation in which we will be seen as naughty schoolchildren, who have had to put someone above us in order to ensure that we behave. That is a tragedy.

As you know, Madam Speaker, I was one of those who voted against the first motion, and I then voted against the amendment tabled by the Opposition. I did so, as you know, not because I was worried about disclosing what I receive in consultancy payments for the British Venture Capital Association and for the British Insurance and Investment Brokers Association—because you know that I had intended in my speech, before the Division, to reveal what I was paid by those organisations. I shall reveal it now, because I do not want it to be thought that I was in any way going to be forced to do so.

I am paid by each of those organisations a sum of between £10,000 and £15,000, to use the bracket of revelation that we must now use. I have never done anything for either of those organisations of which I would be ashamed. However, what we have done tonight is to ensure that, because of the ban on advocacy and because we shall have to go to Sir Gordon to obtain permission to do things now, we cannot now speak freely in the House in the way that we might have done previously—a right that we won from Charles I and have given away this evening.

For example, when we introduced the insurance premium tax a little while ago, I and other hon. Members who represent the insurance industry in the House said to the insurance industry, "You cannot resist the imposition of that tax, but we must ensure that the way in which it is implemented is as efficient as possible, both for the public and for the industry."

The Government were proposing that the tax should be implemented on net payments after commission. The problem with that was that it would have been impossible to calculate the tax because of the various commission structures and bonus commissions and everything else, so I, along with others, went to Ministers and said, "That is a crazy way to proceed; it must be calculated on gross commissions." The net effect of persuading them that that was the case is that it is much easier for the Inland Revenue to collect money, and the industry has a much easier way to proceed.

In future, we shall not be allowed to do that; we shall have to go to a commissioner and obtain permission.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): The hon. Gentleman can do those things. Nothing in the world stops him from doing them. All he has to do is to resign his consultancy.

Mr. Butterfill: I accept what the hon. Gentleman says, but he knows that those of us who take on that work engage in considerable additional work to do so, and it is not necessarily unreasonable that we should be paid. I do not suppose that the hon. Gentleman takes on consultancies of that nature free, although I have done some free. I acted, for example, for—

Madam Speaker: Order. I must bring the attention of the House back to the motion before us. We are not concerned with an earlier debate. We are simply concerned with the appointment of a parliamentary commissioner, and that is set out in three lines on the Order Paper. Hon. Members must relate what they have to say to that motion and not stray as far as they are doing now.

Mr. Butterfill: I am grateful to you, Madam Speaker, and I shall return to that issue.

What I object to in the appointment of a commissioner is that we, as Members of the House, are making ourselves subject to someone who is not a Member of the House. We should not be accountable to a commissioner. We should not be accountable to a Select Committee set up by the Government and Opposition Whips Offices. We should not even, with great respect to your person and your office, Madam Speaker, be accountable to you. We should be accountable only to our constituents.

By doing what we are doing tonight, we are taking away that sovereignty of Parliament in a way that I believe is damaging. I believe that we shall not restore the confidence of the public because now we shall be seen to be behaving only because we have to behave.

If we had had a voluntary register and the opportunity to register all the details of our employment—I am grateful that we now have that opportunity because, as you are aware, Madam Speaker, I would have so registered—we should have had to account to each of our constituents as to why we were not registering those things that our constituents thought that we should enter. We would be behaving like honourable Members, and that is the only way ultimately that we shall obtain the respect of the public.

9.13 pm

Mr. David Harris (St. Ives): As someone who has never sought to have paid interests outside the House, I have no personal problem in being made accountable to the proposed commissioner. My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath) spoke for many of us in the House, both in his speech tonight and in what he wrote in the Evening Standard earlier today, when he posed serious questions about the effect of tonight's business on the well-being of the House of Commons. I heartily agree with what he said and wrote.

To turn directly to the matter before the House, I shall ask a succinct question of the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), who speaks for the House of Commons Commission. Precisely how was the sum of £72,000 per year that Sir Gordon is to receive arrived at? What was the basis of fixing on that precise level of payment to Sir Gordon? Is there any truth in the suggestion that that was the minimum that he said he would have to be paid if he was to accept the appointment? Could the right hon. Gentleman answer those direct questions?

9.15 pm

Mr. Chris Mullin (Sunderland, South): I do not take the same apocalyptic view as the hon. Members for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) and for Teignbridge

(Mr. Nicholls) who spoke at the beginning of the debate. I wonder how the commissioner will be able to fill four days a week after the initial flurry of activity—I think that he will be pressed to do so. I think that there should be full disclosure of Members' incomes from all sources—that would resolve the problem, as we would not have to pay his £72,000 a year to arbitrate on the different sources of Members' incomes.

I have a few questions to ask the Leader of the House—who appears to have made a run for it—or his representative on earth about how the commissioner was appointed. Was the job advertised? I believe that it was. How many applications were received? How many names were short-listed? What form did the interviews take? I hope that before the end of the debate the Leader of the House or his representative will answer those questions, as I am curious to know the answers.

9.17 pm

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): I am deeply concerned about what we are doing this evening. When, over the passage of time, people look at the votes that took place earlier and at the appointment to which the motion refers, they will wonder why we went to so much trouble when the mechanisms required to discipline, organise and manage this place already exist.

The unwritten United Kingdom constitution was our inheritance and we were fortunate to inherit it. As a Member of Parliament who represents a minority of the UK population who live in Scotland and look to this place to look after their interests within the UK, I am aware of the deep concern among my constituents that the High Court of Parliament will no longer take the final decisions on matters affecting their representative. I do not represent a narrow partisan view, any more than does anyone else in this place. All my constituents have the right to come to me and to expect me to be able to ask questions on matters that directly affect them as constituents.

I am concerned that we are putting in place a structure, a mechanism, that is substantially flawed. Anyone who has attempted to read the measure on which we voted earlier will realise that the commissioner will face considerable problems. How does one ask an individual to arbitrate on articles that have been written in newspapers about specific matters affecting future votes in the House on how money is spent? Often, the individual concerned is paid handsomely for his efforts because he is a Member of Parliament.

Articles written by hon. Members appear in the Scottish press every week. Will those hon. Members be debarred from leading parliamentary delegations that may affect the national health service or from asking questions or initiating and participating in debates? I believe that we have put in place the most appalling, structurally deficient measures, which are comparable to what has come out of Europe in recent years. They do the House no favours.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): I understand the hon. Gentleman's concerns. Hon. Members would be debarred only if they had already entered into some form of commercial contract with a pharmaceutical company, for example, and they are not obliged to do that.

Mr. Walker: I make it clear that I do not have any problems with the measures personally. However, I am concerned about what we are asking the ombudsman to do. I believe that lawyers will have a field day with the measures that we have attempted to insert into the structures and rules of this place. The hon. Member for Newham, South shakes his head, but he may live to regret his actions.

I return to the example of hon. Members who write articles for newspapers. Those individuals are paid to write articles because they are Members of Parliament and because they have direct access to the House. In fact, they often base their articles on questions that they have asked in this place. I do not want those hon. Members to stop writing articles, any more than I want other hon. Members to cease gaining similar experience outside the House. It is that sort of experience that makes the Chamber what it is. If all hon. Members shared the same backgrounds and experiences, the Chamber simply would not function properly. The unwritten constitution of the United Kingdom depends vitally on the independence of hon. Members who represent all their constituents.

As an aside, I was astonished to hear the hon. Member for Glasgow, Springburn (Mr. Martin) criticise all-party groups. I think particularly of the delightful Scotch whisky all-party group, of which I regularly speak in favour although I am a teetotaller. I digress for a moment because I find his comments horrendous.

I believe that the House is more important than any narrow, partisan point-scoring exercise. I want my grandchildren to inherit what we were lucky enough to enjoy: all the benefits that the unwritten constitution of the United Kingdom provides.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): I did not intend to speak in the debate until a few moments ago. However, the tone of the debate that has followed the voting suggests that Conservative Members are bitter about what has occurred tonight. That underlying bitterness is coming through in the debate.

I am among those who have followed the debate very closely over the years and I suspect that many hon. Members are exaggerating the effect of the changes that we have made. There will be much discussion about the changes in the Committee that is to be established. I believe that a number of rulings will be arrived at through precedent and, when those rulings are laid down, hon. Members will be able to identify to what extent they are in order when they speak in the House of Commons or use the procedures of this place. Hon. Members must take stock and not react in the hysterical manner that seems to have characterised the debate tonight.

Mr. Butterfill: The hon. Gentleman is wrong in what he says about feelings of bitterness: we accept what has happened. However, even if we ban advocacy, there is not a legislature in the world where that does not occur. Surely all that we have done tonight is drive it underground, and that is never a good thing.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I do not want to stray from order and it would not be in order for me to reply directly to the hon. Gentleman, but he should consider what he has said. To suggest that advocacy will be driven underground suggests that some Members are prepared and are now giving notice of the fact that they intend to breach the rules of the House of Commons. That would be a grave error of judgment and I hope that the hon. Gentleman has the opportunity to correct what he said.

Mr. Butterfill: I shall happily do so.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have cautioned the House before that we are dealing with a very small motion and hon. Members in their interventions are leading those hon. Members who have the Floor down quite the wrong path. I hope that the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) will not give way. He must speak to the motion that is before us. The hon. Gentleman's interventions do not deal with the motion at all.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Let me say something in defence of Sir Gordon Downey. Together with other members of the Public Accounts Committee, I worked closely with him for many years. I was on the Public Accounts Committee for 11 or 12 years and Sir Gordon was there for about six of them. He has an extremely incisive mind and sees his way through very complicated issues. That came out often during deliberative sessions of the Public Accounts Committee. Anyone who was on that Committee in those years can only endorse what I have to say.

If Conservative Members are concerned about what will happen in the Committee, they will find that Sir Gordon, in bringing his mind to the problems that may confront us, will certainly find ways to resolve those problems that will be endorsed by the Committee.

Mr. Winnick: Does my hon. Friend accept that, if the proposal had been put before us some years ago, I probably would have opposed it? Does he agree that it was the failure of the Select Committee on Members' Interests time and again to tackle some of the issues which undoubtedly embarrassed the House and which has now made such a measure inevitable? It is right that we should go ahead with the appointment.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Sadly, that is the case. When I was on the Select Committee on Members' Interests we had a very good team. The Chairman of the Committee, the hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) was here this evening, but he is not in his place at the moment. He will recall that we had a particularly good team and worked very well together through a number of difficult inquiries. However, late last year and at the beginning of this year, the Committee ran into the long grass and found that it could no longer proceed. I was not on the Committee, as I came off it two years ago.

The Committee was required to examine a couple of complaints. It was almost impossible for it to proceed because, for a variety of reasons outside the Committee's control, Parliament was polarising on those issues in the light of the scandals that had been reported in the national press. In my view, that polarisation made it difficult to proceed without the intervention of an independent person or persons to adjudicate on those matters. We effectively started with Nolan. Nolan was there to some extent to adjudicate on the best way forward and make recommendations to Parliament with which we could then proceed. We have now reached the next stage and perhaps an independent element will help the Committee avoid the log jams that will inevitably arise over the coming months.

Mrs. Ann Winterton (Congleton): I would like to bring the hon. Gentleman back to the central point of our debate this evening. He has given his opinion of the gentleman who will preside over the new Committee. The hon. Gentleman has now recommended him to the House. No one is making slighting references to the gentleman in question. The point surely is that many hon. Members on both sides of the House think that a salary of £72,000 is obscene—not to mention the cost of his secretarial back-up, his office and so on. Perhaps if the man in question has retired on an index-linked pension and is comfortably off, he should be public-spirited enough to offer to do the job for nothing.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: The hon. Lady's intervention reminds me to correct an error in what her spouse said earlier. Sir Gordon Downey was an Officer of the House of Commons: he is not an outsider. He understands this House. If, over time, he believes that his salary is not warranted, it will come as no surprise to hon. Members to hear me say that he will probably ask for the salary to be renegotiated. He is not the sort of man to demand such a salary ad infinitum if he knows he does not warrant it. He sought a salary of that grade on the basis that he felt that the amount of work required of him would go with a substantial salary—

Mr. Nicholls: Four days a week!

Mr. Campbell-Savours: We do not know that—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) has already made a contribution to the debate.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I do not usually spend my time defending salaries of this size; but in certain circumstances we have to pay the market price if we want good people. Sir Gordon will not be working four days a week. He will probably spend much of his week just as we spend ours. The public think we work three and a half or four days a week, but the hon. Member for Teignbridge talked about our working seven days a week. During his first year in the job, Sir Gordon will certainly not work a four-day week. He will find that he has to do an immense amount of work that will certainly warrant a large salary in the early period. But eventually he may volunteer to have the salary renegotiated.

Mr. Nicholls: The resolution refers to a four-day week, although there may be a little more work to begin with. The hon. Gentleman appears to be saying that he is authorised by Sir Gordon to say that he will apply for a pay cut in the near future. The hon. Gentleman is an experienced Member of this House, so may I ask him whether he thinks £72,000 a year is too much, too little or just right?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I must sit down soon, but I will end on this note. My party has stood accused for decades of promoting the politics of envy. I sense a little envy in what the hon. Gentleman is saying this evening.

9.33 pm

Mr. Beith: With the leave of the House, I shall try, in the time available, to reply to the main points of the debate. I do so not, as the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) thinks, on behalf of the Leader of the House, nor, as the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) thinks, on behalf of the Liberal Democrats, but on behalf of a Commission on which Front and Back Benchers of all three parties are represented, under the independent chairmanship of Madam Speaker.

Aspects of the debate have gone over the same ground as the previous debate. The Commission had no authority to question the House's decision to appoint a Commissioner for Standards, which was taken on 19 July. The Commission has no power whatever over the salaries of Members, which are decided on a resolution of the House. So we could do nothing about either matter even if we had chosen to do so.

The Commission considered the question of salary carefully and at some length. In fixing the annual salary at £72,000, on the basis of what has been determined as a four-day week, the commission was obliged to take account of a number of factors. They included the importance attached to the duties involved, the previous salaries of likely suitable candidates and our statutory responsibility to pay salaries in line with those in the civil service. We also had regard to the problem presented by the difference between salary levels suggested to us and the salaries of right hon. and hon. Members, with whom the commissioner will have to deal. Some of us held particularly strong views on that point.

The recommended salary, which is at the bottom end of the permanent secretary scale reduced by one fifth because of the four-day week, represents a compromise—and one that I hope that the House will accept, so that there will be no delay in the detailed implementation of the decisions taken by the House this evening.

Mr. Ray Whitney (Wycombe): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Beith: First, I must try to answer the questions of right hon. and hon. Members who have taken part in the debate.

The hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) asked how the choice was made. The Commission was assisted by the board, chaired by the First Civil Service Commissioner, and benefited from advice given by consultants who contacted 135 individuals in a general trawl. Eighty applications were received in response to advertisements in two newspapers. Short and long lists were devised. At the end of that extended process, the commission was unanimous in approving the appointment of Sir Gordon Downey.

I say to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) that Sir Gordon's wide experience and considerable reputation suited him well for the post. The details of his career are set out in the report on which the resolution is based, which the hon. Gentleman can read. As Comptroller and Auditor General—and I attach particular importance to that post, as did the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours)—Sir Gordon had extensive experience of the workings of the House, of Committees and of Members of Parliament individually, as well as of the pressures under which they work. All those represented compelling reasons for appointing Sir Gordon.

Mr. Mullin: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Beith: I will give way to the first hon. Gentleman who asked me to do so.

Mr. Whitney: Against the background that the misdemeanours that gave rise to the whole Nolan process have been so few and far between, is the right hon. Gentleman telling the House that he and the Commission seriously believe that when the arrangement is in operation, there will be a sufficient number of problems of the kind in question to keep Sir Gordon occupied four days every week? Did the right hon. Gentleman and his colleagues on the Commission really reach that conclusion?

Mr. Beith: We were advised by the Select Committee. If the hon. Gentleman will read its report, he will find references to the possibility of full-time and part-time work in the post. Initially, the Commission reached the conclusion that for the first year or two at least, a full-time post could be fully justified. Only after some discussion was the post reduced to one of four days a week. We recognise that once the system has become established, it may prove possible for the work to be undertaken with a smaller commitment of time. We envisage that happening, and it is assumed that the post will be reviewed at an appropriate stage. Perhaps the number of days will be reduced, in which case the salary will be adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Harris: Can the right hon. Gentleman refute the suggestion that £72,000 was the absolute minimum that Sir Gordon would accept? In other words, that he insisted on being paid £72,000—true or false?

Mr. Beith: If I had been a party to any negotiations with individuals, which I was not, I would not disclose them on the Floor of the House—any more than one would expect any person to do. The Commission made a decision as to the level of salary and made a recommendation to the House. It did so having considered a range of factors that go in conflicting directions. The salary is less than that paid to others in the service of the House. Even the full-time equivalent—I touch on a point made by the right hon. Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins)—is less than the salary of the Comptroller and Auditor General, who is paid significantly more.

Sir Terence Higgins: I did not actually say that. As right hon. and hon. Members will be required to deposit their contracts with Sir Gordon, can the right hon. Gentleman say whether Sir Gordon's contract has been deposited in the Library? In particular, can the right hon. Gentleman remind the House of the term of Sir Gordon's contract and the circumstances under which it may be renegotiated?

Mr. Beith: The Select Committee made it clear that the commissioner should be in a position of some independence and be capable of being dismissed only on a resolution of the House. The contract is, if I recall rightly, a three-year term, and it can only be ended short of that period on such a resolution. Most of the details of the appointment are set out in the report itself. I commend it to the House.

Sir Terence Higgins: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Madam Speaker: Is the right hon. Gentleman giving way, or has he finished?

Mr. Beith: I have finished, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Does the right hon. Gentleman wish to make a speech, as there is time?

Sir Terence Higgins: Briefly, as it seemed appropriate to ask what the term was. I am not at all clear why, if we are to renegotiate the terms, it should be a three-year term.

9.39 pm

Mr. Phil Gallie (Ayr): I had not intended to get involved in the debate, but I am a bit stunned. I follow the excellent speeches that were delivered by my hon. Friends the Members for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) and for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton). I find it astounding that, month by month, year by year, we hear from Opposition Members how wrong it is for individuals with high salaries to be appointed, particularly to run industries where wealth can be accrued, but where, as suggested by Opposition Members, individuals should not benefit to the full level of their contribution.

Here we have an individual who is in retirement, who has undoubtedly given great service to this country in the past, but who is being brought out of retirement on a salary of £72,000 a year. I feel quite sure that Opposition Members will find it very difficult indeed to justify to their constituents how they can support such a move.

I honestly feel that the House has got it wrong on this issue and that it is setting a very bad example indeed.

Mr. Mullin: Did the hon. Gentleman hear me ask a moment ago how many people were on the shortlist for that particular job and how many were interviewed? Did he notice that I got no reply and that when I attempted to intervene to follow it up I was the only person who failed to catch the attention of the hon. Gentleman concerned? Does he think that we should have an answer to that question?

Mr. Gallie: I believe that the hon. Gentleman should have had an answer. I believe that such a position should have been advertised to the fullest extent, in line with the wishes and desires of Opposition Members and so many expressions in the past—

It being one hour after the commencement of proceedings on the motion, Madam Speaker put the Question, pursuant to Order [3 November].

Resolved,

That Sir Gordon Stanley Downey, KCB, be appointed Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards on the terms of the Report of the House of Commons Commission (HC 789), dated 30th October.

Orders of the Day

Medical (Professional Performance) Bill

Lords amendments considered.

Clause 2

VOLUNTARY REMOVAL FROM THE REGISTER

Lords amendment: No. 1, in page 3, leave out lines 25 to 29 and insert ("—

> (a) providing for the erasure by the Registrar from the register of medical practitioners of the name of any person who applies, in the manner prescribed by the regulations, for his name to be erased from the register;
> (b) providing for the refusal by the Registrar of applications under paragraph (a) above in such cases and circumstances as may be prescribed by the regulations;
> (c) making provision")

9.48 pm

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.—[Mr. Sackville.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Geoffrey Lofthouse): With this, it will be convenient to discuss also Lords amendment No. 2.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): Lords amendment No. 1 relates to the part of the Bill that allows registered medical practitioners voluntarily to withdraw from the register. The debate in this place, both Upstairs in Committee and here, was inevitably linked to the reasons for that, to the acceptance or otherwise of a voluntary application for erasure from the register and—I put this within the ambit of this discussion—to the terms on which there should be any application for readmission to the register.

Labour Members' concern was recalled by the noble Baroness Cumberlege, and I understand that I can quote her on this matter as she is a member of the Government, giving a Government view: She said:

> "during the debate in another place there was concern that some doctors might abuse the provisions of clause 2 to avoid proceedings concerning serious professional misconduct. The Opposition tabled a number of amendments aimed at addressing that but none of them gave the GMC the flexibility it requires."

I fear that she was not reading at least some of the concerns of Labour Members and, I hope, of the whole House. Parliament lays down the ambit for the rules within which the General Medical Council works, but it appeared from her remarks that the GMC was requesting a degree of flexibility that at least Labour Members, both in Committee and on Report, were asking for, and it was denied on those grounds.

The amendment provides

> "(a) . . . for the erasure by the Registrar from the register of medical practitioners of the name of any person who applies, in the manner prescribed by the regulations, for his name to be erased from the register", and

> "(b) . . . for the refusal by the Registrar of applications under paragraph (a) above in such cases and circumstances as may be prescribed by the regulations".

[Mr. Nigel Spearing]

The obvious purport of that amendment was made clear by the noble Baroness Cumberlege when she said:

> "If a doctor decides he cannot maintain a good standard of performance or does not wish to undertake remedial training, he should be allowed to remove his name from the register. Clause 2 provides for this and other similar circumstances in which a doctor may simply no longer wish to be registered; for example, if he is going to work abroad. It also has the effect of providing a quick and easy way for a doctor to remove himself from practice."

The Government and the noble Baroness claim that the loophole allowing a doctor to remove his name from the register when he is about to be, or suspects that he is to be, subject to either the performance channel, which is opened up in the Bill, or the professional conduct channel, which is there at present, is to be stopped up to some extent, but that is not so, at least in relation to the wishes of the House. The loophole is stopped up to allow the registrar to act on regulations prescribed by the General Medical Council, and we do not know what those are.

A continuous theme of the debate both upstairs and on the Floor of the House was that the Bill provides the General Medical Council with powers to make regulations and a very wide discretion which, in the view of many hon. Members, were too imprecise. The regulations to which the amendment refers cover one of seven pages of the schedule and about three pages of the main Bill and therefore there is concern that the clause, although no one could oppose it because it partially stops up something that has been spotted, does not go anything like far enough. The provision is not linked in any precise way with the following part of the clause, which is not being amended and which allows for application for reinstatement.

The GMC has the discretion to restore a member. That does not reassure the public, despite the fact that the noble Baroness said:

> "The amendments will enable the GMC to make regulations to allow its registrar to refuse applications for voluntary removal in defined circumstances."

I interpret those circumstances to be those defined in regulations, not defined by this House. She continued:

> "this will not only give the GMC flexibility, but also send a message to the profession and the public that the GMC takes a grave view of matters of serious professional misconduct."—[Official Report, House of Lords, 21 July 1995; Vol. 566, c. 490-91.]

It being Ten o'clock, further consideration of the Lords amendment stood adjourned.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business),

That, at this day's sitting, the Lords Amendments to the Medical (Professional Performance) Bill may be proceeded with, though opposed, until any hour.—[Dr. Liam Fox.]

Question agreed to.

Question again proposed, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Spearing: I beg to contest the noble Baroness's statement. As I said, it is a very loose arrangement with the regulations being entirely in the hands of the GMC. My understanding—the Minister can correct me if I am wrong as these matters are not simple because there is a whole mass of interlocking regulations—is that the regulations must have the approval of the Privy Council, which was the historic origin of the GMC, quite properly, a century ago, and indeed, probably quite properly, of its court of appeal.

I am not sure whether the regulations relating to voluntary removal and reinstatement have to come back to the House under a negative procedure. I am sure that it will not be the affirmative procedure because that proposal was thrown out in Committee. I suspect that the regulations will require only the approval of the Privy Council and no more. If that is so, contrary to what the noble Baroness said, it is evidence that the question of serious professional misconduct and what then happens is in the hands of the Privy Council and the GMC alone, without any reference to this House.

Another matter that was debated in Committee in the other place was raised by Lord Rea. He referred to me because his amendment related to the Archer case, which is well known to the GMC and to the House. His amendment would have allowed the existing professional conduct committee, of which the noble Baroness is so proud, to deny its right to send back to the professional performance committee a finding on a doctor whose performance was considered to be professional misconduct, but not serious. It was suggested that the matter would have to go back to the screener.

Although I do not think that anyone could oppose the Lords amendment, it exemplifies not only the complexity of the Bill and the schedule, but the fact that virtually the whole Bill allows the GMC enormous scope to make its own regulations. This House will have very little opportunity—in fact, none in some cases—to approve the regulations. The operation of the Bill, when it is enacted, may not provide—not least because the professional procedure is in secret—the advantages and the improvements that the GMC says that it wants and that the Government say that the Bill will produce.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Tom Sackville): I am glad that the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) said that no one could oppose the amendment. I am sure that we can dispose of it fairly quickly. I am glad that he approves of the amendment in principle, recognising the concern that some doctors could take advantage of the clause and the Bill to avoid proceedings for serious professional misconduct and that there could therefore be instances when the public interest would be served by a doctor remaining on the register and facing a committee hearing. The hon. Gentleman suggested that the regulations allowed by the amendment are too broad but we believe that experience shows that we can give the GMC the flexibility that it needs to strike a balance in the matter. I commend the amendment to the House.

New clause

Lords amendment: No. 3, after clause 2, to insert the following new clause—Preliminary proceedings: interim orders—

" .—(1) Section 42 of the Medical Act 1983 (preliminary proceedings as to professional misconduct and unfitness to practise) shall be amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (3), in paragraph (c) for the word "two" there shall be substituted the word "six".

(3) In subsection (4), for the words "No order for interim suspension or for interim conditional registration shall be made by the Preliminary Proceedings Committee" there shall be substituted the words "No order under subsection (3)(b) or (c) above or (6A)(b) to (d) below shall be made by any Committee".

(4) In subsection (5), for the words "If the Committee decide" there shall be substituted the words "If the Preliminary Proceedings Committee decide".

(5) In subsection (6), for the word "two" there shall be substituted the word "six".

(6) After subsection (6) there shall be inserted—

"(6A) Where an order for interim suspension or for interim conditional registration has been made in relation to any person under any provision of this section (including this subsection) the Preliminary Proceedings Committee, the Professional Conduct Committee or the Health Committee may, subject to subsection (4) above—

(a) revoke the order or revoke any condition imposed by the order;

(b) vary any condition imposed by the order;

(c) if satisfied that to do so is necessary for the protection of members of the public, make an order for interim suspension; or

(d) if satisfied that to do so is necessary for the protection of members of the public or is in the interests of the person concerned, make an order that his registration shall be conditional on his compliance, during such period as is specified in the order, with such requirements so specified as the Committee think fit to impose for the protection of members of the public or in his interests.

(6B) An order under subsection (6A)(c) or (d) above—

(a) shall take effect as from a date not later than the date on which the interim suspension or interim conditional registration would otherwise come to an end; and

(b) shall specify a period not exceeding three months.

(6C) If an order is made under subsection (6A)(a) to (d) above the Registrar shall forthwith serve a notification of the order on the person to whose registration it relates.

(6D) Where an order has been made under any provision of this section, the court (within the meaning of section 38 above) may—

(a) in the case of an order for interim suspension, terminate the suspension,

(b) in the case of an order for conditional registration, revoke or vary any condition imposed by the order,

(c) in either case, substitute for the period specified in the order some other period which could have been specified in the order when it was made; and the decision of the court on any application under this subsection shall be final.".

(7) Subsection (7) shall cease to have effect."

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.—[Mr. Sackville.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to take Lords amendments Nos. 4 to 8, 12, 13 and 15.

Mr. Sam Galbraith (Strathkelvin and Bearsden): Lords amendment No. 3 allows for the suspension of a doctor by the General Medical Council, through its preliminary proceedings committee, for the safety of the public in a case in which an issue has been raised against the doctor in respect of his or her health or professional conduct.

There is a difference between suspension on health grounds and on professional conduct grounds in that suspension on health grounds is unlikely to be controversial and there would be only limited doubt about it. However, a doctor could be suspended because of allegations about his or her professional conduct without having had a chance to answer the allegations.

In most cases, that will not be a problem. I accept that because I foresee that, in the majority of cases, complaints would have been raised with the health board or hospital, which would have pursued the matter and may or may not have then terminated the doctor's contract. The matter would then be further referred to the GMC and no controversy would be involved.

However, there will be cases where allegations will be made specifically by the public without the employing authority or the doctor having been involved. In that case, suspension by the General Medical Council will have serious implications for the employment of doctors before they have had the chance to answer the allegations against them.

I know that the GMC is separate from the employing authority. I understand that distinction and it is right that the matter is not covered in the Bill. I hope that the Minister will accept that this is one of the difficult grey areas relating to employment which arise as a consequence of the Bill. I hope that he will discuss the matter with the British Medical Association when it reaches conclusions about the future employment of its members who are suspended under those conditions.

Mr. Sackville: I certainly accept the hon. Gentleman's point. The House will agree, because it was discussed extensively during earlier stages of the Bill, that interim suspension should be extended to a longer period to allow the General Medical Council more time to bring proceedings. I welcome the hon. Gentleman's acceptance of that.

PETITION

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

10.10 pm

Mr. Peter Snape (West Bromwich, East): I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the national officers and council of executive members of the National Union of Rail, Maritime and Transport Workers.

Tonight, of all nights, I had better declare an interest. I am a member of the RMT and was a member of the union when it was known as the National Union of Railwaymen, of which my father was also proud to be a member.

The officers and council of executive members declare that it is in the interests of the economy, industry and environment of the United Kingdom, and in the best interests of those employed in the railway industry of the United Kingdom, that a high-speed railway line between London and the Channel tunnel be constructed as expeditiously as possible. It is a sad commentary on our transport policy that, when a high-speed line has already been constructed in France and is in the process of construction in Belgium, I should have to bring this petition before the House. The petitioners therefore request that this House of Commons uses its influence to ensure that such a high-speed railway line is constructed at the earliest possible date.

I do not have to remind you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, of the depth of railway experience among the officers and members of the executive. On their behalf, the petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To lie upon the Table.

Campbell Soups

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. McLoughlin.]

10.11 pm

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): This is a story of deception, intrigue, exploitation and injustice. It is the story of how a large multinational company, with profits of $698 million last year, more than $7 billion in net sales world wide and an international reputation—a company responsible for marketing a branded product, known throughout the world for its quality—targeted for closure a small, technologically advanced, highly profitable food company in north-west England. In so doing, it totally undermined the morale of a town.

The multinational company concerned is Campbell Soups of America, one of the largest food producers in the world. The plant in north-west England is Homepride Cook-in Sauces in Maryport, a town reeling from the effects of escalating unemployment, which, in parts, reaches nearly 25 per cent.

Having purchased Homepride's operations in Maryport under the procedure of a mock auction, that multinational company in pursuit of profits gave those in the work force assurances as to their employment, fooled the vendor as to the plant's future and effectively stole the brand name. Within eight weeks, it announced the sacking of the work force with a spurious offer of transfer to other plants. That created mayhem, distress, anger and a deep sense of seething injustice and resentment among the local community.

In 16 years of being the Member of Parliament for Workington, I have witnessed and experienced many closures. I have seen the rundown of the footwear industry, with the closure of Bata and other footwear companies. I have witnessed the rundown of parts of British Steel Corporation's Workington operations, the closure of the Leyland-Volvo bus plant, and many other closures. But this closure has been the worst of the lot because it can be justified neither morally nor commercially and because a poor but proud and loyal community is being punished for having made a success of a company that threatened the market share of a predator multinational.

I want to say a few words about the background to the sale. Dalgety, the former owner of the cook-in sauce business, having recently acquired Quaker European pet foods operations for £422 million, found that it needed to raise a substantial amount of money. To raise those funds, it decided to sell off a number of its more profitable processed food operations.

Earlier in March, Dalgety had said that it was looking for bids for various food operation divisions. In the case of Homepride in Maryport, a number of organisations were either invited by Dalgety or approached by it with a view to purchasing those Homepride operations.

A de facto auction was announced and over a period of months a number of organisations became involved in the bidding arrangements. They included, first, BSN Danone—I understand that that company is registered in France; secondly, the CPC organisation; thirdly a venture capital arm of the National Westminster bank; fourthly, Schroder—its interest appears in part to have centred on its role as adviser for CPC; fifthly, a separate arm of Schroder specialising in venture capital projects; and, sixthly, Legal and General Insurance. Those are but some of the organisations that expressed an interest in acquiring the Homepride Maryport operations.

A number of bids came from organisations that were putting together packages that involved a combination of privately held equity, institutional equity and offshore funding. Even organisations such as Investors in Industry—3i—were partially involved. Some bids relied on the services of a management buy-out team, which in certain circumstances would have held direct equity, and perhaps even share options.

One of the problems was that it was recognised that a trade buyer would always be more risky than acquisition by a consortium sponsored by a financial institution, but no one could say anything. No one was allowed to warn the work force of the dangers. Why? Because the whole sale was shrouded in confidentiality. The Homepride sales prospectus, a veritable limited edition publication, was kept under lock and key. Any individual or institution in any way involved in the sale or purchase of Homepride was bound by what can only be described as an oath of confidentiality. In other words, "Keep your big mouths shut, because if you don't, we'll sue." That meant that no one could identify the motives of the individual players.

What I can now reveal is that, apart from one, all the people who were bidding wanted to keep the plant open. They all realised that it was a highly profitable company; indeed, it was the jewel in the crown of Dalgety's profitability. They recognised Maryport Homepride, with its ever-increasing production and profit potential, as a cash cow. There was, however, one company bidding that did not want to keep the plant open—Campbell Soups. It knew that it had to close the plant down because it threatened its strategy for the United Kingdom.

Campbell Soups was so determined to close the plant down that it outbid all the other bidders and signed a deal on 4 August. What did it buy? It bought a business with a book asset value of £9 million and a profit of £4 million on a turnover of £28 million—all for the princely sum of £58.6 million. The size of that figure suggests the desperate nature of its desire to acquire the business, grab the brand name and close down Maryport operations.

Sadly, in the final hours of the negotiations, Dalgety failed to recognise the dangers, with the effect that it failed to secure an undertaking guaranteeing the retention of the work force on the Maryport site, as had happened in the Reckitt and Colman sale of its sauces business in a back-to-back deal with Bass and Unilever.

Campbell Soups, of course, did not want such a deal, so why did it want to close the operation down? First, it wanted to acquire the substantial brand name of Homepride. Its overriding, overarching obsession with brand names is clearly demonstrated in the 1995 annual report of the United States parent operation. Secondly, it wanted to acquire a turnover injection of nearly £30 million in Campbell's United Kingdom operations. It desperately needed that because of its failure to turn in good figures on its existing operations, which some in America were questioning.

Finally, Campbell's desperately needed to secure the removal of capacity from the Maryport site, which could potentially damage its commercial objectives in the cook-in sauce market. We have to understand that the Maryport operation, in spite of a high profit against asset/turnover ratio, still left immense scope for further production and profit taking.

At the time of the takeover of 4 August, in a series of carefully prepared news releases and statements, Campbell's, hiding behind ambiguity, set out to convince the West Cumbrian public, the Maryport work force and, to some extent, even City institutions that the acquisition was good news for Maryport. Certainly the work force was misled because, at a meeting between Mr. Al Simpson and Mr. Daryl Brewster and the work force held on site at the beginning of August, they even had the gall to suggest that they were considering bringing new products to Maryport. I quote them:

"We are thinking of bringing pasta sauces to Maryport".

I further quote from a letter of 4 August 1995 from Mr. J.W.T. Mustoe:

"We are proud to be the new owners of Homepride sauces. There is no doubt that it is a fine brand, and, as many of you will know, Homepride Sauces was at the forefront of developing the cook-in sauce market. It fits in very well with our portfolio of brands which included Campbell's Soups, Fray Bentos, Rowat Pickles and Campbell's/Food service Businesses. You may be unaware that Campbell's is the biggest sauce manufacturer in the world and it is fitting that the UK's largest cook-in sauce brand"—

Homepride—

"has joined us. We believe that we can build on the strength of the Homepride Sauces name as well as develop and grow" business in

"the cook-in sauce market."

To avoid those in the work force being alerted to the impending disaster confronting them, Campbell's even went through the spurious exercise of conning local management, who in the main appeared to have been in blissful ignorance of what was happening, into organising, in August, Investors in People status for the Maryport plant. The document produced by the company and given to the work force in August stated:

"We"—

the company—

"firmly believe that implementing the Investors In People Programme as part of our overall strategy will allow our Company to continually develop, expand and build on the success of introducing new product ranges and processes into our operations here at Maryport . . . The Programme will cover everyone within the Company and we firmly believe that it will be a major benefit to our organisation and to everyone working within the Company and further demonstrate our commitment to the development of people within Maryport, however, we recognise that our success with the Investors in People will only be achieved with everyone working together."

Furthermore, having put local management through that hoop of deception, Campbell's then had Mr. Mustoe, United Kingdom group managing director, tell me that local management supported the closure as it thought that there was no alternative. Closure of that highly profitable plant—what a betrayal of the truth and of his own newly acquired employees.

It was all a deception, which has now persisted for more than 14 weeks, and we are only at the beginning of a struggle.

As recently as last week, I learned of a decision that had been taken in early August to put a new production line into another Campbell's plant for the production and handling of Homepride cook-in sauces. Last week, the company announced that 50 workers were seriously considering moving to Campbell's other plants. Another "porky"—the real figure is nearer 10 and may be as low as six.

Perhaps the company's wriggling and shifty footwork of last week is an even clearer sign of its intentions. Last week, I asked the Campbell's UK group managing director whether he would arrange for me to address the board of Campbell's at its New Jersey headquarters in the United States of America. I offered to cross the Atlantic. I also asked to be given the option to attend the annual general meeting, which is due on 16 November, and Campbell's could have allowed me to enter as a guest. I understand that that is the position under American law.

A public relations company started ringing up both myself and the media offering irrelevant responses in an attempt to evade the central questions that I have been asking. My questions still remain unanswered and I shall be tackling those issues when I visit King's Lynn next week, to appeal to the workers of the King's Lynn Campbell plant to black production lines transferred from Maryport in my constituency.

This is a saga of deceit and dishonour. The conduct of the company's UK operations is totally at variance with the standards of corporate governance set out in the memorandum of 6 October 1995 provided to shareholders who were invited to attend this year's annual general meeting in Camden, New Jersey in 10 days' time. Paragraph 18 of that document—which has only just been published in America and was sent over from America to me last week by sympathetic people—states:

> "The company does not have a poison pill"—

the Campbell company is talking about itself—

> "or other anti takeover devices because it believes that the way to remain independent is via superior performance in building shareholder wealth".

The people of Maryport did just that: they built the shareholder wealth of Dalgety through its Homepride operations. They, too, did not have a poison pill because they believed that they were the jewel in the Dalgety crown.

I am sure that well-respected and internationally regarded old-money members of the Dorrance family on the board of Campbell's American operations will understand what I mean when I suggest that new-money business decisions taken in little old England appear to lack principle. If the Dorrance family still remain unconvinced, I would ask them to look at the memorandum that I have just mentioned. Under the heading,

> "Requirements of Managers and Directors"

it refers to

> "Strong, principled and ethical leadership".

The family have been let down by people on this side of the Atlantic who should have known better. I beg them to intervene out of a sense of Christian conscience. What is happening is wrong; it is immoral; it is unprincipled and must be stopped.

The Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Jonathan Evans): I appreciate the force of the concerns expressed by the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), who has sought to raise the issue in the House on a number of occasions. I have been present when he has made points of order and asked questions of myself and ministerial colleagues. I congratulate him on his success in bringing the subject to the Floor of the House tonight. By the emotion that he brought to his remarks, he demonstrated his strength of feeling over the issue.

It must be recognised that industry generally operates in a competitive environment, and the Campbell company has existed in the United Kingdom since 1959. It currently employs more than 2,000 people—I think the figure is 2,100—in five locations in the United Kingdom. It has plants in King's Lynn, in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham), who is watching tonight's debate, and in the constituency of my former hon. Friend, now the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth). It has three other plants in Glasgow, Salford and Peterlee, but they are not so central to the change in operations mentioned by the hon. Member for Workington. In my remarks I hope to outline the way in which the Office of Fair Trading has previously considered the issue.

Campbell's has invested quite heavily in the United Kingdom food industry in the past 12 months. The hon. Gentleman referred to its £56 million purchase of the Homepride sauces plant and, collectively, I believe that its expenditure has been about £100 million. In the context of tonight's debate—the impact of Campbell's decision on Maryport in the hon. Gentleman's constituency—I recognise that announcements such as that to which the hon. Gentleman referred can be a body blow in areas of high unemployment. That fact was reflected in the force of the hon. Gentleman's remarks.

For what it is worth, Campbell's has sought to safeguard the 123 jobs at its plant by offering employment at its two sites at Stratford-on-Avon and King's Lynn. I recognise, however, that the practicalities of accepting such offers are bound to be limited. The hon. Gentleman said that the company announced last week that some 50 people might take advantage of the offer. Irrespective of whether 10 or 50 people do so, they must deal with the practical difficulty of moving from the hon. Gentleman's constituency to the two alternative locations.

I recognise that the closure is a deep disappointment in Maryport. In dealing with such matters, the Government endeavour to do their best to assist in developing new job opportunities within the constituency affected. I shall detail those endeavours later in my speech.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Will the Minister give me a straight answer to a very simple question? Does he believe that it is right in principle that a company such as Campbell Soups of America can move into a constituency such as mine and close down an extremely profitable operation with huge potential? I have seen the Dalgety production forecasts well into the next century. Does he believe that it is right in principle that a foreign conglomerate with a huge international reputation should have the market power to move in and destroy jobs in an area of high unemployment? Will the Minister give me a straight answer to that question, because it is what my constituents want to hear?

Mr. Evans: I shall certainly give the hon. Gentleman a straight answer in the context of the reaction of any Member of Parliament facing a similar difficulty. I am sure that all hon. Members would share the great concerns that he has expressed. However, he invites me to come to the Dispatch Box as a Minister and to outline the Government's response to the situation. He knows well that the Government are not in a position to intervene, other than in certain circumstances that I shall outline briefly in the course of my remarks.

Before I do so, it is important to list some of the areas in which the Government are providing assistance both in the hon. Gentleman's constituency and, more broadly, in the north-west. I think that the hon. Gentleman will be aware of the work of the local training and enterprise council and Inward in trying to attract businesses to the area. As the Department of Trade and Industry Minister with special responsibility for the north-west, I have been present in the Chamber when the hon. Gentleman has paid tribute to the work undertaken by Inward in an attempt to attract additional investment to his constituency. I know that he recognises that work.

I am also aware that Cumbria training and enterprise council has met Campbell's to offer its guidance and help to employees at this particularly difficult time. The training for work programme has been very successful in the Cumbria area. I understand that 74 per cent. of participants in courses held as part of that programme have gone on to secure other jobs or to engage in further education and training. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is aware that west Cumbria enjoys assisted area and European objective 2 status, which I am sure will prove helpful in the long term.

I shall now clarify an issue that the hon. Gentleman did not raise tonight but which he has raised previously. The Department of Trade and Industry paid a regional selective assistance grant to the Dalgety company in order to safeguard jobs at the Maryport plant. One instalment of the grant was paid in July 1993. The Government office for the north-west will be seeking the recovery of those moneys in view of the circumstances that the hon. Gentleman has outlined.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: May I press the Minister again on the issue that I raised with him previously? I am seeking a value judgment. Do the Government condemn the actions of multinational companies that go into assisted areas of the United Kingdom which have been helped to grow by Government resources and close down profitable companies irrespective of the impact on the local economy? Ministers must have a view on such matters. I am asking for a value judgment. Do the Government find it acceptable and feel that it is all part of the play of market forces or do they say, "No, we do not like these activities"? I want an honest response about the Minister's position.

Mr. Evans: I gave the hon. Gentleman a fairly honest response previously. Although he is disappointed by the announcement, at least two hon. Members will have gained because new job opportunities have been announced in King's Lynn and in Stratford-on-Avon arising from those circumstances. With respect, I am showing sympathy for the predicament of the hon. Gentleman's constituents.

The hon. Gentleman has mentioned on previous occasions his concern about how takeover rules apply in such circumstances and I am aware of that.

The merger control procedures that we operate under the Fair Trading Act 1973 place a duty on the Director General of Fair Trading to advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on merger matters. The hon. Gentleman will know from his previous questions that the Director General of Fair Trading advises on whether a merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, but it has to be a qualifying merger. He will know that the general policy that the Government have adopted is to consider the impact of a proposal on the development of competition. That remains our broad policy.

In compiling his advice, the Director General of Fair Trading takes account of all relevant factors, including the views of third parties, but not all mergers are large enough to be considered by him under the Fair Trading Act: one of two tests has to be met. One is that the assets being acquired are worth at least £70 million.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: This is not relevant to Campbell Soups.

Mr. Evans: I am raising the matter with the hon. Gentleman because I am very much aware of the concern that he raised specifically in his press release, drawing attention to the impact of takeover rules. It is important for his constituents that I outline exactly what those rules are and explain that in the circumstances the tests were not satisfied for the merger control procedures to be activated.

The Director General of Fair Trading examined the matter before reaching the conclusion that it did not qualify and that under merger control procedures he was unable to make any recommendation to the Government. In those circumstances, the Government have no power to act or intervene.

Furthermore, I am aware of factors concerning the development of the soup market generally. The hon. Gentleman did not refer specifically to it, so I do not intend to deal with the Government's view of Campbell's role in the soup market.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Destructive.

Mr. Evans: I am aware that the hon. Gentleman feels that, as he represents the area that is most markedly affected.

In essence, the Government broadly sympathise with the hon. Gentleman's constituents. The training and enterprise council and the inward investment bodies in the north-west stand ready to assist in the development of new job opportunities in Maryport. Although I certainly recognise that the hon. Gentleman remains very worried about the activities of Campbell's, which acquired a plant and closed it down within two months, that is ultimately a matter for the commercial judgment of the company. It is not a matter in respect of which the Government are in a position to intervene.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-two minutes to Eleven o'clock.

Oral Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Authorities (Budgets)

1. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much more money would be available for schools if every education authority had a 95 per cent. delegated budget. [40039]

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mrs. Gillian Shephard): In 1995-96, some £650 million more would be in schools' budgets if every LEA were delegating 95 per cent. of its potential schools budget.

Mr. Evans: Does my right hon. Friend agree that, however much we spent on schools, members of the shadow Cabinet would still send their children to grant-maintained or private schools, while promoting policies that deprive working-class children and their families throughout the country of the same choice and opportunity?

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman should know by now that the Secretary of State is in charge of Government policy, not Opposition attitudes or policies. He must ask questions that enable the right hon. Lady to explain her policies to the House.

Mr. Evans: Will my right hon. Friend tell me, then, whether the leader of our party would send his child to the London Oratory school while telling all the kids in Islington to get stuffed?

Madam Speaker: I do my best.

Mrs. Shephard: So does my hon. Friend.

Unlike some Opposition Front Benchers, Conservative Members believe that grant-maintained schools provide diversity, choice and excellence. The point of my hon. Friend's question is that the money available for grant-maintained schools is not top sliced, so schools have the flexibility to handle all the resources to which they are entitled. It is that independence that makes them such a success, and so popular with parents—including those on the Opposition Front Bench.

Mr. O'Hara: Is not the truth behind the question that the real problem with education at present is central Government underfunding? Robbing Peter to pay Paul by diverting money from LEA budgets to delegated budgets would do nothing to stop those problems, but it would undermine core services such as those that deal with special educational needs—to which the Government pay cynical lip service—and advisory services, which are very important if the Government are serious about raising standards in schools.

Mrs. Shephard: I wonder whether I might gently point out to the hon. Gentleman that he is missing the point. He needs to understand that, if the total amount available to schools is top sliced by LEAs before budgets are set—which happens in many LEAs—schools receive less money. That is what the Labour party's policy fails to address.

Mr. Harry Greenway: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the policy of bringing grant-maintained schools within the ambit of local authorities would take away their independence and their drive for excellence in teaching? That is why that policy must be resisted strongly by the Conservative party and the Government.

Mrs. Shephard: As the right hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) has often pointed out, grant-maintained schools are state schools, but they receive 100 per cent. of their budgets rather than a percentage—however it is calculated—from LEAs. That gives them greater flexibility, and more independence to enable them to run their own affairs. That is what they prize, and what gives them quality.

School Funding

2. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received from local education authorities concerning the funding levels for schools in 1996-97. [40040]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. Robin Squire): Funding for schools is currently under consideration in the public expenditure survey. We have received a number of representations on levels of funding for 1996-97.

Mr. Ainsworth: The whole country knows that last year the Minister's policies deprived schools of £500 million, and led to the sacking of thousands of teachers. Does he intend to restore that money? If not, why not, and if so, why on earth was the action taken in the first place? Are we not in the same position? The Tory Government are cynically looking to cobble together a policy on a matter of public concern immediately before a general election.

Mr. Squire: As the House knows, I cannot comment on the detail of the public expenditure round for 1996-97; the hon. Gentleman and the House will have to be a little more patient and await its outcome. The hon. Gentleman has a short memory. I am pleased that, under this Government, we have significantly increased funding for education. Despite its fine words, when it was in power the Labour party cut education funding in real terms. Although the current year's settlement was tight, it was manageable, as has been shown by the fact that many local authorities have managed to fund in full the pay and price increases arising.

Mr. Viggers: Does my hon. Friend agree that for education establishments with a degree of independence—for example, St. Vincent college in my constituency, of which I happen to be chairman and which in the past two years has found funds for a splendid new library and refectory—hands-on management is good for facilities, for morale generally and for education standards?

Mr. Squire: My hon. Friend is right and I hope that the thrust of his point will be accepted on both sides of the Chamber because the success of local management of schools, of devolved budgets—we have already heard the advantages of grant-maintained schools—and the setting free of further education institutions has transformed those establishments and enabled them to achieve better value for money than under the previous system.

Mr. Don Foster: Will the Minister confirm that local authority associations have advised the Secretary of State for Education and Employment that, even before inflation and the future teachers' pay award is met, a £1.3 billion increase in local authority budgets is required to enable education provision to remain at a standstill? Will he confirm that, if the Chancellor of the Exchequer announces a budget increase of less than £1.3 billion, there will be real cuts in the education service?

Mr. Squire: I suppose that was a nice try, but the hon. Gentleman must understand that it is unrealistic to expect full uprating, year in, year out, for full pay and prices for organisations such as local authorities, which spend hundreds of millions of pounds a year. We expect them and other organisations to make efficiency savings, and we did so this year. If he is saying, in so many words, that he expects full uprating year in, year out for all these things, he is saying that there is no scope for efficiency savings, and that is why his party promises to tax much more.

Sir Alan Haselhurst: Does my hon. Friend accept that there may be pressure next year on primary schools, especially where reserves have been used properly in the last year, and that growing concern exists about the discrepancy, which has arisen since the introduction of the national curriculum, between funding per pupil in the last year at primary school and funding in the first year at secondary school? Will he bear those points in mind in the forthcoming settlement?

Mr. Squire: I will certainly bear my hon. Friend's points in mind and I emphasise that the attention that the Select Committee on Education paid to this point was reciprocated by the Government.

Mr. Spearing: Does the Minister agree that salaries for teachers constitute about 60 to 65 per cent. of local authority education expenditure? If the Government persist in the injustice of not funding the increase that was agreed this year, and if there is no scope for efficiency savings—and there will not be, since authorities have suffered cuts in previous years—will not the Government fail to provide the means for the ends that they specify? Will he name a single Conservative-controlled authority that did not complain about the injustice of funding this year?

Mr. Squire: On the hon. Gentleman's first point, if I cannot comment yet on the outcome of the 1996-97 settlement, it follows that I can comment even less on the outcome of the independent standing review body for teachers, beyond observing that, as in all past years, it will reach its conclusions in the knowledge of the settlement that has been announced. As for representations, without some notice obviously I cannot confirm to him what the comments of individual local education authorities have been.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Has my hon. Friend received any representations from Cheshire county council about the resources allocated to the education authority under the standard spending assessment, with particular reference to the fact that the area cost adjustment does not adequately reflect the costs incurred by my county? That view is shared across all the political parties in the county. Will my hon. Friend respond positively to my inquiry?

Mr. Squire: I can confirm that representations have been received. I can also confirm—it would be ungallant not to—that my hon. Friend has been indefatigable in pursuing this point with me in correspondence. I am sure that he will be pleased to hear that recently my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration announced a full-scale review of the operation of the area cost adjustment and its impact within the standard spending assessment.

Ms Estelle Morris: Does the Minister realise how complacent those answers must seem to parents whose children are already in classes of over 40? As the Government are so keen on league tables, is not the Minister ashamed that his education cuts have put Britain at the bottom of the education spending league? Can he explain how he suddenly managed to find millions of pounds for assisted places and nursery voucher paperwork when he could not raise an extra penny for what parents really want—reduced class sizes?

Mr. Squire: The House will note that, not for the first time, Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen are taking their cue from the National Union of Teachers. The hon. Lady could not be more wrong. The independent inspectorate, Ofsted, has confirmed that standards are rising at all ages. That is what parents want. They want to know that their children have the chance of a better education than they might otherwise have enjoyed. That is happening under this Government, as independent reports suggest. As the hon. Lady is aware, and as we have said many times, education receives the highest priority from the Government.

Spoken English

3. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to improve the standards of spoken English in schools. [40041]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I attach a great deal of importance to spoken English, on which I recently made an announcement.

Mr. Butler: I thank my right hon. Friend for that answer. I welcome the inclusion of a standard mark for spoken English in GCSE certificates in future. Does she accept that the English language, both written and spoken, is our greatest national heritage and that the ability to communicate, which is demonstrated occasionally even in the Chamber, is the most important tool for our young people in an increasingly competitive world?

Mrs. Shephard: Yes. It is obviously important that young people and adults should be able to express themselves clearly and comprehensibly and that they should be able to demonstrate that they can do so. As my hon. Friend points out, employers have complained that job applicants cannot always communicate clearly. That must be put right and the work of the new campaign group, and all the other measures that we have put in place, will help towards that end.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: How does it improve the standards of spoken English to impose on a county such as Warwickshire the financial crisis that it now faces in education? It faces the prospect of closing its nursery schools and of classes of over 40. Is that a record of which the Secretary of State is proud? What does she intend to do to improve the prospects of the children of Warwickshire?

Mrs. Shephard: The short answer is probably to elect a Conservative council. That was a nice try from the hon. Gentleman. As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary has just said, and as the chief inspector has consistently reported, there is no clear correlation between class size and quality and rising standards. I accept that very large classes are difficult to handle, but the inspector consistently provides contrary advice. The findings at Hackney Downs school, which I am minded to close and on which I am consulting, are interesting. Spending there is exactly two and a half times the national average per pupil and the pupil-teacher ratio is 8:1. I wonder what lessons the hon. Gentleman draws from that.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: Does my right hon. Friend agree that if improvements in the standards of spoken English are to be achieved, that will require an effort much wider than just from our schools? If the presenters of children's television programmes were to set an example to our young people—such as used to be set by Auntie Muriel—would not that be one step in the right direction?

Mrs. Shephard: I am not sure that even I can remember Auntie Muriel, although I am sure I should, but my hon. Friend's point is well made. Effort across the community is clearly necessary. That is the point of the work of the group that will be campaigning for better standards. Representatives from business, the media, trade unions, sport and education have already been signed up.

Education Funding (Northumberland)

4. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations she has received about education funding in Northumberland. [40042]

Mr. Robin Squire: On behalf of my right hon. Friend, I had a useful meeting with a delegation from Northumberland on 30 October to discuss education funding. We have also received a number of other representations.

Mr. Beith: Did the Minister understand from those representations the effect of standard spending assessments, the capping limit, the teachers' pay settlement and the problems of running an education service in a scattered rural area? Did he realise the desperate state to which those have reduced parents, governors and councillors of all parties, as they look to the hon. Gentleman to fight for an improvement in the funding for education in Northumberland after the Budget?

Mr. Squire: I confirm that some of the points mentioned by the right hon. Gentleman were raised at the meeting. I made the point then, and I repeat it now, that the one element within the standard spending assessment that is at a higher value than our research would indicate it merits is that for sparsity. That will be of particular benefit to a constituency such as the right hon. Gentleman's. I note that Northumberland, notwithstanding the difficulty of the settlement to which I previously referred, managed to increase its education spending this year.

Teachers (Maintained Sector)

5. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many extra teachers could be provided in the maintained sector by an input of £100 million. [40043]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mrs. Cheryl Gillan): The cost of employing the average teacher is about £25,000. That means £100 million would pay for about 4,000 extra teachers.

Mr. Jamieson: Is the Minister aware that parents are now beginning to realise that £100 million would provide another 4,000 teaching posts in LEA and grant-maintained schools? Is she further aware that parents are contrasting the approach of the Prime Minister, who put £100 million into extra places in private schools, with the approach of my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition, who has said that he would use that money to reduce class sizes in maintained schools?

Mrs. Gillan: The abolition of the assisted places scheme would not save £100 million as most of that money would be needed to pay for the children's education in state schools. If we spent £100 million in primary schools, it would reduce the average class size by only half a pupil.

Mr. Pawsey: Will my hon. Friend disregard the politics of envy from Opposition Members? Is she aware that about 750,000 of the nation's children are educated in grant-maintained schools and under the assisted places scheme? Is she further aware that one of those children happens to be the son of the leader of the Labour party?

Mrs. Gillan: I am aware of that fact. I hope that the parents of children on the assisted places scheme will note the Labour party's policy on that scheme. I remind the House of what my right hon. Friend said about class sizes. In Hackney Downs, the pupil-teacher ratio is 8:1 and the annual expenditure per pupil for the financial year 1995-96 is two and a half times that in GM schools. It is the quality of teaching that is important, not class sizes.

Mr. Blunkett: Will the Minister tell the nation whether she thinks that it is a good idea for 60,000 pupils to be assisted to escape from what the Deputy Prime Minister described as inadequate inner-city schools or whether, instead, 2 million infant children should be allowed to be educated in classes of no more than 30 so that they can learn to read, write and add up without suffering from the cuts inflicted by the Government—cuts that the Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire), when replying to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster), confirmed will once again be inflicted through reductions in revenue support grant and in other services if the Government go ahead with their Budget proposals, as outlined to the press, on 28 November?

Mrs. Gillan: It goes without saying that the assisted places scheme represents very good value for money. I remind the hon. Gentleman that, when Labour was last in power, there were twice as many pupils in primary classes of more than 35. Perhaps he should listen to voices such as those of Mr. Pollard of the Fabian Society, who has criticised the Leader of the Opposition for his policy to abolish assisted places.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: How much of the £100 million does my hon. Friend the Minister believe would get through to the schools to enable them to employ teachers? I cite the example of the Labour and Liberal Democrat-controlled Kent county council, which received a 2.1 per cent. increase in funding this year but nevertheless increased funding to Kent schools by only 1 per cent.

Mrs. Gillan: I hear what my hon. Friend says, and pupils, governors and teachers outside will do so too. We shall be doubling the assisted places scheme over time and there will, of course, be new money going into the scheme as well as the savings to the LEAs involved.

Unemployment

6. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people who are currently unemployed have been unemployed since April 1992. [40044]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that the number of people unemployed for three years and over is falling. It stands at 337,622.

Mr. David Shaw: This one is GMB sponsored.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have heard enough of the hon. Gentleman. I shall deal with him on the next occasion. I want no parrot-fashion talk here. He will resume his seat; otherwise, I shall use the Standing Order against him.

Mrs. Prentice: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Does the Secretary of State feel no shame that more than 330,000 people have been and remain unemployed during the lifetime of this Government? Is she aware that another 8.5 million people have become unemployed twice in that time? Is not it time that the Secretary of State began to do something about long-term unemployment and insecurity at work, instead of continuing with the self-congratulatory tone that is a shameful characteristic of Conservative government?

Mrs. Shephard: I am rather surprised that the hon. Lady does not express her delight about the fact that unemployment in her constituency has come down by 8 per cent. in the past year—what a pity. Clearly, I accept that unemployment, and especially long-term unemployment, is an extremely demoralising experience. Thankfully, the unemployed are not a static mass. Most people leave unemployment very quickly—half of them do so within three months, two thirds within six months and 80 per cent. within a year. However, it is clearly important to continue to push the trend downwards. We are committed to reducing long-term unemployment. We have a wide range of programmes to help the long-term unemployed and many have successful outcomes.

Mr. John Marshall: Will my right hon. Friend confirm that the participation rate in the United Kingdom is very much higher than in almost any other European country? Will she also confirm that unemployment is very much lower in this country than in Spain, which follows the policies proposed the Opposition?

Mrs. Shephard: Yes, I can confirm that in the United Kingdom the proportion of people of working age in employment is, at 68 per cent., very much higher than the EC average of 60 per cent. That is partly because of the pursuit by some of our European partners of mistaken policies embraced by the Labour party, such as a national minimum wage, which causes unemployment. Any fool knows that, as the right hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) once memorably said.

Mr. Meacher: Was it not the Prime Minister who, in a speech on 7 April 1992 entitled "Ten Tory Truths for a Glorious Future", urged people to vote Conservative on Thursday and the recovery will continue on Friday? How does the right hon. Lady explain that, despite all the programmes to which she has just referred, more than a third of a million people have been continuously unemployed every day since the election? That is an increase of 128,000 since April 1992. Is not that yet another Tory broken promise? Far from producing a recovery, the Prime Minister has brought about the most massive increase in job insecurity since the war.

Mrs. Shephard: I welcome the hon. Member to the Dispatch Box. I am not quite sure in what role he appears—it does not seem evident to his hon. Friends—but his smiling demeanour is always a pleasure. I am surprised that, on his first appearance in his new role, he did not join me in welcoming the news that unemployment has fallen for 24 consecutive months and is now at its lowest point for four and a half years. I am sure that he will put that right next time.

7. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what comparisons she has made between the United Kingdom's record on reducing unemployment and that of other major EU countries. [40135]

The Minister of State, Department for Education and Employment (Mr. Eric Forth): The United Kingdom is the only major European Union country in which unemployment is lower than it was three years ago.

Mr. Bellingham: Will my hon. Friend confirm that in the country as a whole, and, indeed, in my constituency, unemployment has fallen dramatically over the past two years? Does not that compare favourably with France and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) pointed out, Spain, where unemployment runs at 22 per cent., but where youth unemployment, largely because of the minimum wage, stands at almost 40 per cent? When unemployment was going up, the Labour party complained and whined, but will my hon.

Friend explain why, now that it is coming down, the Labour party is still complaining, whining, whingeing, and running Britain down?

Mr. Forth: Yes, my hon. Friend is right. He is at least more gracious than Labour Members to welcome the fall in unemployment in his constituency, which, as he points out, has been substantial not only over the past year but over the past several years. That is in contrast to Labour Members who—again my hon. Friend is right—persistently ignore the fall in unemployment, because, I suspect, they are embarrassed by it politically. The real truth is that our record of performance on unemployment—long-term unemployment, youth unemployment or unemployment among men or women—is better than that in most other European Union countries. That speaks volumes for our labour market policies and the strength of our economy.

Mr. Grocott: Instead of comparing unemployment rates in Britain and other countries of Europe, would not it be much more illuminating to compare unemployment rates under this Tory Government with those under Labour Governments of the 1960s and 1970s? Does the Minister recall, as I do, the job opportunities for school leavers in the 1960s and 1970s and the abundance of apprenticeships? In order to be precise about the extent of Tory failure, will he answer the following question? How many more years would it be necessary for present policies to continue for unemployment to fall to its level under Labour?

Mr. Forth: I am glad that the hon. Gentleman asked that question because in 1979—I pick the date more or less at random—UK unemployment was just below the average in the then European Community. Unemployment in this country today is substantially lower than the European Union average. I accept that the figure is higher now for the rest of Europe and for this country than it was in 1979. That says a lot about the difficulties of the global trading economy, but this country has sustained its record of keeping our unemployment rate below the European rate and has performed better on unemployment than our European partners.

Mr. Tredinnick: Will my hon. Friend confirm that unemployment in Leicestershire has been falling in the past two years? Is it not a fact that, not only in Spain but in Belgium, Italy, Germany and Portugal, unemployment is increasing? What impact would a minimum wage have in this country?

Mr. Forth: I am sure that my hon. Friend's constituents not only appreciate the fact that unemployment is falling but understand that our social chapter opt-out has given us protection against the high-cost regime which prevails in so much of the continental mainland and which, sadly, makes so many of our competitors and partners less competitive than we are. That is understood much more by my hon. Friend's constituents than it ever seems to be by the Opposition.

Mr. Janner: The Government do recognise that the current unemployment figures are open to question, to put it mildly, and have asked someone called David Steel to report to them by the end of January on the way in which unemployment figures are produced and on whether the method can be improved. As the Government have seen fit to attempt to abolish the Select Committee on Employment at the end of February or on 1 March, may we at least have a guarantee that the report will be out and available to the House, as promised, by the end of January?

Mr. Forth: I am surprised, given the hon. and learned Gentleman's position on the Select Committee on Employment, that he is attempting to peddle the sad old story about the inaccuracy of the unemployment figures. He should know as well as I do—he obviously does not—that all the different measures of unemployment, including those internationally accepted by the International Labour Organisation and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, well demonstrate that the level of unemployment is what it is, that it is on a downward trend and that it compares favourably with the level in any of the countries that are our partners and competitors. Until the hon. and learned Gentleman accepts that fact, we shall not get much further.

Mr. Day: Will my hon. Friend take note that, whenever the unemployment figures come down, the Labour party questions the method by which they are calculated? Has he noticed that, when unemployment rises, Labour Members say that the figures are accurate? They cannot have it both ways. Can they not accept that this Government's policies are working?

Mr. Forth: I am grateful to my hon. Friend; what he describes appears to be the case. Opposition Members must sort out in their own minds what they accept in terms of a measurement of unemployment—the internationally accepted figures to which I referred a moment ago or something else. They would be much better advised to welcome the success we have enjoyed in recent years in bringing unemployment down, although, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has said, we are by no means satisfied by the level. We have many innovative programmes in place to try to help people, especially those who suffer from long-term unemployment. These are working and will continue to work.

Craft Apprenticeships

8. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many craft apprenticeships were offered in the United Kingdom in the last year. [40045]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. James Paice): Information on the number of craft apprenticeships offered during the year is not collected.

Mr. Touhig: Craft apprenticeships were once the core of British industry. In 1965, British industry offered 125,000 craft apprenticeships; they have now all but disappeared. The result is a skills shortage which is harming our economic recovery. Will the Under-Secretary explain why Britain is experiencing a massive decline in skills training? Will he comment on an article in the Industrial Relations Journal which says that the Government have become increasingly less helpful in supporting craft apprenticeships and that Tory Governments are concerned about craft apprenticeships because they associate them with the craft unions? Is this another example of Tory right-wing dogma harming British industry and threatening the skills of our work force?

Mr. Paice: I am afraid that it is a clear example of the hon. Gentleman not having done his homework properly. The fact is that he asked how many craft apprenticeships were offered. Those statistics are not and, to the best of my knowledge, never have been collected. If the hon. Gentleman had asked how many people were on craft apprenticeships at any particular time, I would have told him. The most recent labour force survey, in spring this year, showed that 191,000 people declared themselves to be on apprenticeships and that, of those people, 101,000 were on craft apprenticeships. The labour force survey is the means by which the measurements are collected, and it has been for many years.

Mr. James Hill: Does my hon. Friend agree that some of the decline in the building industry could be put down to bad workmanship resulting from the lack of a thoroughgoing apprenticeship scheme? Such an apprentice scheme was the backbone of the building industry at one time. Is there any way in which we can encourage more apprenticeships in the building industry?

Mr. Paice: My hon. Friend will be aware that the building industry is the only remaining industry with a compulsory levy and a statutory training board, and apprenticeships are still offered in all aspects of the construction industry. The real problem is not the absence of apprenticeships but the trend towards more subcontract work throughout the industry. That matter is now being addressed by the construction industry training board as it reviews its training programmes.

Mr. Byers: The Minister failed to refer to the Government's modern apprenticeship scheme in relation to craft apprenticeships. Was that because of the widespread failure to recruit due to weaknesses in the scheme, with only 4,000 places being filled nationally? Does the Minister acknowledge that training and enterprise councils have had their budgets cut by some £200 million this year? How will a combination of a lack of apprenticeships and training budget cuts give our people the skills they need to get them back into work and to bring prosperity back to this country?

Mr. Paice: I welcome the hon. Gentleman to the Opposition Front Bench. His appointment perhaps accounts for the vast number of questions that he constantly tables on these issues, despite the fact that virtually all the information that he requests is available in the Library.

I did not refer to modern apprenticeships, because nobody asked me about them. I am glad that the hon. Gentleman asked me about the scheme, because it did not go unnoticed that he tabled a question yesterday about the number of modern apprenticeship starts. The hon. Gentleman failed to point out that the figure of 4,000 starts was for the first month of the scheme—it had only just started. There is absolutely no evidence to substantiate his totally unjustified challenge, and the reality is that a vast number of employers are keen to take on employees. The hon. Gentleman knows as well as I do that the Government hope to get about 30,000 starts in the current year. That statement is already on the public record, and I am happy to reaffirm it to the hon. Gentleman.

As for cuts for TECs, the hon. Gentleman needs to do his homework better. There have been no cuts in the budgets for modern apprenticeships and youth training.

Mr. Bill Walker: Does my hon. Friend agree that any decline in craft apprenticeships and training occurred during the years when the smokestack and labour-intensive industries were phased out and when the Labour party, in collusion with the unions, forced the wages of apprentices to levels that made their employment no longer viable?

Mr. Paice: My hon. Friend is quite right. Most reasonable people agree that the wages of people who are learning should be commensurate to their status, but that, as they develop and improve—[Interruption.] On the subject of learning, I am pleased to welcome the right hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott), as he might learn something. The right hon. Gentleman said that any fool knows that a minimum wage will cause a shake-out, and that is precisely the problem to which my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) is referring. If there is a minimum wage which applies to everybody regardless of skill levels, how does one address the need for differentials for those people who have been through apprenticeships? The Opposition have failed year in, year out to answer that question about their minimum wage proposals.

Economic Regeneration, Wolverhampton

9. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what contribution her Department is able to make to economic regeneration in the travel-to-work area containing British Steel Tubes Division, Wolverhampton. [40046]

Mr. Paice: This Department makes a major contribution through the activities of the Employment Service and Wolverhampton training and enterprise council, which has formed a task force with other bodies to help those who are made redundant by British Steel.

Mr. Purchase: That is welcome, but does the Minister not understand that, by Christmas, 1,000 more people in Wolverhampton will lose their jobs at British Steel, Manders Paints and Edge Shoes, with all that that means to those workers and their families? Does he think that it would be meaningful to make a special contribution to the local partnership that we have formed so that we can investigate fully, question and, if necessary, fight those closures and so that we can help those workers who may well be displaced at the end of this particular debacle?

Mr. Paice: I am sure that everybody understands the sadness of people who lose their jobs. I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's concern, which he has explained on a number of occasions in the House. It is not for me or the Government to question the commercial judgment of the businesses which employed those people. We have to recognise that the redundancies take place against a background of falling unemployment in the hon. Gentleman's constituency: it has fallen by almost 1,000 in the past year. He will be aware that Wolverhampton has succeeded in the first round of the single regeneration budget in obtaining an extra £16.5 million to be spent in the area. Of course, there are other businesses taking on new staff. The hon. Gentleman should recognise the good things that are happening, not just the bad things.

Mr. Budgen: I congratulate my hon. Friend on the sympathetic way in which he deals with this sad situation. Will he point out that, in the past two years, Wolverhampton has enjoyed a considerable increase in prosperity, particularly in the metal bashing industry, which has enjoyed an enormous increase in exports directly as a result of the depreciation of the currency which followed the events of September 1992?

Mr. Paice: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his words. I can count on him always to introduce the European dimension into any question. I am pleased to hear what he has to say about Wolverhampton.

PRIME MINISTER

Unemployment (European Union)

Q1. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the implications of the level of unemployment in the EU. [40127]

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Michael Heseltine): I have been asked to reply.

I can confirm that employment and unemployment in the European Union will be on the agenda for the next European Council in Madrid in December.

Sir Teddy Taylor: Will my right hon. Friend insist that the Council gives urgent attention to the forgotten army of 18.5 million unemployed in the European Union, a total which has soared by 5 million in the past three years? In particular, could he tell our friends in France, who are at present creating extra unemployment on top of a 12 per cent. total by setting artificial exchange rates, that they could learn a great deal from Britain, which escaped from the exchange rate mechanism and the social chapter and has found that unemployment has been falling ever since?

The Deputy Prime Minister: My hon. Friend makes a most valuable contribution, particularly when he points out that this Government will not accept the social chapter, and neither will we impose the overheads of a minimum wage on the competitive manufacturing base that we have here today. The whole House can welcome the fact that unemployment in this country is down by 713,400 since December 1992.

Mr. Hutton: On the subject of unemployment within the European Union, does the Deputy Prime Minister recognise it as a fact that, since 1979, the United Kingdom has had the third highest unemployment rate within the European Union? When will he drop the damaging dogma of his party and start to work with our European partners to tackle the scandal and the waste of almost 20 million people unemployed in Europe?

The Deputy Prime Minister: It is very convenient for the hon. Gentleman to choose 1979, when we had to start the process of undoing the stranglehold that the trade unions had on the British economy, of privatising the industries that are now leading the British recovery across the world and of creating in this country the enterprise centre of Europe, all in the teeth of Labour party opposition.

Engagements

Q2. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 November. [40128]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is travelling to New Zealand to attend the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting.

Mr. Evans: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the most significant vote last night was that passed by 587 votes to two, which bans paid advocacy, which was the recommendation of the Select Committee on Standards in Public Life and went further than the Nolan committee, and contrasts sharply with the sheer stench of trade union-sponsored humbug on the Opposition Benches?

The Deputy Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is absolutely right in pointing out the justification for the determination of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to set up the Nolan committee so that the House would have an opportunity to deal with the matter of restoring public confidence in the House. It was my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister who ensured that such matters were thoroughly and comprehensively considered. The work was carried out by an independent committee. As a result, the House was able to pass by an overwhelming majority the far-reaching change to which my hon. Friend has drawn attention.

Mr. Prescott: Does the right hon. Gentleman accept that he and the Prime Minister were completely out of step with public opinion in wanting to keep the outside earnings of Members of Parliament secret? Does he share my sense of outrage that some Conservative Members are already making it clear that they will not observe the decision of the House? Will he make it clear that that would be totally unacceptable to him and the Prime Minister?

The Deputy Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman raises a most important question for the House. I can say unreservedly on behalf of the Prime Minister and myself, since he asked me specifically, that both of us believe that it is right for all right hon. and hon. Members to enter into the spirit of the letter of the decisions taken yesterday evening. That was the will of the House. As to what the House should determine to do in the event of any right hon. and hon. Member not making such a decision, that is properly a matter for the House of Commons.

Mr. Prescott: In view of his reply, will the right hon. Gentleman now ask the Prime Minister to reconsider his rejection of Labour's proposal to refer the funding of political parties to the Nolan committee? Is it not time that the Prime Minister came clean on where his party gets his money, or has the Tory party got something else to hide?

The Deputy Prime Minister: Of course, we all know that the Opposition want to pass the cost of party politics on to the taxpayer. They want one-track Members of Parliament with no outside interests and who are totally beholden to the party Whips, with all the draconian centralisation of power that that would represent. That would be a wholly alien development in the constitutional history of this country.

Mr. Prescott: Why cannot the public know where the Tory party gets its money? Who has paid for a knighthood? Who has bought a peerage? And which foreign business men have bankrolled the party, fleeing the country? I ask him again, what has his party got to hide?

The Deputy Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman is up to the sort of sleazy politics characteristic of the Labour party. The fact of the matter is that his party has sold out hook, line and sinker to the trade unions—it always has. He is the first person to complain that he has to ring up trade union leaders to ask their permission before he takes a simple decision on behalf of the Labour party.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: Does my right hon. Friend agree that, however hon. Members may have voted in the Divisions last night, those who seek to gain party advantage from the issue simply demean the institution that they claim to honour?

The Deputy Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is right, but he characterises the Labour party in too generous terms. It is undermining the credibility of this House by constantly criticising the performance of a tiny number of right hon. and hon. Members. The fact of the matter is that the overwhelming majority of people who come into this House are motivated by the highest standards of public service.

Mr. Beith: Now that the House has made an important decision, with the votes of hon. Members in all parties, on the conduct of Members of Parliament, would the Deputy Prime Minister move the agenda on to the other things that would make Parliament more relevant to the lives of people, such as electoral reform—because that would make far more difference to the lives of people than even the decisions we made last night—or will he do as the Prime Minister did last night and attach his cause to the side which in the end will lose?

The Deputy Prime Minister: The right hon. Member may see that as moving the agenda on; I would regard it as moving it back into a wholly unacceptable dark age.

Social Chapter

Q3. Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to rewrite the social chapter of the EU. [40129]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister rejected a new social chapter at Maastricht because it would have reduced competitiveness and destroyed jobs. The Government will not accept it, or anything like it, at next year's intergovernmental conference.

Sir Ralph Howell: I thank my right hon. Friend for that reply. In view of the fact that the social chapter has few friends in the House except on the Labour Front Bench, would it not be constructive for the Government to produce a more acceptable alternative social chapter? Will my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister urge the Government to make the Right to Work Bill the cornerstone of that new social chapter to eliminate involuntary unemployment and save £5 billion per annum in this country alone?

The Deputy Prime Minister: I know that my hon. Friend brings a particular expertise to this subject and there is a great deal to which we should listen in what he has to say. I know that he will welcome the introduction of the earnings top-up scheme, which is designed to help people move into and stay in work without the burden of a minimum wage, and he also will look forward to the introduction next year of the jobseeker's allowance.

Mr. Keith Hill: Will the right hon. Gentleman confirm that, in the absence of the social chapter, Britain has the longest working hours, the fewest holidays, the poorest pensions, the lowest wages and the highest levels of job insecurity of all the leading nations of Europe? Which of those facts does the right hon. Gentleman deny, and do they not explain why the British people are longing for a Labour Government with our promise to bring in the social chapter?

The Deputy Prime Minister: What the hon. Gentleman does not recognise is that Britain has one of the fastest falling levels of unemployment and one of the fastest growing economies in Europe. What he threatens by his proposals is that the flood of inward investment coming here, not only from north America and Asia but from Europe itself, would come to a halt if Labour threw away the competitive advantages that our economy possesses.

Engagements

Q4. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 November. [40130]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Alexander: Does my right hon. Friend recollect that tomorrow the new Gas Act is likely to receive Royal Assent? I remind him that, by opening the market to competition, new entrants are likely to come in and that standing charges in that industry are likely to be a thing of the past in a couple of year's time. As standing charges are widely resented by the elderly and those on fixed incomes, will he urge British Gas and the other utilities to start abolishing those charges now, before competition and a change in the law oblige them to do so?

The Deputy Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is absolutely right in drawing the attention of the House to the fact that the privatisation programme, and that includes British Gas, has, of course, been a triumph for British consumers. The fact is that competition has cut prices for gas consumers; standing charges are down by 29 per cent. since privatisation; gas prices are down by over 20 per cent. since privatisation; and the legislation to which my hon. Friend referred has already led to the possibility of experiments in the south-west. I read in this week's newspapers that perhaps another 10 to 15 per cent.

will come off the prices to the domestic consumer as a result of that enhanced competition. What that all stands for is that the Conservative Government, by privatising these industries, have not only created world-class companies but served the consumer in a way that nationalisation could never have begun to do.

Q5. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 November. [40131]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave some moments ago.

Mrs. Roche: Given that, in the United States of America, it is illegal for foreign nationals to make donations to political parties, why do the Government not introduce the same legislation here? Are the Deputy Prime Minister and the whole of the Conservative Government frightened to let the British people see how the modern Conservative party is funded?

The Deputy Prime Minister: I know of no restriction in this country that says that foreign nationals who are members of trade unions cannot give money to trade unions, which is then directed to the Labour party.

Mr. Quentin Davies: Does my right hon. Friend agree that, if investment is to thrive, costs must be kept down and business taxes kept low? Does he therefore agree that it would be a disaster for investment, and therefore for our prospects for growth and employment in the future, if the Labour party were able to implement its plans to allow local authorities to fix their own business rates?

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Labour party in power has always put up costs, prices and taxes. Whether it is a national Labour Government or local Labour government, the same process is at work. In either case, it would be a disaster for Britain's investment potential.

Q6. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 November. [40133]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Jones: Will the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Prime Minister when he returns what is the precise role of the Deputy Prime Minister? It seems to be costing £40,000 a month for the Deputy Prime Minister to answer even fewer questions than his right hon. Friend.

The Deputy Prime Minister: Just the other day, people were complaining because I had brought £1 billion of Siemens investment to the north-east. I think that I am cheap at the price.

Madam Speaker's Statement

3.31 pm

Madam Speaker: I have a short statement to make.

The hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) recently made serious allegations against parliamentary colleagues. He later withdrew the accusation made yesterday against the hon. Member for Barking (Ms Hodge). I asked him to provide written details of his earlier charge against the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) and he has now done so. I have studied what he says with care, and I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to look into the aspect that concerns the use of stationery. Whatever the outcome of that inquiry, I do not believe that any of the facts laid before me sustain the charge of corruption in the use of parliamentary facilities.

Free speech is one of this House's most treasured possessions. For that reason, it must be used responsibly and not abused.

The hon. Member for Dover should take careful note of that in future. I would prefer his co-operation in this matter than to be compelled to any more drastic course of action.

Points of Order

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Some hon. Members have drawn a distinction between statute law as such and complying with resolutions of the House. Are the resolutions passed last night to be implemented and honoured? Is it not the case that, if a resolution of the House is passed, it has all the authority of the House of Commons and there can therefore be no excuse whatever for any hon. Member to argue that, because it is not statute law, it has no bearing on him or her?

Madam Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is asking me hypothetical questions at this stage. It remains to be seen how we begin to implement the resolutions that we accepted last night.

BILLS PRESENTED

METRICATION (REMOVAL OF PENALTIES)

Sir Roger Moate presented a Bill to amend the Weights and Measures Act 1985 so as to remove any criminal penalty upon persons using imperial measures unless it is proved that such use was intended for fraudulent purposes: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time tomorrow and to be printed. [Bill 192.]

FAMILY HOMES AND DOMESTIC VIOLENCE (NO.2)

Mrs. Diana Maddock, supported by Mr. A. J. Beith, Ms Liz Lynne, Mr. David Rendel, Mr. Archy Kirkwood, Mr. Chris Davies, Mrs. Ray Michie, Mr. Charles Kennedy, Mr. David Chidgey and Mr. James Wallace, presented a Bill to make provision, in relation to cases where a dwelling-house is, has been, or was intended to be, the home of two or more persons, as to their respective rights of occupation; to make provision for preventing the molestation of one person by another; to enable a court to include in certain orders under the Children Act 1989 provision relating to the occupation of a dwelling-house; to make provision for the transfer of tenancies between spouses and persons who have lived together as husband and wife; to apply section 17 of the Married Women's Property Act 1882 to persons who live together as husband and wife; and for connected purposes: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time tomorrow and to be printed. [Bill 193.]

Patients Rights

3.33 pm

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): I beg to move,

That leave be given to bring in a Bill to give patients certain rights in their dealings with general practitioners.

My Bill would extend the patients charter to give patients certain rights in their dealings with general practitioners. Those rights would include a requirement for GPs in a practice of four or more, where a doctor-patient relationship has broken down, first, to offer a patient a second chance to stay in that practice by counselling that patient and issuing a warning that that behaviour will not be tolerated in the case of bad behaviour or, secondly, to offer the patient the right to visit another doctor in the same practice. Thirdly, if no other GP in the practice is willing to take the patient, the patients charter should include a requirement that patients be given reasons in writing stating why they are being removed from a GP's list.

This is not a doctor-bashing Bill. I have the greatest respect for our GP service and I recognise the dedication, skill and professionalism of our doctors. However, I believe that there is an injustice against patients and I am sure that, if good will and tolerance were shown by all sides, that injustice might be rectified.

Self-evidently, a good doctor-patient relationship must be based on mutual trust and respect. At present, GPs have the right to request that any patient be removed from their list, and that doctor is under no obligation to say why.

The consequences of such actions can be very far-reaching indeed. For example, if the patient belonged to a large practice, losing his and his family's right to be registered with their nearest GPs might be extremely inconvenient and might involve lengthy travelling, which obviously incurs extra costs.

I have a constituent who was struck off—she believes, for contacting her doctor at 8 o'clock at night to ask him to attend a fairly sick five-year-old. The doctor refused, but the child was admitted to hospital the same evening. The mother and the family were struck off, and now she must travel three miles with her youngest children to the next practice. Her youngest child needs to visit a doctor regularly, and that low-income family has been penalised by a doctor who, I believe, knew that he was wrong not to visit the child and covered his action by striking the whole family off his list.

I know that that is not the usual practice, but that family was never told why it had been struck off. Surely a much better outcome would have been for other doctors in the same practice to take on responsibility for that family.

Another consequence of being struck off a doctor's list without being given a reason is the great hurt that is felt by many people when they are.

Another constituent told me that she rarely visited a doctor, but that when she did on one occasion, the receptionist mistook her for someone else and a few words were exchanged. Realising the mistake, my constituent drew attention to it—fairly calmly, she claims—and made an appointment to visit her doctor, only to receive a letter two days later, telling her that she had been struck off. She told me that at first she felt anger at the injustice and then she experienced a loss of confidence and a feeling of humiliation. She said that she would be very reluctant to visit a doctor again, however ill she felt.

Another constituent, a very brave 86-year-old, Mrs. Marion Greenwood, a pensioner, was struck off her doctor's list when she was ill. Her daughter, who lives with her, called the GP out when her mother became ill. The GP was angry because it was in the evening and was quite cross with the old lady. Mrs. Greenwood was admitted to hospital a couple of days later in a critical condition. While in hospital, she received a letter from her GP, telling her that she was being struck off and that she should find another doctor. I could go on reciting case after case, but time will not allow.

Obviously, there are instances when GPs have a legitimate right to say, "I personally cannot treat this patient any more." The following reasons were outlined in the advice given by the General Medical Services Committee last year as acceptable reasons for striking patients off a register.

A patient may be struck off if there is violent or threatening behaviour towards a doctor and his family, but even then, the GMSC believes that GPs should use their clinical judgment to determine whether a patient's violent behaviour results from his or her medical condition, and that if the patient is mentally ill, consideration should be given to the condition of that patient.

Other reasons for striking off might be a complete breakdown of the doctor-patient relationship, such as might occur if scurrilous, unfounded allegations were made against a doctor, or prescription fraud or the persistent breaking of appointments, which did not improve after a warning. However, the advice from the GMSC is not firm enough and weighs heavily in the doctor's favour.

There is growing support for my view. The Association of Health Councils in England and Wales is concerned that patients may be removed from lists simply for making a complaint. One woman told me that she was suffering from a back injury and took her son along to the doctor's receptionist. She could not sit down because of her injury. She was told that she might have to wait and the receptionist asked her to sit down. The woman said that she could not and would prefer to stand. Three days later she received a letter striking her off the doctor's list. I saw the letter and the only indication of why she had been struck off was the sentence that stated:

> "We hope when you find a new GP there will be comfortable chairs in his waiting room."

That is clearly another exceptional case, but it is unacceptable and exposes the inadequacy of the existing legislation. The woman was struck off the list for something trivial.

There is a growing perception that clients are being removed from GPs' lists because their treatment is too costly. The advent of the internal market and GP fundholding has fuelled that perception. Unfortunately, information on the number of patients being removed from lists at the request of doctors has been available from the Department of Health only since 1992-93. In that year, the total for England was more than 78,000. Those figures do not differentiate between GP fundholders and non-fundholders, so there is no hard and fast evidence.

[Mrs. Alice Mahon]

However, there is anecdotal evidence that GP fundholders do not want patients whose care is too costly. The Association of Health Councils in England and Wales has expressed concern. Yesterday we learnt that a doctor in Wales intended to strike eight children off his list to increase his practice income by £2,000. Clearly, that has to stop. It is simply not good enough for the Department of Health to talk about unacceptable behaviour. We are entitled to ask what the Department will do about it.

Patients trust doctors less because of the introduction of GP fundholding. They are now, almost daily, made aware of the cost of treatment. Where once a clinical decision was given and accepted, there now lurks a suspicion that a treatment might be advised against owing to the cost. The vital ingredient of trust between patient and doctor is being seriously undermined, which is one reason why it is essential to end GP fundholding.

If implemented, the Bill, which contains moderate measures, could provide the first step towards restoring the trust between patients and their GPs, and I commend it to the House.

3.43 pm

Sir Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): I have considerable sympathy with much of what the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) has said. I do not wish to call a Division, but I want to raise one valid point.

Our procedure in the House confuses people outside. It is always a pity to excite expectations that one can never fulfil. There is a problem in allowing ten-minute Bills to be introduced within 18 hours of the Prorogation of Parliament. There is no chance of the hon. Lady's Bill, however worthy, passing on to the statute book. It is important for us to put down a marker on the subject.

I hope that the powers that be—the appropriate Committee—will consider whether or not it would be sensible to stop the ten-minute Bill procedure a few weeks before the Prorogation of Parliament, perhaps providing a half-hour Adjournment debate on a Wednesday morning for the purpose. The hon. Lady's speech would have been ideally suited for such a debate.

I shall not oppose the hon. Lady's leave to bring in her Bill now, but it is a pity that the procedure of the House is allowed to operate in this way.

Question put, pursuant to Standing Order No. 19 (Motions for leave to bring in Bills and nomination of Select Committees at commencement of public business), and agreed to.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Mrs. Alice Mahon, Mrs. Ann Clwyd, Mr. Harry Barnes, Mr. Eddie Loyden, Ms Jean Corston, Mr. Neil Gerrard, Mr. Alan Simpson, Mr. Gerry Sutcliffe, Mrs. Audrey Wise, Mr. John Gunnell, Mr. Dennis Skinner and Mr. Malcolm Chisholm.

PATIENTS RIGHTS

Mrs. Alice Mahon accordingly presented a Bill to give patients certain rights in their dealings with general practitioners: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time tomorrow and to be printed. [Bill 194.]

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. As you know, it is a long-standing convention that an hon. Member who opposes a ten-minute Bill is supposed to follow his voice with his vote. I did not hear anyone shout "No".

What is more, the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South (Sir P. Cormack) said that it would be a good idea to get rid of ten-minute Bills so close to the end of the Session. As you know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Back Benchers have lost opportunities to speak on various issues on a number of occasions in recent years. The ten-minute Bill provides hon. Members with an ideal opportunity to advance propositions, although they may not become law. I hope that you will not give consideration to the hon. Gentleman's suggestion, or pass it on.

I should also like to know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, your view of an hon. Member who opposes a ten-minute Bill while making it abundantly clear that he has no interest in voting against it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): I refer the hon. Gentleman to page 464 of "Erskine May", on which all will be revealed. It explains that an hon. Member may speak against a ten-minute Bill, but need not voice a "No" when the Question is put.

Orders of the Day

Criminal Injuries Compensation Bill

Lords amendments considered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Before I call the Minister, I must make an announcement. Madam Speaker has accepted a manuscript amendment in the name of the right hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair), of which copies are available in the Vote Office and the Division Lobbies.

Clause 2

BASIS ON WHICH COMPENSATION IS TO BE CALCULATED

Lords amendment: No. 1, in page 2, line 11, at end insert

("or otherwise determined in accordance with the Scheme")

3.47 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. David Maclean): I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): With this, it will be convenient to discuss Lords amendment No. 2.

Mr. Maclean: Lords amendment No. 1 makes it clear beyond doubt that the scheme may provide for awards in fatal cases to include, in addition to the fixed-tariff award, additional amounts calculated in accordance with the scheme. That will allow payment to be made for such other elements as reasonable funeral expenses, loss of dependency and loss of parental support. Those elements are not fixed or specified, so provision could not be made for them under subsection (2)(d) as it originally stood. They will be calculated by reference to the circumstances of the case, rather than on the basis of the fixed tariff. The amendment simply ensures that such payments can properly be made.

Let me now deal with Lords amendment No. 2. On introduction, clause 3(1)(c) enabled provision to be included in the scheme in regard to repayment of compensation for breach of conditions subject to which an award was made. However, the scheme also needs to include provision for repayment in other circumstances, such as when the applicant receives compensation from other sources in respect of the same criminal injury, and when that other compensation was not taken into account when the award was made from our scheme. That simply replicates the situation under the present scheme, and is intended to prevent the applicant from receiving compensation twice for the same injury. As originally drafted, the Bill would not have allowed a provision to be included in the scheme providing for such recovery; it accordingly needed to be amended to permit recovery in those wider circumstances.

Mr. Alun Michael (Cardiff, South and Penarth): I am particularly grateful to the Minister for accepting Lords amendment No. 1, which we pursued in the House. It makes the position clear beyond doubt in allowing awards in fatal cases to include funeral expenses and expenses incurred by loss of dependency and loss of parental support.

Will the Minister clarify the way in which the power conferred by Lords amendment No. 2 will be exercised? I understand the intention of the amendment, which is to ensure that money can be reclaimed.

I was hoping that the Minister would answer my question, but I apologise for interrupting the conversation that is taking place on the Government Front Bench.

It is obviously right to deal with cases in which there has been an oversight or a lack of information at the time when an award was made, so that no deduction has been made for the availability of compensation elsewhere; but the provision could also be used in "blanket" ways, and inappropriate amounts could be deducted. Will the Minister therefore clarify how the retrospective power that is given under the amendment will be used in practice? Will the ways in which it is to be used be specified in the scheme, to be published shortly in its final form?

Mr. Maclean: No retrospection is intended. In the present scheme, no one is compensated twice: that is a normal rule of government, the law and insurance law in particular. We never intended that, under the new tariff scheme, someone could receive double compensation. All the amendment does is clarify the law and ensure that the same rule as operated by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board is carried forward into the tariff scheme. In practice, it will operate in exactly the same way as at present.

No blanket retrospection is applied—I do not know how that could apply. We should bear it in mind that, even moving as quickly as possible, it takes some time to process awards. The board and those operating the tariff scheme will want to receive full information on the means and situation of the victim and on any other income, expenses or money that he acquires. If they find that someone is receiving a full insurance pay-out, or, properly, that the criminal has been ordered to pay compensation to the victim and there is a compensation order against the criminal, so that the victim has received money from the criminal offender, they will reduce the award or not pay it. We are not, however, applying the provision retrospectively to take money back from people who have been properly paid. It merely continues the normal system.

Clause 5

APPEALS

Lords amendment: No. 3, in page 3, line 42, at end insert

("except so far as the provision relates to functions of persons mentioned in subsection (3)(d)(ii)")

Mr. Maclean: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss Lords amendments Nos. 4 and 5.

Mr. Maclean: The first two amendments have the simple aim of ensuring that claims officers or staff appointed by the scheme manager can act as presenting officers at appeals in addition to their more normal job of determining claims.

[Mr. Maclean]

As to the third amendment, clause 5(9) was added to the Bill in Standing Committee to make it clear beyond doubt that the scheme may include provision for adjudicators to reduce awards when they consider that an appeal is frivolous or vexatious. That minor, technical amendment to delete the words "under this section" was necessary as appeals are not determined under the Bill, but are determined in accordance with the provisions of the scheme that is to be made under the powers conferred by clause 1. I commend the amendments to the House.

Mr. Michael: I have one query for the Minister, which he may have clarified in his statement. He has been extremely helpful, for which I am grateful to him, in providing information about the intentions of amendments that he expected to come from the Lords. In a letter to me, he refers to the amendments to clause 5, saying that they would allow claims officers to act as presenting officers at appeals in addition to their main role in determining appeals. That leads to confusion, but it may simply be a misprint—their main role is in determining claims rather than appeals. If that is the case, I am happy to support the Minister in seeking to pass the amendment.

Mr. Maclean: It certainly sounds like a misprint. Claims officers determine claims, not appeals and they may then present the information to the appeals panel, which will determine the appeal.

Lords amendments Nos. 4 and 5 agreed to.

Clause 8

ANNUITIES

Lords amendment: No. 6, in page 6, line 11, at end insert—

("(3) In this section "the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme" means—

(a) the scheme established by arrangements made under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act 1995; or

(b) arrangements made by the Secretary of State for compensation for criminal injuries and in operation at any time before the commencement of that scheme.")

Mr. Maclean: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must inform the House that this amendment involves privilege.

Mr. Maclean: The amendment fulfils a promise made in the Standing Committee to extend the benefits of structured settlements so that they are available under the new tariff scheme to applicants under the current common law damages scheme or any other previous version of it, whose claims have not yet been settled. The necessary complementary amendment to the 1990 scheme to permit payment of compensation by the purchase of annuities will, as we also promised, be made administratively as soon as the Bill receives Royal Assent. This is an excellent amendment, which I commend to the House.

Mr. Michael: We support the objective of the amendment. The Minister says that people whose claims have not been dealt with will have the opportunity of structured settlements and the tax arrangements that are allowed for under the Bill. What will the cut-off date be? Will the ability to deal with claims by structured settlement date from the time when the Bill began its passage through the House and the declaration of the Government's intentions, from the date on which Royal Assent is signified or from a future date when the Government or Home Secretary implement that aspect of the Bill? I am sure that the Minister will agree that it is important to be clear on those points. I hope that he will give the earliest possible date, so that the advantages of the new scheme will have the widest possible application.

On the Order Paper today there is a written question tabled by the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans), who sometimes asks questions that are regarded as convenient to Ministers. The hon. Gentleman asks whether structured settlements will be offered under the current criminal injuries compensation scheme. If any new information is to be provided to the hon. Gentleman, will the Minister share that information with us?

I ask that question because it is quite common for members of the press to have information about written parliamentary answers long before hon. Members. I am sure that the Minister will agree that it would be courteous to give the House as much information as possible in view of the fact that that question—coincidentally, I am sure—has been tabled on the day of this debate.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware that I have any extra information to present to the House. I was not aware that my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) had coincidentally decided to ask a question, which might correspond with an urgent need that I had to present information. I shall be advised on it and I hope that I shall be able to confirm whether that is the case. We intend to have structured settlements. We think that they are a good idea. If any new information needs to be presented, I shall do so.

Mr. Michael: As I understand it, the Minister is answering that written question today, so if I speak slowly, any additional information might wend its way to him. If there is no additional information that is not already available to the House, I would be happy if, at this late stage in the Bill's proceedings, the Minister could confirm that.

Mr. Maclean: I have no extra information to provide, and nothing new to say on it. I can only conclude that my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield was not fully aware of all the information that we had issued previously when he decided to ask for an update. The update will provide the same information.

The earliest date of implementation will be Royal Assent. This part of the legislation cannot be retrospective because that would create tremendous anomalies. The question might arise whether, in some cases, the generous settlements that we are making under some aspects of the tariff award should not also be made retrospective. That would be very unfair. We expect the benefits of structured settlements to take effect when the Bill receives Royal Assent.

Lords amendment agreed to [Special Entry].

New clause

JURISDICTION OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER FOR ADMINISTRATION

Lords amendment: No. 7, after clause 9, to insert the following new clause—

".—(1) In the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, insert after section 11A—

"The Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme.

11B.—(1) For the purposes of this Act, administrative functions exercisable by an administrator of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme ("Scheme functions") shall be taken to be administrative functions of a government department to which this Act applies.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the following are administrators of the Scheme—

(a) a claims officer appointed under section 3(4)(b) of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act 1995;

(b) a person appointed under section 5(3)(c) of that Act;

(c) the Scheme manager, as defined by section 1(4) of that Act, and any person assigned by him to exercise functions in relation to the Scheme.

(3) The principal officer in relation to any complaint made in respect of any action taken in respect of Scheme functions is—

(a) in the case of action taken by a claims officer, such person as may from time to time be designated by the Secretary of State for the purposes of this paragraph;

(b) in the case of action taken by a person appointed under section 5(3)(c) of the Act of 1995, the chairman appointed by the Secretary of State under section 5(3)(b) of that Act; or

(c) in the case of action taken by the Scheme manager or by any other person mentioned in subsection (2)(c) of this section, the Scheme manager.

(4) The conduct of an investigation under this Act in respect of any action taken in respect of Scheme functions shall not affect—

(a) any action so taken; or

(b) any power or duty of any person to take further action with respect to any matters subject to investigation."

(2) In Schedule 3 to the Act of 1967 (matters not subject to investigation), insert after paragraph 6B—

"6C. Action taken by any person appointed under section 5(3)(c) of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act 1995, so far as that action is taken at the direction, or on the authority (whether express or implied), of any person acting in his capacity as an adjudicator appointed under section 5 of that Act to determine appeals."

(3) The amendments made by this section do not affect the following provisions of this Act—

(a) section 3(5)(b);

(b) section 3(7)(b);

(c) section 5(4)(b)."

Mr. Maclean: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

The amendment fulfils undertakings given during earlier Commons stages that we would bring the administrative actions of the administrators of the scheme and those supporting the independent appeals system within the jurisdiction of the parliamentary ombudsman. Although the amendment appears to be long and complicated, it is a simple measure to ensure that the administrative aspects of the new system come within the ken and purview of the ombudsman.

Mr. Michael: We certainly take pleasure in this amendment because the Opposition pressed the Government strongly to ensure that the administrative functions of the authority and the appeals panel would come within the jurisdiction of the ombudsman. We strongly believe that that is necessary to ensure the proper administration and operation of the various elements of the Bill.

I should be grateful if the Minister could provide a little clarification on the exclusions contained in the proposed new clause. As he said, the wording is complex but the principle is clear. However, it is possible within complex wording for things easily to slip out of sight.

There are two elements on which I should like clarification. First, subsection (2) appears to exclude certain actions from investigation. How will that operate? Can we be absolutely certain that nothing will be excluded from the scrutiny of the ombudsman which this House would wish him properly to scrutinise? What will be the precise effect of the proposed new clause on the question of exclusion?

Secondly, subsection (3) refers to three places in the Bill where, effectively, the actions of officials are defined as not being taken by the Secretary of State or on his behalf. The Minister will recall that we commented on that when the House debated the Bill. We were concerned that the exclusion of actions of officials from being acts taken by or on behalf of the Secretary of State might mean that they were not properly scrutinised by the ombudsman. It appears that those actions are still omitted from the effects of the proposed new clause. Can the Minister reassure me on that point?

The Minister said that the new clause was a complicated addition to the Bill. We wish to ensure that something that we want scrutinised does not, through an oversight at this stage, drop off the agenda or be considered to be outside the capacity of the ombudsman. I should be grateful for as much clarification of that issue as the Minister can give me.

Mr. Maclean: We hope that there has been no oversight. The drafting is as accurate as parliamentary draftsmen can make it, but it has some clear aims. Through the drafting of the various subsections, we aim to apply the powers of the ombudsman, in full, to certain aspects of the scheme—the normal areas of government that the ombudsman can examine. What is not included is a decision on the merits of an award. Initially, that is a matter for the scheme officials to decide. It is not for the ombudsman to say, "I think Mrs. Smith should have got £20,000, not £15,000." Decisions on the merits are not for the ombudsman. Subsection (3) of the proposed new clause outlines the exceptions.

Similarly, as there is an appeals process built in, it is not for the ombudsman to become the appellate authority for people who are disgruntled with the quality of the decision on its merits. There is an appeal body for that. Nor is it the ombudsman's place to question ministerial policy, whether there should be a tariff scheme at all or whether it would be better done another way. We have therefore tried to apply in law the duties of the ombudsman to administrative action by the civil servants running the scheme.

[Mr. Maclean]

We have attempted faithfully to make the powers that the ombudsman requires in this instance the same as in every other aspect of government. Administrative action would encompass things such as delays, failure to process the paperwork within a reasonable time or failure to process it at all, not implementing the scheme properly or failing to implement it as laid down. Those are administrative actions. We believe that we have got it right.

Mr. Michael: I should like a little more clarification. The Minister said that the merits of the case would perhaps lead a claims officer to decide whether an applicant should receive £20,000 rather than £10,000. He seeks to exclude that decision—the way in which a decision is made on the merits of the case—from investigation by the ombudsman. I understand what he is saying, but does he agree that the ways in which such a decision was reached—whether proper information was sought, whether clarification was sought if necessary, and whether the papers were examined properly—are administrative actions, as distinct from the judgment based on them, and would be a proper matter for the ombudsman? Clarification would be helpful.

Mr. Maclean: What the hon. Gentleman has described is, I suspect and hope, the exact legal position. A judgment on what a person should get is a quasi-judicial decision outwith the purview of the ombudsman. However, if in coming to that conclusion the official did not operate the scheme properly but failed to contact the applicant or check the forms and did not take a medical report as was perhaps required and then made a judgment based on that, it would seem prima facie to be a case of maladministration. That is the type of behaviour that ombudsmen are there to investigate. I hope that that clarifies the position for the hon. Gentleman.

Lords amendment agreed to.

Clause 10

PARLIAMENTARY CONTROL

Lords amendment: No. 8, in page 6, line 34, leave out from beginning to ("the") in line 38, and insert—

("Before making the Scheme, the Secretary of State shall lay a draft of it before Parliament.

(1A) The Secretary of State shall not make the Scheme unless the draft has been approved by a resolution of each House.

(2) Before making any alteration to the Tariff or to any provision of")

Mr. Maclean: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss Lords amendments Nos. 9 to 13.

There is a manuscript amendment to Lords amendment No. 13, to leave out from '(4B)' to end of line 17 and insert

'Where the Secretary of State is required to lay a statement before Parliament under the provisions of subsection (4A) above, he shall not give effect to the altered provision unless the statement has been approved by a resolution of each House.'.

Mr. Maclean: These amendments are inter-related and it may be helpful if I deal with them in two sub-groups. Amendments Nos. 8, 9, 11 and 13 change significantly the extent of Parliament's control over the scheme. The Bill, on introduction, required the Secretary of State to lay a copy of the tariff and any subsequent alterations to it before Parliament. It also required the Secretary of State to lay before Parliament statements of other 'key provisions' made by the scheme, namely those bearing on quantum.

Under the amendments, however, the Secretary of State will now be required to lay a draft of the scheme in its entirety before Parliament. The scheme will not be able to start until that draft has been approved by both Houses under the affirmative resolution procedure. Thus specific parliamentary approval will be required for every aspect of the new arrangements before we can kick off.

Once the new scheme has started, any changes to it, however minor, will also be subject to parliamentary control. Changes to the tariff itself and to the key features of the scheme will require approval by the affirmative resolution procedure, while changes to the more minor, more routine features will be subject to the negative resolution procedure. We think that that strikes the right balance, requiring Parliament positively to approve changes to the more important aspects of the scheme, while leaving Parliament the choice as to whether changes to more minor matters should go through with or without a debate and with or without a vote.

The amendments make it quite clear where ultimate control over the scheme rests. The Executive will of course still be able to propose changes, but it cannot give them effect without recourse to Parliament.

Amendment Nos. 10 and 12 will have the effect of requiring more features of the scheme to be subject to parliamentary approval by the affirmative resolution procedure should change be considered necessary or desirable once the scheme has started. Those features relate to the appeals provision of the scheme.

Amendment No. 10 makes it clear that, before any changes can be made to a provision of the scheme which gives a right of appeal, or which specifies the circumstances in which an appeal is to be dealt with by an oral hearing, parliamentary approval by the affirmative resolution procedure will be necessary. Amendment No. 12 is minor and consequential. Effectively, therefore, any provision of the scheme which touches on eligibility for an appeal or the circumstances in which an oral hearing can be granted is caught.

More minor provisions relating in the main to more technical or administrative matters can still fall to be changed only by the negative resolution procedure. That will mean of course that if Parliament does not like even minor changes, it will still be able to pray against them and make its dissent known in that way.

Perhaps it would be sensible at this stage to say a word or two about the Opposition amendment. As I hope that I have explained and will be clear from the Lords amendments to clause 10, the degree of parliamentary control has changed significantly. Before the whole scheme can come into force, Parliament must approve it by affirmative resolution. We are then suggesting that the key features of the scheme, if we wish to change them in future, can by changed only by affirmative resolution. Everything else, all the hundreds of minor and technical things, could still be changed only by negative resolution procedure.

The Opposition amendment seeks to make every change in future subject to the affirmative resolution procedure. I happen to think that that is just a bit over the top. It would not be a good use of Parliament's time to have to approve any change, however uncontentious, technical or minor, by the affirmative procedure.

I understand the thinking behind what the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth is trying to do. I hope that he will be satisfied, however, that, since we have put in the affirmative resolution procedure before the thing can start, and we are keeping its use for the scheme's key points, the negative procedure will be satisfactory to deal with the other parts of the scheme if we wish to change them in future.

Mr. Michael: I am grateful to the Minister for seeking to reassure us that he intends to use the negative resolution route only for uncontentious issues. The problem is that the Government have not defined what those uncontentious issues are and have not limited in their definition the areas of activity which could be covered under the negative resolution procedure.

The Minister has rightly identified and, indeed, expanded on something that we support: those elements which have to go through the affirmative resolution procedure. In particular, we welcome the fact that the amendments bring the most important aspects of the appeals procedure within the key features of the scheme, and therefore require such changes in the appeals procedures to be undertaken through the affirmative resolution procedure rather than the negative resolution procedure.

The Minister needs to explain, however, how the scheme will operate and how he intends to use the powers. The clause, as it originally stood, referring not to the scheme but to the tariff only, was entirely framed in terms of affirmative resolution. The negative resolution elements were introduced in another place.

The Minister referred to the issues that could be covered by the negative resolution procedure as "everything else". I think that he will accept that that is rather a portmanteau way of describing the matter. That is why we have tabled an amendment which seeks to bring the whole scheme under the affirmative resolution procedure, which of course is what we sought when the Bill first came before the House and before it went to another place.

I shall give two examples of issues that would be contentious. Perhaps the Minister will tell us that they would not be dealt with other than through the affirmative resolution process. First, there is the appointment of the scheme manager and, secondly, there is the possible and highly contentious avenue for the Government to pursue of contractorisation of the operation of the criminal injuries compensation scheme. We would like the Minister to reassure us that there is no way in which such issues will be pursued without them coming before the House and another place, which will ensure that the full support of Parliament is given to such a contentious decision.

In that context, we have tabled our amendment. The matters that will have to be dealt with through the affirmative resolution procedure are specified to some extent. The issues that are not specified would come under the negative resolution procedure. I have just referred to two matters that are not defined as coming under the affirmative resolution procedure and about which there is, therefore, doubt and concern. We are concerned that in those two matters, the Government may pursue the dogmatic approach adopted elsewhere. That would surely be wrong in relation to such an important aspect of public administration as compensation for victims of the most serious crimes.

We understand that it is likely that the Minister or the Home Secretary will bring the scheme and the tariff, in their final form, before the House very soon after the Queen's Speech, when Parliament reassembles. In that case, it is extremely important that we should have some assurances from the Minister about the way in which the remaining issues will be dealt with. It is, of course, the case that under the affirmative resolution procedure, although the House is able to have a say before anything is implemented, it cannot amend legislation. The House can only accept or reject it.

In general, there have been improvements in the scheme. I commend the Minister on one point. He has made the scheme and amended schemes available so that proper debate has been able to take place and discussion has been possible with those who have specialist knowledge. That is welcome and is an improvement on the way in which other legislation has been dealt with. I commend the Minister on being much more open than has been the case on other occasions in terms of allowing proper debate. That may lead him into all sorts of difficulties with the Government, but the Opposition welcome his openness, as do those outside the House who have taken a detailed interest in the matter. It is only right that the Minister's openness in that regard should be acknowledged and praised in the House.

There are still issues that have to be dealt with and I hope that the Minister can reassure us that there will continue to be improvements to them and consideration of them. Three obvious elements on which I hope he will give us reassurance are how pregnancy following rape is to be dealt with, how age and sex criteria are to be dealt with and whether multiple injuries will be dealt with in the way that the Minister has been urged to adopt.

During the passage of the Bill, a number of other issues were referred to as matters that would be dealt with under the provisions of the scheme. There is still the question of the qualifications of those who deal with appeals and their ability, as a team, to advise the Government and to be proactive in terms of changes that are needed in the scheme.

The Minister knows that reassurances were given in debates in another place about the way in which care costs would be dealt with and he has received representations on how care costs can be linked to earning capacity. Again, there are fears that the Government's intentions will not be met. It is possible for a person to be providing care without there being any effect on that person's earning capacity. Although that person may have lost considerable time in which he or she could have been, in theory, earning, that is not the same as having one's earnings capacity affected. The earning capacity remains the same, but the amount of time available for earning has changed, which is a different matter. Linking that issue to earning capacity does not take account of the fact that many carers would not have earning capacity as such. The carers might have been parents or spouses not in work and not intending to be in work when called upon to undertake care responsibilities. I hope that the Minister will give us an assurance that these issues will be dealt with in a constructive way and that they will be covered properly when the measure to approve the scheme and the tariff comes before the House early in the next Session.

The treatment of psychiatric injury remains a matter of concern. The definition contained in the latest draft of the scheme still leaves aspects to be covered, and I know that the Minister has received representations on the issue of railway suicides. There is concern that the way in which that matter is dealt with may result in railway staff being excluded from bringing a psychiatric injury claim, even though they are specifically included in paragraph 9(d) of the scheme.

The issues dealt with in relation to psychiatric injury include such aspects as loss of earnings. We have stated that damage could be done to those who are not able to claim during the 28 weeks after an injury, and particularly those who are unable to claim sick pay. Others might be disadvantaged due to the level of sick pay being considerably lower than what they would have obtained in employment. These issues must be dealt with by the provisions of the amendment through the affirmative resolution procedure.

It would be helpful if the Minister could indicate that he is still willing to respond to the serious points which have been made in another place and outside Parliament. The scheme and the tariff that the Minister will bring forward for consideration by this House in the near future must deal fully with all of the issues which have been brought to his attention. The amendment which the Opposition have tabled seeks to make the whole of the scheme subject to the affirmative resolution procedure. The devil is in the detail in criminal injury compensation and the detail is in the scheme and the tariff.

The House must not allow its authority over important elements of detail in the scheme to be diminished. We are concerned that the amendment tabled by the Minister tabled this afternoon contains some indeterminate elements. I have given two examples of issues which could be dealt with by negative resolution, and which could be implemented in advance of the opinion of both Houses of Parliament being obtained.

Mr. Maclean: First, may I thank the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) for his kindness and courtesy? I am the perfect epitome of the remark, "I am from the Government—I am here to help you", and I am well known for my compassionate and caring approach. It would be fair—and perhaps more honest—to thank my staff, and particularly my private office staff, who have constantly reminded me when another letter to a shadow spokesman is due and that it might be helpful to lay out the main features of the Bill. Without that reminder, the hon. Gentleman would not have been able to thank me for being so helpful.

I should point out that what is to be done by affirmative resolution is clearly laid down by statute. We will operate the system in future in accordance with the law as set out in the Bill. Clause 10 states that the Secretary of State must lay before Parliament the tariff which he proposes and any alteration that he proposes to make to that tariff. Clause 10(4) states that the tariff must be approved by a resolution of the House. Clause 10(2) states that measures to be laid before Parliament include any provision to deal with any additional amount,

> "the circumstances in which compensation may be payable with respect to a criminal injury of a kind for which no provision is made by the Tariff . . . the calculation of compensation in respect of multiple injuries . . . compensation payable in respect of children conceived as a result of rape . . . the circumstances in which an award may be withheld or compensation reduced.. any limit on compensation imposed by a provision made by virtue of section 2(7)(a)."

All of those things are specified in the Bill, which we hope will shortly be an Act, and can be altered only be affirmative resolution. In addition, of course, we have the amendments that we are considering today. It is true to say that we are setting some key and important issues on one side. We have responded to concerns expressed in the House, in Committee and in the other place by making all the matters that most worried parliamentary colleagues subject to the affirmative resolution procedure.

We think that we have got the draft scheme about right now. We found it helpful to publish the draft. Following comments from colleagues, the Association of Personal Injury Lawyers, the Law Society, experts in the other place and others, the draft has been altered. We are almost at the final stage, but we are still listening and willing to hear any representations that we have not yet heard on how we see the tariff scheme operating in practice.

Following all the consultation and the tweaking that we have done, we think that we have got the tariff scheme about right and as good as it possibly can be. However, it is not set in stone. Medical knowledge improves and changes all the time. Legal knowledge changes. If in future years we become convinced that a change has to be made to a category, type or sub-division of injury or that multiple injuries could be dealt with better—although I am not convinced of that at present—it would be open to us to alter the tariff by affirmative resolution or, if it is a minor matter, by the negative procedure. I hope that I have been able to satisfy the hon. Gentleman on those points.

Mr. Michael: The Minister spoke rapidly. A phrase which answered my two questions may have flashed by me, but I do not recall him dealing with the appointment of a scheme manager or the possibility of contractorisation, which I hope is unlikely, but must be a possibility with this Government. Could those matters be dealt with other than by affirmative resolution? Will he reassure us on those two points?

Mr. Maclean: I can only repeat the assurances that I gave in Committee that we had no proposals to do either of those things. I cannot forecast what will happen in the future, but I suspect that the workload of the organisation and the need to get the scheme bedded down mean that the matters to which the hon. Gentleman refers are not a prospect in the immediate future.

We will be bound by the Act. The appointment of a scheme manager and contractorisation are not covered by clause 10. I do not believe that primary legislation would be necessary to make those changes. Changes to the administration of the scheme would be made by the negative resolution procedure. Neither the affirmative nor negative procedure might be necessary if the relevant sections of the Act have given the Secretary of State the authority to make such changes. The matters to which the hon. Gentleman refers are not covered by clause 10, which requires the affirmative resolution procedure.

Mr. Michael: With the leave of the House. The Minister has confirmed what we believe to be wrong with the state in which we have ended up, even though there is a requirement for affirmative resolution on some matters. As I understand the Minister's reply, the Government would be able to deal with matters such as the appointment of a scheme manager or even contractorisation, which would take criminal injury compensation decisions outside the scope of public servants, without having to return to the House under an affirmative resolution. Indeed, the Minister seemed to go further and suggested that the Government might not need the approval of the House at all. As the Minister gave the strongest assurances earlier in the passage of the Bill through the House that the Government had no intention of going down that road and as it is the clear intention of both Houses that affirmative resolution should be the avenue for the most important aspects of the Bill, it would be entirely wrong for the Government to take criminal injury compensation decisions outside the scope of public servants or appoint a scheme manager without coming back and putting specific resolutions to the House.

We should be quite clear. The Government have no right to congratulate themselves on the Bill. The Home Secretary acted illegally in trying to introduce the new scheme without any parliamentary scrutiny. That was the Bill's gestation period—the Home Secretary's attempt to avoid the scrutiny of the House. The Government were dragged kicking and screaming into accepting that the scheme should be subject to parliamentary scrutiny by affirmative resolution. When we last debated these issues only the tariff was to be subject to the approval of the House.

4.30 pm

I welcome the fact that we have won from the Government the concession that the scheme itself is to be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure and the scrutiny of the House. That still leaves the victims of violent crime without compensation for loss of income for 28 weeks after the injury. The Minister should recall that, with statutory sick pay at about £52.50 per week, it is hardly an adequate recompense for those who are unable to work because of a serious criminal injury. Many people are not entitled to statutory sick pay, including the self-employed, those on a low income and those on short-term contracts. Some people might still be entitled to incapacity benefit, but that is no more generous than statutory sick pay. Others will get income support, which is even less than SSP.

There is considerable variation. Taking all the factors together, however, it has been calculated that 12 million people—at least half of those in employment—do not receive full pay during the first 28 weeks of sickness and will, therefore, be at risk under the Bill. They will be worse off.

This remains a scheme that cuts the amount of cash available for the victims of violent crime. The Government have admitted that £700 million is being cut from the cash available during the next five years. That amounts to a theft of £700 million by the Government from the victims who have been damaged most by the nastiest and most brutal of crimes. That is a 40 per cent. drop in expenditure for the Government and many victims will suffer as a result. The Government have made victims pay for their failure to stem the rise of violent crime. Instead of cutting violent crime, the Government have cut the help available to the victims.

I perceive from the Minister's response that our amendment would not have succeeded in doing what we had hoped, which was to ensure that the Government could not undermine the operation of the scheme without an affirmative resolution from this House.

Despite the improvements that the legislation makes in the processes and the introduction of a tariff, money for the victims of violent crime will still be cut by £700 million in the next five years. I have some satisfaction, therefore, at our success in persuading the Government to introduce more satisfactory procedures and make the operation of the scheme subject to the parliamentary ombudsman, but I nevertheless regret that the Bill will be detrimental to the victims of crime and the victims of the most violent crimes in particular. That should be at the forefront of our minds as we reach this final stage in the Bill's passage through the Houses of Parliament.

Select Committees

[Relevant document: The Fourth Special Report of the Employment Committee, Session 1994-95, on the proposed changes to Standing Order No. 130 (H.C. 826).]

4.32 pm

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. Tony Newton): I beg to move,

That Standing Order No. 130 (Select committees related to government departments) be amended—

(1) with effect from the beginning of the next Session—

(a) by inserting the following item after item 10 in the Table in paragraph (2):

> "Public Service/Office of Public Service (but excluding the drafting of bills by the Parliamentary Counsel Office)/11/3";

(b) in item 14 in the said Table, after the word 'Industry' in column 2, by inserting the words '(but excluding the Office of Science and Technology)';

(c) in item 16 in the said Table, by leaving out the words "and Civil Service" in column 1 and, in column 2, the words from "Treasury" in line 65 to "Board" in line 69; and

(d) in paragraph (3) by leaving out the words 'and Civil Service'; and

(2) with effect from Friday 1st March—

(a) by leaving out items 3 and 4 in the Table in paragraph (2) and inserting the following item:

> "Education and Employment/Department for Education and Employment/13/4"; and

(b) in paragraph (3) by inserting at the beginning the words "The Education and Employment Committee,".

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): I have to announce that Madam Speaker has selected amendment (c), which should be moved at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. Newton: In moving this motion, I initiate another exciting House of Commons occasion, although I hope not as exciting as the one in which we all took part yesterday.

The motion seeks to adjust the Select Committee structure of the House to match the changes in the machinery of government which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced in July. I was anxious to get these matters resolved quickly because, as the House appreciates, I very much value the work of Select Committees and I wanted to make sure that we had a clear new structure in place before the start of the new Session.

What I propose follows the principle, which is now well established, of one Committee for each major Department, which the House last reaffirmed in June 1992 when it agreed to discontinue the Energy Committee and to set up a new Select Committee to monitor the Department of National Heritage and the Office of Science and Technology.

It might help the House if I digress briefly to make it clear that there has never been any intention on the part of the Government of doing away, as some feared, with the Science and Technology Committee. The Office of Science and Technology still exists in the same form as before the reorganisation; all that has happened to it is that it has migrated from one parent Department to another. The Science and Technology Committee will continue to oversee its activities at its new location.

I propose that the changes that I am putting forward to the Select Committee structure should be brought into effect in two stages. The first instalment, which is to take effect next week with the new Session, recognises the expanded role of the Office of Public Service under my right hon. Friends the Deputy Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The OPS is now responsible not only for the civil service and the citizens charter but for competitiveness and the deregulation initiative. Those important areas of policy should now, we propose, be scrutinised by a new Public Service Committee, which is established by virtue of paragraph (1)(a) of the motion.

Other Committees, not least the Treasury and Civil Service Committee and the Trade and Industry Committee, obviously have an interest in the competitiveness agenda, but I am sure that the well-tried machinery of the Liaison Committee, so ably presided over by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins), will prevent any overlapping of Committee activity. I should emphasise that the role of the Deregulation Committee, which we established under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, in scrutinising individual deregulation orders as they come forward is not affected by this proposal.

As a consequence of that change, paragraph (l)(c) of the motion renames the Treasury and Civil Service Committee more simply and precisely as the Treasury Committee and amends its remit so as to remove the references to the responsibilities taken over by the new Public Service Committee. Under paragraph (l)(d), the Treasury Committee will keep the power to appoint a Sub-Committee, but clearly any such Sub-Committee could no longer deal with civil service issues.

Paragraph (l)(b) makes it clear that the remit of the Trade and Industry Committee does not include the Office of Science and Technology, which, as I have said, will continue to be monitored by the Science and Technology Committee.

The second instalment of the changes I propose is to come into operation on 1 March 1996. We propose in paragraph (2)(a) to take account of the disappearance of a separate Employment Department by establishing a new Committee with 13 members, to monitor the full range of functions of the new Department for Education and Employment, which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister created to reduce the divisions between academic and vocational education and to strengthen further the links between employers and the educational world of schools, colleges and universities.

Under paragraph (2)(b) of the motion, the new Education and Employment Committee will have the power to appoint a Sub-Committee if it so wishes. The creation of that new Committee, in line with what I must describe as the House's settled policy of matching Committees to Departments, necessarily means that the existing separate Committees on education and on employment need to be wound up, but I propose that that should not happen for nearly four months. The intention is to allow the existing Committees a reasonable period in which to complete the work that they have already started, which I hope they will be able to do. The Employment Committee has expressed concern about the prospects for the unfinished inquiries that it has under way at the moment. The proposal that the Committee should continue until 1 March 1996 seeks to respond to that concern.

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West): Will the Leader of the House give way?

Mr. Newton: I will give way, but I had understood that the hon. and learned Gentleman intended to make a speech. If an intervention can substitute for a speech, I would wish to co-operate with him.

Mr. Janner: That is not a basis on which I would wish to ask the Minister any question that I have.

Mr. Newton: I thought that my hopes might have been raised too high.

Mr. Janner: Yes, by at least half an hour.

Mr. Newton: I am grateful to the hon. and learned Gentleman for his usual helpfulness and courtesy. I appreciate the fact that he and his colleagues would have liked the period to be even longer, but I hope—although with little expectation in the light of our exchange, which was intended to be friendly—that they will regard this proposal as a reasonable compromise.

This motion deals with a number of issues, but I think that the only contentious point is over employment. When my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced the changes in departmental responsibilities, some concern was expressed that the new arrangements might make it more difficult for the House to deal with employment issues. On Select Committee scrutiny, I hope that the proposals that I have brought before the House today, relating to the four-month period, the size of the Committee and its power to appoint a Sub-Committee, will have gone some way towards allaying those anxieties. As I said, the present Employment Committee will have nearly four months in which to complete the inquiries that it has in hand.

All in all, the motion represents a sensible and balanced solution to the problems that we face in relation to existing Committees, while sticking to what is widely supported: the settled policy of matching Select Committees to Departments.

4.45 pm

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West): I am sorry to dash the hopes of the Leader of the House, but it is the view of nine of the 11 members of the Select Committee on Employment that the so-called "compromise" offered by the Government will not enable the Committee to do its work within the time set; nor will it allow the House to monitor properly the work that was previously within the ambit of the Department of Employment.

My amendment (c) is supported by the hon. Members for Norfolk, North (Sir R. Howell), for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson), for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) and for Meriden (Mr. Mills) and by my hon. Friends the Members for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham), for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) and for Dudley, West (Mr. Pearson). It will not have escaped the attention of the Leader of the House that it has all-party support.

I am sorry that the Government have seen fit to try to make the Employment Committee vanish at the last breath of this Session. They have no doubt done so in the expectant hope that the payroll vote will be rolled out if necessary in order to put forward a proposition that is neither in the interests of Parliament nor in accordance with good sense, and does not satisfy the House that the employment work will be done.

The Leader of the House should be careful when I speak because, on the last occasion, in line with my work as a magician, I suggested to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) that the sooner he joined the Labour party and left the Conservative party, the better. I said that we would welcome him at any moment. To my absolute delight, a week later he crossed the Floor of the House. When that happens in response to one of my speeches, the Leader of the House might at least bend slightly in our direction and try to enable us to complete the work as he has suggested.

First, I hope that the right hon. Gentleman will follow the views expressed in the fourth special report, which I shall read to him as unfortunately he did not see fit to mention it. If that is not possible, he should at least ensure that we are not forced to give up our work until the report commissioned by the Central Statistical Office to study options for the monthly publication of International Labour Office unemployment figures is before the House.

I draw the attention of the Leader of the House to the proposed changes to Standing Order No. 30, the fourth special report of the Employment Committee, which was agreed by nine of the 11 members. Paragraph 3 reads as follows:

> "We believe that the merging of the Education and Employment Committees will seriously diminish the ability of the House to monitor employment issues. We adduce the following reasons.
> A committee which is responsible for both the employment and education briefs will not have the time to consider in detail the issues which they raise.
> Both Committees have built up a background of knowledge and expertise in their respective areas which will be lost if they are merged into one committee"— the report says "of only 11 members", but we now all know that it is to be of only 13 members, whereas the combined strength of the two Committees would have been 22 members.

I have consulted members of the Education Committee and found that they share the unhappiness and sense of regret at the Government's position which is felt by the vast majority of members of the Employment Committee.

The Leader of the House referred to a clear structure. I refer him to the original report that led to the setting up of Select Committees, which had in mind flexibility so that the work of the House could be done properly. It is one of the joys of our constitution, both written and unwritten, that there should be flexibility. Unfortunately, we have not yet seen it from the Government on this issue.

I remind the House that the report of the Select Committee on Procedure, which introduced the new Select Committee system in 1978-79, pressed firmly for a more systematic means of scrutinising the public service, which is what we are about. It concluded that > "the committee structure should in future be based primarily on the subject areas within the responsibility of individual government departments, or groups of departments".

I stress the word "primarily". None of us would dispute the fact that that is the normal system, but we have fled from normality with the Government's abnormal abolition of the Department of Employment and the spreading of its work, not between two Departments, which is the usual—[Interruption.] I was hoping that a tiny corner of the mind of the Leader of the House might even be open to argument.

Mr. Newton: I apologise for the discourtesy of my feeling the need to have a word with one of my Front-Bench colleagues.

I hope that I have shown, over quite a long period, that I always try to look constructively at points that are made. However, I must say at this stage that I have already done so, to the degree that this is a substantially different proposal from the one that I first floated in several respects, on which I touched in my speech.

Mr. Janner: I accept that, and I thank the right hon. Gentleman, who is always courteous even when he is wrong.

I shall continue reading the very important paragraph from the report, which states:

> "We"—

the Select Committee on Procedure—

> "therefore accept that this principle must be tempered by some element of flexibility in the boundaries between committees and by adequate provision for cooperation between them."

I wonder whether the Leader of the House realises what has happened to the work that was with the Department of Employment. The training and enterprise councils have gone into the Department for Education, and we are busy, as a Committee, working on a report on the TECs, on which we have spent a great deal of time.

Into the Treasury, of all places, has gone the work of the Central Statistical Office, which includes the setting up of a task force led by an external consultant, a Mr. David Steel—no relation to anyone in the House, I understand—which is due to produce its report by the end of January 1996. I shall return to that subject.

So we have the TECs with the Department for Education; we have the CSO with the Treasury. Strangely enough, workfare, to which I shall return—this is a subject which is vastly important to the Committee and on which we have done a huge amount of work—is with the Department of Employment. Then we have all the issues concerning wages and trade unions, which have gone to the Department of Trade and Industry. [Interruption.] I am so sorry to interrupt—

The Treasurer of Her Majesty's Household (Mr. Greg Knight): Get on with it.

Mr. Janner: Yes; I will get on with it. I will tell hon. Members exactly what I think. I think that this is a deliberate move by the Government, as part of their policy to remove the Department of Employment and the spotlight on unemployment and on the work that is being done on workfare. They are transferring different aspects of work, one by one, into a long series of Departments, so as to spread them out.

Health and safety go to one place and TECs go to another; all the different aspects of our work have been spread about. It is all part of a confidence trick by the Government, in an attempt to remove the attention of the public from the reality of the existing and unacceptable unemployment.

I will get on with it by congratulating the hon. Member for Norfolk, North, whose work on workfare has been prodigious and without whom our Committee would not have undertaken it. That work has led us not only to interview witnesses in this country but to interview them in the United States. The Government have said that they intend to rely on the experience of the United States when proposing ideas about workfare.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Norfolk, North because it is as a result of his persistence that at least someone is listening. I hope that we shall hear from him, because the main reason why, if the Committee is to go, it should not go until we know what is happening, is that otherwise it will not be possible to complete the type of report on workfare that the House deserves.

I will get on with it by saying to the right hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) that he should be more temperate in his language when he is trying to get rid of a Committee whose members have worked happily and in great harmony together for a long time, who have done a superb job in a series of investigations and reports and who want to complete their work properly in a way that is in accordance with the traditions of the House.

We are considering three reports. One report is about TECs. It is possible for us to complete that. It will not be as full as we would want, but it can be done. Secondly, we have a report about employment statistics. That, standing on its own, is of great importance, whatever view—jaundiced or affectionate—anyone may take of the disgraceful way in which the Government publish their employment statistics. I am not surprised that the Government do not want the report, but the Committee wants it. It wants it in its own right and also because it forms the basis of the report that we shall produce on workfare.

One right hon. Gentleman has said, "Well, what does it matter? You can bring your report out on workfare even if you do not know the statistics." That is exactly the sort of rubbish which I will get on with, because the Chancellor of the Exchequer is unlikely to take any interest in a report on workfare based on statistics when other statistics are likely to appear at any minute at the Government's own request.

The question that I was going to ask the Leader of the House, which he stifled at its birth but which he may wish to revive when he replies, is simply as follows. Will he please guarantee that the Committee will have the report of Mr. David Steel before it for a reasonable time before it must pack in, before the Government get rid of it and before the Government get on with their task of getting rid of unemployment by putting it into the Education Select Committee and into a Sub-Committee? Everyone knows that a parliamentary Sub-Committee is a cul-de-sac into which ideas are lured, there to be quietly strangled to death.

We do not want a Sub-Committee; we want the Employment Select Committee to be allowed to continue its work until the end of the current Session.

Sir Terence Higgins (Worthing): The end of the Session is tomorrow, as I understand it.

Mr. Janner: The end of the Session is tomorrow, which is precisely why the debate is tonight—so that there will not be enough hon. Members in the House to vote on it, so that the payroll vote may steamroller any effort that we make. The right hon. Gentleman is absolutely right and I thank him so much for drawing attention to my error.

We want the Committee to continue its work until the end of the Parliament. If it cannot be to the end of the Parliament, at least let it be until such time as we can bring out our report, not only on the statistics but on the effect that that has on the workfare report.

Every member of the Committee—with the possible exception of two Conservative Members, neither of whom is present—agrees that the level of unemployment, even though, happily, it is lower than it was, is unacceptable. Members of the Committee also agree that the idea that people should be paid for not working when they wish to work, and that they should not pay taxes when they would much prefer to be working and earning and paying taxes, when they are doing nothing with their time but rotting in unemployment—which is a hateful disgrace in modern society—is unacceptable.

We are considering ways in which that can be made better. We cannot guarantee that we shall all agree with the hon. Member for Norfolk, North, but at least let us consider the ideas properly. [Interruption.] The Leader of the House is being passed a billet-doux.

If the Leader of the House is determined to limit his flexibility, in what he chooses to call a compromise, to 1 March 1996, will he at least give us the absolute guarantee that the Committee will have that report before it? I would respectfully suggest that he should look again and consider whether the rush is unseemly.

The right hon. Gentleman has said that there are no real precedents for the change. With respect, I disagree. He referred to the Science and Technology Select Committee, which he described as in migration from one Department to another. I know that we are at the time of autumn mists and that birds migrate, but that Committee has not been migrated.

The Science and Technology Committee considers the work of the Office of Science and Technology. Until July, it came under the Cabinet Office, and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster was the responsible Minister. Now it comes under the Department of Trade and Industry. The Government do not intend to abolish the Science and Technology Committee, which, if each Committee is meant to monitor a Department, they should; they will keep it going. It is not subsumed by the Trade and Industry Select Committee, as it would be if there were logic in the right hon. Gentleman's intention to get rid of the Employment Select Committee in that way.

Nor would this be the first time that there had been a delay in removing a Committee. On one occasion, changes to the Standing Orders of the House were delayed after a change in the departmental structure of government. The Department of Health and Social Services was split in summer 1988 and the Select Committee on Social Services was not split into two separate Committees until October 1990. It is a matter of the extent to which the Government permit the work of the House, and especially the work of the Departments and the work done by the Departments, to be carried out properly.

The principle that I mentioned, of "one Department, one Committee", has already been tempered by flexibility, but it must be tempered by more flexibility. It would make much more sense to allow the Select Committee on Education to continue its work until the end of the Parliament. The Government should allow the Select Committee on Employment to continue its work until the end of the Parliament, when the Committee and some of its members would, regrettably, depart. But until then, they could do the job required of them by Parliament through the sensible monitoring system that exists.

[Mr. Janner]

The hon. Member for Norfolk, North will speak for himself. We on the Committee are determined to try, within the time limits that we are given by the House, to carry out our work in a way that brings credit to the House. We cannot properly monitor the work of the Department of Employment, as it was, if we are to have only four months to do so and no power to start any new reports. We shall have to wind up what we are doing and continue our work as a Select Committee—but we are at the tail end of the job.

It is the submission of all but two members of the Employment Select Committee, which I am privileged to chair, that the new arrangements are a mistake. That mistake will prevent the Committee from doing its job properly and has occurred owing to the inflexible approach adopted. The mistake could be avoided very simply—Parliament cannot continue much longer. I ask the Leader of the House, even at this late stage, to think again and see whether flexibility can be extended in a way that does credit to the House.

5.3 pm

Mr. Iain Mills (Meriden): I agree with my colleague, the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), who chairs the Committee: we need more time. I shall not speak for long as we have only a short time for the debate.

We have achieved inward investment from Toyota, Honda and others. The Committee has not achieved that on its own, but it has used its influence to ensure that those companies have invested here. It is a great shame that the Committee is to be abolished. The Select Committee on Education cannot replicate the work of the Select Committee on Employment. I feel passionately that the Select Committee on Education cannot replicate the job creation aspects of the Employment Select Committee.

All I ask is that we should have a few more months—there is nothing else that we can ask for. We cannot ask for the Employment Select Committee to be recreated, but our achievements should be placed on record. I hope that Hansard will tonight record the inward investment achievements and the help and encouragement that the Employment Select Committee has given to various firms to locate in this country. We should have a little longer to conclude our arrangements.

5.5 pm

Mr. Ernie Ross (Dundee, West): I support my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) and my other colleagues who are members of the Committee. Clearly, we are not likely to succeed in changing the view of the Leader of the House tonight to the extent that he will allow us to continue to the end of the Parliament. But if he expects us to lie down, roll over and die, he has made a grave mistake.

I am sorry that the debate had to take place at the fag end of the parliamentary Session, which has meant that not many hon. Members are here to make the comments that they would want to make on the way in which the Government have sought to forget about employment by burying it within the Department for Education and Employment. The Government have attempted to suggest that their responsibility for getting people into work is based solely on training. A quick résumé of the Government's work on training and their success in getting people into employment would soon dispel any belief that the Government have made a serious attempt to use training as a basis on which to reduce unemployment. I am sure that the Leader of the House could not name a successful Government scheme today to convince members of the Employment Select Committee, whether Government or Opposition Members, that the Government's policy has worked.

Our investigation of the various training initiatives introduced by the Government under the guise of getting people back to work reveals an abysmal success rate. The work that we are currently undertaking with the training and enterprise councils has demonstrated how the TEC system has failed. The previous Secretary of State for Employment travelled to Boston, studied the private industry councils and thought that they were a good way of directly involving business people. He brought the policy back to this country; it was introduced in England and Wales as TEC and in Scotland as local enterprise companies. The policy was supposed to be the driving force to tackle unemployment, but the TECs' and LECs' record on getting people back to work is abysmal.

During our present inquiry into the work of TECs, we recently interviewed TEC personnel. Some TECs no longer exist because of the way in which they were run. They could not run themselves properly, but they were supposed to reduce the levels of long-term unemployed. The Government's record on training is abysmal. The Leader of the House must work harder if he wants to convince the Select Committee on Employment that, by abolishing the Department of Employment and placing the emphasis on training, the Government can tackle the present unemployment problem.

As my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, West said, the Leader of the House will also have to consider the fact that, in the past, when a Department has disappeared, the Committee monitoring it has not necessarily disappeared. My hon. and learned Friend mentioned the Select Committee on Science and Technology and I should be interested to hear what the Leader of the House has to say in response to his comments.

It beggars belief that the Leader of the House and the Government thought that the Select Committee on Employment would simply lie down and die, and become a Sub-Committee of the newly formed Committee. Such a proposal does not tackle the serious problem of unemployment. People who are at present unemployed want to make a contribution. They currently believe that they cannot make a contribution, either on their own behalf or on behalf of their families. They are regularly attacked by Conservative Members as people who do not want to work or make a contribution, but want to live off the state.

The Government have decided that the best way to end unemployment is to abolish the Department that deals with it, thereby confusing people and trying to convince them that unemployment is no longer the Government's responsibility. That method will not work; it certainly will not work with us this afternoon. It is unlikely that we shall be able to change the mind of the Leader of the House, but we shall certainly make an effort to do so. We certainly shall not let the debate finish this afternoon until we have heard one or two better reasons.

I accept what the Leader of the House has said about the compromises that he believes himself to have made, although I shall not comment on whether they have been made through the usual channels or on whether they are acceptable. However, we require more persuasive, reasonable and sensible arguments from the right hon. Gentleman if we are to accept the need to do away with a Select Committee that has sole responsibility for considering employment and ensuring that the Government's attention is focused on it.

5.9 pm

Sir Peter Emery (Honiton): I apologise to my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House for missing his opening remarks. I was at a meeting.

I rise to speak only because, having heard two speeches, I well understand the disappointment of members of a Select Committee—and its Chairman, who has done his best to monitor the action of the Department involved—when the Department ceases to exist. I do not wish to become involved in an argument about whether there should be a Department of Employment or a Department for Education and Employment, although that strikes me as being part of the purpose of the debate; I heard what the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross) had to say about such matters as training, but it is clear to me that training will have to be dealt with by the new Department. My hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills) mentioned investment, which will have to be dealt with by the Department of Trade and Industry.

As Chairman of the Procedure Committee, I have fought long and hard for each Department to retain its Select Committee, and for the Committees to monitor the work of their Departments. I have proved that over the years with the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs and the Select Committee on Northern Ireland—we had to fight for a long time to obtain that. When the Department of Health and Social Security was split into two Departments, I ensured that separate Committees were set up to monitor the two aspects of its work.

If I use that argument, however, I cannot continue to argue that there should be a Select Committee when there is no Minister or Department for it to monitor. I am slightly surprised that the Department of Employment has not been cut off completely and all its work transferred, but I am pleased that the Government have been flexible enough to try to ensure that the Employment Committee's work will not be wasted. A date has been given for the completion of that work. It is true that no new work will be started, but the new work must be done by a Committee that will monitor a Minister. The idea of starting new work when there is no Minister to monitor strikes me as very strange, even if it involves examining only what has happened in the past. The only person who can respond to the Committee's report—and the reports that are published after, or up to, the end of March—will be the new Secretary of State for Education and Employment. The idea that we can retain a Committee that is monitoring a Minister who does not exist is very odd.

Mr. Janner: I thank the right hon. Gentleman for his many courtesies over the years, and not least for what he has said today. Surely he accepts, however, that the Minister who responds to the report will be the Minister in charge of the Department that is now dealing with the matter concerned. If the report is on employment statistics, for instance, it will be dealt with by the Treasury; if it is on training and enterprise councils or workfare, it will be dealt with by the Department for Education and Employment. There may not be a Minister representing a Department that has been abolished, but Ministers will reply to reports on matters that are within the ambit of their responsibilities.

Sir Peter Emery: The hon. and learned Gentleman may or may not be correct. I assume that all the reports from the existing Select Committee on Employment will be dealt with by the Secretary of State for Education and Employment at first, although it is for her to decide whether to refer them elsewhere.

In any event, I cannot—on behalf of the Procedure Committee—say that it is in the interests of the House to set the precedent that Select Committees can continue to monitor when there is no one to monitor. I must support my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House: I believe that he is taking the right step, and is being generous in setting the end of March as the time by which members of the Committee can complete their work.

5.15 pm

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): Let me make three brief points. I listened carefully to the eloquent speech of the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), the Chairman of the Employment Select Committee; it was what we have come to expect of such a distinguished parliamentarian. I would hate him to think that the House does not appreciate the work that the Committee has done so far—work which has been informative and of high quality, and which has held the Department firmly to account. The House is in the Committee's debt, and I should not like any member of the Committee to think otherwise. It provides an example of what can be done by a Select Committee.

Having said that, however, I think that what is being done is logical. My party has always perceived the elegant synergy between the Department for Education and training and employment, and I was quite happy when the Government made their decision earlier this year. It has left some rough edges, of course, and it will take some time for the House to get used to the idea of the new demarcation and allocation of responsibilities—some of which were not handled very deftly; I would have put some of the bits and pieces in different Departments. It will also take us some time to get out of the habit of referring directly to the Department of Employment.

Although I support the motion, I feel that the eloquent pleas made by Committee members for time to enable them to complete their reports are entirely proper. I hope that the House will do nothing to disturb that work, enabling it to be completed in good time.

Finally, I should like an assurance from the Leader of the House about the position of minority parties in Select Committees. I do not believe that there is a place for such parties on either the Employment Committee or the

[Mr. Archy Kirkwood]

Education Committee at present. I should hate to think that, if we adopted the habit of folding Sub-Committees into departmental Committees, that would prejudice the precious few places that minority parties currently have.

There is an argument—although this is not the time to advance it—for providing a place on all departmental Committees for parties such as mine, and for nationalist parties such as the Ulster Unionist party in its various complexions. We often feel that we are under-represented. I know that it is preferable to have small executive Committees to do the work, and by and large they do it very well, but I fear that setting up Committees with Sub-Committees may freeze out the possibility of securing an appropriate number of places for minority parties.

Provided that the Leader of the House can reassure me that he will be diligent in protecting the rights and interests of minority parties—and given the thanks that are due to the Committee for the work that it has done to date—I believe that the motion should be supported.

5.19 pm

Sir Ralph Howell (Norfolk, North): I am glad that the Government have gone as far as they have in letting the Select Committee on Employment continue until the end of February, but I hope that they will listen to this debate and go further, because they are making a serious mistake. Unemployment is the biggest problem that confronts the advanced world and merely trying to hide it in another Department will not solve the problem. That will not help the Government. I ask them to take this matter seriously.

To try to mix education and unemployment in a Committee will not work as the people who are interested in education and the people who are likely to be interested in unemployment are as different as chalk and cheese. To try to put them into one Committee is not acceptable and that will prove to be so.

I congratulate the Government on doing away with the Department of Employment. I thank the Chairman of the Select Committee on Employment for his kind remarks about myself and the right to work/workfare inquiry that I initiated. He is wrong in worrying too much about the old Department of Employment. I found that it was inward looking and, over many years, nothing but obstructive, so I have no problem with its disappearance.

It seems obvious, however, that in the Department for Education and Employment, there must be two separate Departments. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment is perfectly capable of looking after those two sectors, but she could very well report to two separate Select Committees. I hope that serious consideration will be given to that matter.

To confine those of us on the Select Committee on Employment to a shorter period will not enable us to get to the bottom of what we need to do.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): Whether the old Department for Education and the old Department of Employment will satisfactorily gel together remains to be seen, but my hon. Friend is right in saying, as paragraph 3 of the Employment Select Committee special report points out, that there is considerable doubt that the Select Committee on Education and the Select Committee on Employment will gel together, especially in the last year of a Parliament. If that were being done at the beginning of a Parliament, I would understand it, but to do it at the fag end of a Parliament, when it has months to run, is eccentric.

Sir Ralph Howell: I am grateful for that intervention. It reminds me of Question Time today. It is crazy to have education questions and employment questions all muddled up on the Order Paper. They should be in two separate halves, so that we can examine those issues properly and sensibly.

I am especially concerned in relation to the statistical evidence and the report that we are compiling. We need that report as soon as possible, but I doubt that we shall get it before the end of January. We shall then require a lot of time to consider it and the Government will need to consider the statistics much more closely than they have in the past. Again, the Government are doing themselves no service in trying to fob off the unemployment problem as if, because it is falling a little, all is well. All is not well.

A total of 2.25 million people are doing nothing. Even on Government figures, that is costing £11.4 billion, which is a total waste as society gets nothing in return. Those figures, however, do not stand up to examination. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in October 1992, when she was Secretary of State for Employment only, that the cost of an unemployed person was £9,000 a year. In today's terms, the cost must be at least £10,000 a year. With 2.3 million people unemployed, that works out at £23 billion, so it is no good the Treasury telling us that unemployment is costing only £11.4 billion.

In 1979, 612,000 people were claiming invalidity benefit; that has risen to the huge figure of 1.8 million—1.25 million more people. If one adds the number claiming invalidity benefit in 1979 to the number claiming unemployment benefit at that time, it comes to 1.7 million; the figure now is 4.2 million. We need to know how well we are doing and to get to the bottom of the matter. The Government are intent on cutting public expenditure. That is the only sector where public expenditure could be cut, because there is that enormous figure of waste. I do not know whether the Government figure of only £11.4 billion is right or whether the correct figure is £23 billion or £27 billion, as Labour said in 1992, but I am confident that that is a big sector of waste and one that must be dealt with.

It will be impossible to persuade the mixed Committee, sub-committees or whatever one wishes to introduce, to be as effective as one Committee looking after one subject. This is an important subject. It will remain so and it is no good the Government trying to sweep it under the carpet.

5.26 pm

Sir Terence Higgins (Worthing): The first part of the motions relates to the creation of the Public Service Committee and the abolition, effectively, of the Select Committee on Treasury and Civil Service. I am second to none in believing that the changes that we undertook nearly 15 years ago in the Select Committee system have been the biggest improvement in increasing ministerial accountability to the House, probably even this century. This matter is therefore of great importance and it is right that we should debate it this afternoon. Having said that, I believe that the strength of those reforms lay in the fact that the Select Committee system became departmentally related. If one were to divert from that, the system would be greatly weakened.

Over the years—and I have had a lot to do with this matter in the intervening period—there has been considerable concern when the departmental structure has changed and when the Select Committees have had to be adjusted to meet that, but I have no doubt that that has been essential and, generally speaking, it has been done almost immediately or as quickly as possible. There was only one exception—and that was not a happy one—involving the Select Committee on Social Security,

On the proposed structure, we can take a lesson from the experience of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, which has a Sub-Committee that deals largely with civil service issues. I have been well aware of the passion—I think that that is a fair description—felt by the Chairman of the Select Committee on Employment, the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Sir R. Howell) and others on that point, and, as Chairman of the Liaison Committee, I have listened as carefully as possible to the various points that have been put to me.

The initial view was that the change should happen immediately and that that should be that, but I was influenced by the arguments advanced, as was my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, and two important changes have been made, one of which gives the new Select Committee on Education and Employment the power to set up a formal Sub-Committee, which is a considerable power. Only the Home Affairs, Foreign Affairs and Treasury and Civil Service Select Committees have such a power, so that is an innovation.

Over my 12 years' experience on the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee, the Sub-Committee dealing with civil service matters was not particularly subsidiary. It is true that at the end of the day, the main Committee stamps the decisions that have been taken, but it has proved an effective method of working. The work carried out by that Sub-Committee has been of great importance. It has produced major changes in proposals for the civil service and so on. There is no reason why that should not be the case for the new Committee.

There is a problem about manning the Sub-Committee. That is why the Leader of the House's proposal to increase the membership of the Committee is so important. No doubt, to some extent there will be some continuity of membership with the two previous Committees.

My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House has suggested that the change should not be carried out immediately, as is the case with the Public Service Committee, but that it should be carried out by March next year. I hope that that enables the Committee to complete its work, particularly the proposals on workfare, which it might be true to say have been the life work of my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North. He has done a tremendous job and is now in sight of a major step forward. It may be that the Committee's report will have considerable influence. I am anxious that that should be completed.

In recent weeks, my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House and I have sat through 39 sittings of the Nolan committee, so we are seriously biased about this matter. We might feel that the Employment Committee could fit in some extra sittings. I would have thought that 39 sittings between now and the end of February would be roughly equivalent to what we did. The hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West and my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North could probably fit that in.

I hope that this is a reasonable compromise and that it will enable the Committee to complete its work. Members of the new Committee will adopt a new guise, but some aspects of the Committee's work are certainly linked. For example, training and education have a close relationship.

If we were to perpetuate the existence of the Employment Committee, as the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West has suggested, there would be a split into various separate Departments—Education and Employment, Environment, Treasury and Trade and Industry. It would be a mess. Nobody would know which Secretary of State would be called before the Committee next. If the Committee is clearly the Education and Employment Committee, that is the Secretary of State whom the Committee is responsible for monitoring. If we are not to fragment the entire Committee system, that is the only sensible way forward. I hope that, on reflection, hon. Members and Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen will go along with it.

I pay sincere tribute to the substantial and important work carried out over a considerable time by the Select Committee on Employment. Sad though it is, I hope that, on balance, this is the right way forward.

5.33 pm

Mr. Jeff Rooker (Birmingham, Perry Barr): This is an important debate and, as has been said by the Chairman of the Procedure Committee and the Chairman of the Liaison Committee, it is more than just a technical adjustment of our Standing Orders. It is an opportunity to praise the work of hon. Members who serve on Select Committees. Those Committees are sometimes the unsung part of Parliament. They are not usually on television and are not part of the party political battle or the cockpit of policy debate in the Chamber. Nevertheless, the Committees form a vital part of the work of the House.

The tragedy is that, until the implementation of the improvements brought about by the changes for the next Session, the House has never really taken seriously or devoted enough time to the work and the reports of the Committees. It is good that, following the resolutions passed last week as a result of the Jopling proposals, there will be an opportunity in the next Session to debate some of the Select Committee reports on the Floor of the House on at least three Wednesday mornings. The sooner my colleagues from both sides of the House who sit on the Employment Select Committee proceed with the three important reports on which they are working, the sooner they will be available to the Liaison Committee for selection for debate on the Floor of the House. That is important.

This is a sensible compromise. I accept the thrust of the Leader of the House's remarks. I share the disquiet of the Chairman of the Employment Committee, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), because we are mindful of the fact that employment matters do not disappear into a black hole. That point has been made by hon. Members on both sides of the House, but the Opposition are particularly mindful of it. The activities of the Department are being split up and it is not always easy to target what the Government are doing to solve unemployment. Are we intent on eradicating mass unemployment? That is a serious issue which needs to be faced. It will come home to haunt the Government in due course.

The Employment Committee has about three and a half months left to complete its work. The Chairman of the Liaison Committee, the right hon. Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins), mentioned the work of the Nolan committee. I am not sure whether the Employment Committee has the power to sit in a recess, but the Christmas recess will fall within those three and a half months. The Committee needs an opportunity to complete its work on the reports on training and enterprise councils, workfare and employment statistics. That work must be finished by 1 March, not the end of March as was mentioned by the Chairman of the Procedure Committee.

Fifteen or 16 years ago we voted on setting up the departmental Select Committees. I do not know how many hon. Members voted against setting up those Committees, but I was one of them. As I have said before, I did that because I did not believe that they would produce reports that were good enough and I did not believe that they would have sufficient teeth. On balance, experience has proved me wrong. They have provided hon. Members with a good oversight of the work of Departments which was not available to them before. The Committees are able to target a Department. If I had my way—some of my hon. Friends agree with me—I would target much more closely the work of a Department by raising other matters that fall well outside this debate.

The Committees deal with the structure of government and it is important that the House should take cognisance of the machinery of government. It is a little like the Opposition Front Bench. Over the past few years the Opposition have experimented by appointing shadow spokesmen on certain issues without a Minister for them to shadow. On balance, that is not a satisfactory arrangement for our Front Bench. With a change of Government we would form the machinery of government. The departmental Select Committees should reflect the work of the Departments. That is the only sensible way to operate.

It is important to set up a Committee to shadow the work of the Deputy Prime Minister and his colleagues. It is clear that an empire is being built in Whitehall and that it will have to be accountable to the House. Tempers might become a little short because there were many questions that the Deputy Prime Minister was unable to answer in the House. When he is before a Select Committee he will not be able to dodge them in the same way as he has in recent weeks. It is important that that Committee should begin its work early in the new Session.

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) made a plea on behalf of the minor parties. He and I are in favour of strict proportionality in many matters. If there were to be a representative from a minor party on every Select Committee, the minor parties would be over-represented and I could not approve of that. The hon. Gentleman knows how the calculation is carried out. In the totality of Select Committee places, the minor parties receive their representation according to the proportions of the House. I understand that that means that many major Select Committees do not have minor party input and I understand the frustration that that causes.

I want to raise a not unimportant matter. Last week we passed new Standing Orders relating to the Jopling changes. Yesterday we passed new Standing Orders relating to the Nolan changes. Today, we are passing new Standing Orders relating to what I call the reshuffle changes. Therefore, I expect a very early reprint of Standing Orders, by the start of the new Session, because we already have at least two supplements, not counting the changes that I have just listed. There is no question that HMSO does wonders; the way that it produces our parliamentary papers is an incredible operation. The Standing Orders should be brought up to date before the beginning of the new Session.

I understand the concerns of hon. Members on both sides of the House who have worked hard on the Employment Select Committee. I wish them well in the work that they still have to do in finishing the three vital reports. However, the sooner the reports are available, the sooner we can put pressure on the Liaison Committee to look at them in a bid for proper debate on the Floor of the House. It is certainly a neglected area of our constitution.

Mr. Newton: I am grateful to all hon. Members who have spoken in the debate. If I was mildly irritated by anything, it was one or two remarks suggesting that I was trying to smuggle something through in some curious way. As I said in my speech, there has been widespread pressure to sort out the Select Committees for the new Departments and the others that I am proposing before the start of the next Session, so if I had not taken this initiative people would have asked why I was dragging my feet and not getting on with the job.

I feel bound to observe—I hope in a friendly fashion—that the notion that this early hour on a Tuesday in early November, widely advertised in a business statement two weeks ago as a day on which Parliament would be sitting to do business, is somehow an unreasonable time to debate a matter in which hon. Members are interested strikes even me, an enthusiast for the Jopling changes, as going a bit too far. However, I shall say no more about that.

The hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross), in his characteristically moderate way—and I mean that, even though he used a slightly overheated phrase—said that the Committee would not lie down and die. I never expected that it would, especially in view of the nature of some of its members. I am sure that, not unreasonably, they will continue to make their points.

I say to my hon. Friends the Members for Meriden (Mr. Mills) and for Norfolk, North (Sir R. Howell), as well as other hon. Members on both sides of the House, that I am glad that we have given them an opportunity to remind everyone of what the Committee has achieved. It has enabled me to pay tribute to it for the work that it has done. Actually, the loyalty being shown today by its members and the claims that they are making for their reports confirm my view about the merits of Select Committees as a whole and the important contribution they make—even though I am bound to say that my views on how they should be structured have not changed.

I was asked a number of specific points. First, on the point raised by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) about a reprint of Standing Orders, I have been handed a note that I am trying to digest. I understand that a new volume of Standing Orders will be printed for the start of the next Session, with all the Nolan, Jopling and other changes included. I hope that that will help the hon. Gentleman—although it may not be so helpful to the Labour Deputy Chief Whip, the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon), whom I am delighted to see in the Chamber. I noticed earlier that he was clutching a dog-eared copy of the Standing Orders. No doubt he uses them as his bible whenever he wants to stir up trouble and create difficulties—[Interruption.] I am being attacked from behind by the Government Deputy Chief Whip, my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight). If ever there was a mafia, the Deputy Chief Whips from the two sides of the House must be its core members.

I was grateful to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) for his remarks about minority parties. The hon. Member for Perry Barr answered on my behalf and made the right two points—that it is a matter for the Committee of Selection and that there is a global way of taking account of the representation of minority parties. If the hon. Gentleman were to make strong representations to the Chairman of the Selection Committee about his wish to serve on the new Employment and Education Committee, I am sure that proper weight would be given to that request within the overall position.

The hon. Member for Perry Barr bounced me with the question whether Select Committees could meet in recesses, to which the answer is yes. An oddity that I have resolved, while setting up the new Standards and Privileges Committee, is the fact that our oldest Committees have not been able to meet during recesses although the new Committees have been able to do so. I have brought the old Committees into line with the new ones.

If it is the ambition of the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) or any other hon. Member to meet in the recess, 39 meetings between now and the end of February might prove to be a modest target. After all, the Select Committee considering the Nolan report, which I chaired, managed to meet on that number of occasions despite having been able to fit in only three meetings during the summer recess. Therefore, in a remarkably short House sitting time the Committee did a great deal of work. Indeed, in many weeks it sat for two or three hours, three or four days a week. I commend that example to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West in view of his desire to complete the work that he has undertaken.

The hon. and learned Gentleman asked me to listen. I hope that I have shown that I have done so. Indeed, I have read the report published by his Committee. I have it here—it has a little red sticker on it saying "Immediate". My office was concerned that I should see the report almost hot off the press. I have also read the extensive letter that the hon. and learned Gentleman wrote to my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins), the Chairman of the Liaison Committee, on 24 October.

The problem is that, having studied the report and read the letter, I had already heard all the arguments to which he is now asking me to respond and already responded to them in the points I made earlier, for example, a bigger Committee than intended, a considerable extension of time compared with what had been originally proposed and the power to create a Sub-Committee. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing said, the power to appoint a Sub-Committee was rubbished by the hon. and learned Gentleman as a way of burying or losing things. He should tell that to the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice), who chaired the Civil Service Sub-Committee of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee, which produced a report that has formed the basis of a new code. It was an effective and important report produced by a Sub-Committee.

At the end of the day, however reasonable I am and however much I would claim to have demonstrated my overwhelming reasonableness by the changes that I have already made, I cannot make any more.

Mr. Janner: I deeply regret what the Leader of the House has said in such good humour. Will he at least answer the question about the Central Statistical Office report that is due at the end of January and give the requested assurance to members of the Committee, so that we can at least have some hope of completing the work on that report well before the Committee is dissolved?

Mr. Newton: The hon. and learned Gentleman mentioned the end of January in his letter—I understand that the likely date is either the end of January or mid-February—and it was one of the matters that I took into account. All in all, it is a reasonable compromise.

There is no doubt that it would be very messy if we did what the hon. and learned Gentleman and some members of his Committee have pressed for. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing said, we should then have a Committee interrelating with four Departments of State and four Departments of State trying to interrelate with a number of Committees. It would not be very long before that produced considerable problems for my right hon. Friend the Chairman of the Liaison Committee as a succession of Committee Chairmen came to tell him that someone was poaching on their territory and that they could not do business like that.

As not only a reasonable man but very much a pragmatic man, I think that what I have proposed is, on balance, the best that I can do.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That Standing Order No. 130 (Select committees related to government departments) be amended—

(1) with effect from the beginning of the next Session—

(a) by inserting the following item after item 10 in the Table in paragraph (2):

> "Public Service/Office of Public Service (but excluding the drafting of bills by the Parliamentary Counsel Office)/11/3";

(b) in item 14 in the said Table, after the word 'Industry' in column 2, by inserting the words '(but excluding the Office of Science and Technology)';

(c) in item 16 in the said Table, by leaving out the words "and Civil Service" in column 1 and, in column 2, the words from "Treasury" in line 65 to "Board" in line 69; and

(d) in paragraph (3) by leaving out the words 'and Civil Service'; and

(2) with effect from Friday 1st March—

(a) by leaving out items 3 and 4 in the Table in paragraph (2) and inserting the following item:

> "Education and Employment/Department for Education and Employment/13/4"; and

(b) in paragraph (3) by inserting at the beginning the words "The Education and Employment Committee,".

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Ordered,

That Cheryl Gillan and Mr. William Powell be discharged from the Science and Technology Committee and Mr. Ian Bruce and Mr. Patrick Thompson be added to the Committee.—[Mr. MacKay, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.]

PETITION

Naval Personnel

5.50 pm

Mr. David Jamieson (Plymouth, Devonport): I wish to present a petition on behalf of former naval personnel who were exposed to asbestos in the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s but who cannot claim compensation because of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947. Many of these naval personnel are now suffering from terminal illness.

The petition reads:

> To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in Parliament assembled.
> The Humble Petition of the people of Plymouth and Devon Sheweth that naval veterans of the armed services are seeking redress for the serious illness caused by exposure to asbestos on the warships on which they served.
> Wherefore your Humble Petitioners pray that your honourable House will urgently investigate the situation of affected servicemen and take steps to ensure that they are adequately cared for.
> And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

The petition was collected by the Plymouth Evening Herald which, as you know, Madam Deputy Speaker, is an excellent newspaper. It is signed by Bill Luck, a constituent of mine who is suffering from the effects of asbestos, and by Alan Cooper and Sharon Wright from the Evening Herald who have done so much to bring the matter to the public's attention in our area. It is also signed by 13,000 other people in the Plymouth area.

To lie upon the Table.

East Sussex (Government Funding)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. McLoughlin.]

5.52 pm

Mr. Tim Rathbone (Lewes): Not only was it a reasonable hour to have the previous debate, as my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House pointed out, but it is a reasonable hour for this debate.

This is the final substantive debate of the parliamentary year, and it is only correct that a debate that covers a frightfully important subject affecting East Sussex, which can be said to be the font of parliamentary democracy in that Parliament was first set up after the battle of Lewes, should be the one with which to end the parliamentary year. I am speaking on behalf of all my right hon. and hon. Friends from East Sussex and with whom I have discussed the subject of this debate. Some of them may contribute later.

As a final word of introduction, I should like to say what a great pleasure it is that the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford), is to respond to the debate. He must know more about local government than almost anyone else in the House. The debate is, of course, on various aspects of local government funding. As we have time on our side for once, I hope to cover a broad spectrum of subjects of which I have given my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary notice.

I deal first with the overall level of rate support grant for East Sussex. On the basis of the Chancellor's Budget statement last year, East Sussex county council is projecting an allowable increase of no more than 0.5 per cent. in 1996-97 and 1997-98. Followed through, that would mean a gap in resources of something like £16 million per annum, which means an 8 per cent. or £32 million reduction over the next two years.

It is open to question whether that projection by the Chancellor, which of course applies to overall Government funding for all Government expenditure, will be applied to the rate support grant in East Sussex or, indeed, anywhere else. Were it to apply, the county council has pointed out that it would lead to substantial reductions in the budgets for which it is responsible.

The county council has not attempted to announce its priorities or to give any guidance at all in the consideration of the budget for next year. It has, however, spread reductions pro rata across the board. In so doing, it has not acted as responsibly as it could have done and has certainly given no leadership in terms of consideration of what the reductions might be. For the interest of the House, I shall cite one or two examples.

The county council has suggested a reduction of £9.5 million in its education budget, a matter with which I shall deal later. It has suggested a reduction of £1.5 million for roads and transportation, a reduction of £300,000 for libraries and the arts and a £750,000 reduction for the fire service—although it would probably not be allowed to make such a cut as it would be contrary to Home Office requirements, which might reassure people living in the county. The council has proposed a cut of £3 million in its social services budget. Incidentally, that is a most peculiar cut, as the council has a £4 million surplus in its social services budget at this very moment.

I fear that the council is once again stirring up great concern among many people about what it might have to do were something or other to happen elsewhere.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith (Wealden): My hon. Friend mentioned that the council was stirring up feelings. I can assure him that I have received some 500 letters from parents, many of whom who are shocked and appalled by the conclusions to which they have been driven by that report. Some believe that the county council will be compelled to introduce monumental cuts which will savage the educational system in East Sussex.

Mr. Rathbone: My hon. Friend is absolutely right to draw attention to that fact. I shall deal with so-called education cuts in a moment.

The county council claims that its administrative costs are among the lowest in the country and that steps have already been taken to reduce expenses by cutting down on top management posts. I am not in a position to assess the validity of such claims, but, in view of his deep knowledge of local government, perhaps my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary is.

The district auditor has accepted that any reductions in expenditure will be difficult to achieve. He pointed out that net expenditure on services is already well below the county median per head of population and that East Sussex ranks 28th out of the 39 English county areas. He also said that the county is in a sound financial state. In spite of the auditor's report, there are some questionable aspects of policy and expenditure. I shall cite three by way of illustration, although they are in no way exclusive.

In education, for example, £1.2 million of savings have been identified and are being achieved through the improved administration of school meals. I understand that only £500,000 has so far been allowed in this year's budget. That of itself allows considerable budget leeway, which is pretty important, as I shall remind the House when I speak specifically about education. It also raises the question, however, of whether similar administrative savings can be made elsewhere in education and, indeed, in other departments.

In social services, even though the county threatens the closure of homes and day centres, there is an apparent surplus of £4 million—unspent—in this year's social services budget. If that is the case, or, indeed, if it is anywhere near the truth, it is near criminal that the county council is stirring up so many worries in people's minds about the cuts in social service expenditure—which it has done.

Mrs. Jacqui Lait (Hastings and Rye): Is my hon. Friend aware that, in each of its 700 beds, social services pays itself £100 a week per person more than it is prepared to pay the private sector? It could, in fact, save itself another £4 million if it were to pay itself the same rate as it is prepared to pay the independent sector.

Mr. Rathbone: My hon. Friend is exactly right. To the best of my knowledge, the cost of keeping somebody in a county council rest home is in the region of £295 a week, whereas the cost to the county council of a person being in an independently run rest home is about £195 per week. If one extrapolates, the figure comes to about £4 million—an extremely large amount of money, particularly in the light of the county's enormous cost-cutting suggestions.

[Mr. Rathbone]

Having said all that, I know that there are matters of genuine concern. One is the cost of local government reorganisation. In that, East Sussex is unique in England, since in Brighton and Hove a joint unitary authority is being created out of two boroughs. I do not believe that there is any other instance of that anywhere in the country. That makes the matter very much more complicated than elsewhere, and considerable extra costs in preparing for that reorganisation are already being incurred.

From all accounts, there is a great spirit of co-operation between Brighton, Hove and East Sussex, and all the work together is going well; but, as far as I know, there is no additional Government allowance to cover the added cost to East Sussex, which is of genuine concern to the county.

A second matter of genuine concern is related to the technical question of the area cost adjustment. As the House will know, Ministers are inspecting the application of the area cost adjustment—the way in which local authorities in the south-east of England benefit from additional Government funding to meet the higher cost of providing services in that area. That comes to a substantial amount of money overall: £28 million a year, which is equivalent to about £100 on the average council tax bill.

I understand that, as that process is being reviewed in the coming year, there is a real risk that some of that money, if not all, will be withdrawn from the south-east of England and redistributed to other parts of England, which would leave the county in an extremely difficult budgetary situation unless an extra grant were made available to make up for it.

The third aspect of genuine concern—my concern may not carry all hon. Members—is the effect of capping. In an area where the vast majority of households pay council tax, local government can be held, and be seen to be held, responsible and answerable for its spending plans. With the reduction of the rates support grant as a proportion of the county council's total expenditure, that answerability is of course even further enhanced.

At the moment, for every £1 million that the council decides to spend over the rates support grant, approximately £3.75 is added to band D council tax bills. To put it another way, every additional 1 per cent. of expenditure increases council tax bills by 3.5 per cent. That of itself should act as a good political brake on a council's level of spending. It is far better than imposing a cap, which, quite honestly, allows local government to blame national Government for not being able to do the things that it feels it wants to do, or that it feels people want to have done for them in the local area.

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): Does my hon. Friend agree that it is quite remarkable that, despite all the scaremongering at local level in East Sussex, which he has been explaining with great accuracy, and even though this Adjournment debate has started quite early in the parliamentary day, not a single representative of the Liberal Democrats is in the Chamber?

Mr. Rathbone: That is a good point, although one must point out that there are no Liberal Democrat Members of Parliament in East Sussex. Long may that continue! I shall return to that point in another context.

It seems that capping has two disadvantages—for an area such as East Sussex at least. It psychologically encourages councils to spend up to that limit, which is exactly what happened when the Liberal Democrats took control of East Sussex county council just three years ago. In the first year after they took over, they decided, contrary to all Conservative advice, to spend right up to their limit, and in the process take advantage of the cumulated balances that the Conservative administration had built up; indeed, they are still taking advantage of those balances.

The other great disadvantage, which runs across the whole country, is that capping tends to be applied equally across all counties, irrespective of expenditure needs. In East Sussex this year that has led to an inability—so the county claims—to spend the extra 3.1 per cent. grant on education which was made because of soaring school rolls. The money—believe it or not—was used to reduce council tax.

That cannot be what was in Ministers' minds when capping of East Sussex expenditure was introduced. I sincerely hope that the ministerial review of capping will conclude that capping for counties such as East Sussex should be removed. Failing that—I hope that that will not fail—I hope that there will be some way in which to ring-fence the funding for education so that it gets used for the purposes to which it is being applied, rather than, as has happened this year, for the reduction of council tax, however welcome that may be.

That leads me to the question of education funding, to which some of my hon. Friends have already referred. It is much in the news and in the minds of people in East Sussex because the county council has set up the Education Committee Strategic Forum which produced a so-called consultation report on so-called education cuts, which has caused desperate worries among parents, teachers and school governors everywhere. Those worries are deeply felt and they have been reflected in conversations, in meetings and in my mailbags and those of all my right hon. and hon. Friends who represent parts of East Sussex.

Terms such as "cash crisis" abound. They are based only on the quite correct commitment made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to contain overall Government expenditure in this and future years. I say "quite correct" because that is the smack of firm, competent and considerably responsible Government. Will my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary confirm whether there has ever been any similarity between such national expenditure targets and expenditure by local authorities generally, or by local authorities on education specifically? My belief is that there is no parallel between the two. Such parallels would certainly be peculiar in the light of the very specific reassurances by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and, indeed, by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister about the importance of expenditure on education and the priority that should be given to it.

I fear that the truth is that East Sussex county council has been indulging in completely reprehensible political scaremongering rather than responsible contingency planning, as it claims. For that reason, I have asked for the report to be withdrawn and the consultation scaremongering to be brought to an end. I have had no response and I fear that I probably shall not receive one.

Council leaders and council officials claim that the consultation is an entirely non-political activity and that the concerns are well founded. That claim is made especially about the founding of what has come to be called the East Sussex schools campaign, which is based on the consultation process. The campaign contains within it a belief and a restatement over and again that East Sussex is being compelled to cut £24 million from the school budget when there is no such compulsion and there cannot be as the cuts do not exist. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary can confirm that.

The East Sussex schools campaign refers to real doubt about future nursery education, when the county council arbitrarily and without any debate refused to consider joining the Government's nursery school voucher scheme, which was designed not only to maintain nursery education but to expand it.

The campaign also refers to the activities of schools and the marvellous job that is done within schools. The campaign has organised a meeting in the House of Commons in 10 days' time under the spurious title of "Excellence At Risk". The meeting has not been discussed with, and sponsorship has not been requested from, any of the East Sussex Members of Parliament, all of whom have a genuine concern to improve educational standards and educational funding in East Sussex. The meeting is under the sponsorship of the hon. Members for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie), for Bath (Mr. Foster) and for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler), all of whom are Liberal Democrats who are far removed geographically from East Sussex—they could hardly be further removed. Is it not peculiar, therefore, that the claim is still made that the meeting is all about a non-party political consultation process? I fear that that is bunkum.

This well-orchestrated, politically inspired campaign, which is built round scaremongering proposals, is an attempt not only to cause maximum concern, in which respect it has been heart-rendingly successful, but to cover the less than whole-hearted commitment to education excellence of the Liberal Democrat-controlled East Sussex county council.

I call in witness the fact that education expenditure was 6 per cent. lower than the shire county average for the proportion of total expenditure spent on education in 1994, the most recent year for which comparative figures are available. I call in witness a huge balance of £6 million remaining in the education budget at the end of the previous fiscal year which implies less than full or necessary spend on education. I call in witness the complete lack of search for reductions in expenditure elsewhere which would enable the council to spend the considerable extra moneys made available by the Government for this year to cover the cost of rising student numbers—3.1 per cent. in standard spending assessment versus 1.2 per cent. in other areas.

Mrs. Lait: Is my hon. Friend aware that in schools in East Sussex the percentage of the teaching budget that is spent on supply teachers is 10 per cent., whereas in grant-maintained schools it is down to about 2 per cent? If the local authority schools could manage to get the number of supply teachers down to the level in grant-maintained schools, would not the schools have sufficient money not only to provide the education that we all wish to be provided but to end the campaign of cuts?

Mr. Rathbone: It sounds as if my hon. Friend has put her finger precisely on yet another example of administrative and professional costs which could be reduced to increase educational standards.

As with Government funding for health services, social services and practically everything else, there will never be enough money to do everything that everybody wants to do in education. The Government have to be responsible in proposing levels of public expenditure that reflect national economic interests, especially a continuing low rate of inflation. The county council has to be equally responsible in allocating funding between and within the services that it has to provide for the people living in its area. It is worrying, therefore, and much to be regretted that anyone should play politics with our children's education as the East Sussex education authority has been doing.

The House would agree that nothing is more important than a good education service and proper educational standards. The whole thrust of our Government's education policy has been devoted to achieving that. It should not and must not be placed in jeopardy; we are all committed to that.

Sir Peter Hordern (Horsham): I think that my hon. Friend said that East Sussex county council was talking in terms of having to make a reduction of £24 million. He may be interested to know that West Sussex county council is talking in terms of having to make a cut of £25 million. It is extraordinary that the figures should be so similar; neither is based on anything in the public expenditure White Paper. In addition, West Sussex has enjoyed the highest increase in revenue support grant of any authority in the country.

Mr. Rathbone: I always welcome support from across the border, especially from my right hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern). I welcome that support now and I believe that it underlines the absurdity of the awful, gossipy scaremongering in which East Sussex county council has been indulging. I hope that my right hon. Friend and his constituents have not been burdened with the same sort of scaremongering in West Sussex.

I now turn to a longer-term element of funding and planning for East Sussex which is causing considerable concern now—the current review of the East Sussex structure plan. Once again, the county council has produced proposals that cut across all good sense and that would threaten the character of the towns, villages and beautiful countryside of East Sussex. There are proposals for huge numbers of new homes to be built in East Sussex between 2006 and 2011. That seems a long way off, but the proposals are being discussed now and are causing concern now.

There are proposals for 800 new homes on the edge of Polegate, an enormous increase of 25 per cent. to that small town. There are proposals for new settlements—a peculiar new term which has crept into the planning language as if one was part of the wild west of America—somewhere between Polegate and Lewes, and somewhere between Lewes and Wivelsfield. They could amount to 10,000 homes, requiring considerable infrastructure as well as housing. What a horrendous erosion of magnificent countryside that would be. There are proposals to expand Sussex villages, such as Wivelsfield,

[Mr. Rathbone]

Newick, Ringmer and Ditchling, expansion that would put the character of those villages at risk. The developments are close to the south downs, in the beautiful Sussex weald, and are close to areas of outstanding natural beauty which I am sure you know only too well, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Over the years, I have been in regular contact with Environment Ministers—including my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary—and their predecessors to plead for a more sophisticated reading of housing needs in the south-east generally and in East Sussex in particular. Special regard must be given to the drastic increase in single-occupancy homes, which can and should be accommodated in cities and towns. I believe that there are 100,000 unoccupied houses in London, and there are at least 5,000 unoccupied houses in Brighton. I hope that the Government's review of requirements will benefit not only those people who come to live in the area but those people who have been established there for many years.

I hope that my hon. Friend will confirm that the present requirements are not tablets handed down by national Government to the county councils to execute. It is my belief that the requirements have been agreed between the Government and those involved with the south-east regional plan, including representatives from all the councils in the south-east. There is continual liaison between the two as the figures become refined. If that is the case, it is ridiculous for local politicians to blame the Government for the plans, as the local county council is partly and jointly responsible for them.

Thousands of submissions were made to the county council during the recent consultation process seeking drastic and fundamental reconsideration of the structure plan review. I hope that East Sussex county council will heed those requests and that the Under-Secretary will be able to confirm to the House that the council is responsible for those plans and must react to the public consultation process.

I apologise to the House, as I have gone on at somewhat greater length than was my intention, but all the points that I have raised here this afternoon are close to the hearts of the people who live in East Sussex. They have expressed their worries to me and to my colleagues representing the county. I welcome the opportunity to raise those concerns with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary.

Sir Timothy Sainsbury (Hove): I rise to do two things. First, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) on giving the House the opportunity to discuss an important subject, and on putting the facts and figures of the matter so eloquently before the House. Secondly, I want to support as strongly as I can everything that my hon. Friend said. Perhaps I should take exception to my hon. Friend's remarks about the beautiful countryside of east Sussex as I have an entirely urban constituency, but I share his sentiments.

I support what my hon. Friend said about the area cost adjustment. That is very important, and he is entirely justified in saying that it should be maintained. I agree also with what my hon. Friend said about the cost of reorganisation, and about the rather unusual reorganisation in East Sussex and its implications for the staff involved. I also support what he said about capping. He said that he might not find sympathy for his views from my right hon. and hon. Friends on the Front Bench, but he made a valid point about the effect of capping in East Sussex.

Most of all, I support my hon. Friend's attack on the inexcusable scaremongering of the Liberal Democrats—who have been supported by Labour—in the county council. I visited the St. John's day centre in my constituency a couple of weeks ago. Any hon. Member would have been distressed to see the concern which has been caused to the elderly people who use that centre, and the quite unjustified alarm that has been given to them about the future of the centre's funding. My hon. Friend has set out the figures relating to the social services and to the £4 million surplus, and to frighten elderly people who use day centres on those grounds is totally inexcusable.

My hon. Friend rightly said that the worst manifestation of the scaremongering campaign has been seen in the education budget. During the past 15 years, I have witnessed a considerable improvement in the schools in my constituency. In general, we have a high standard and we can be proud of what they achieve and the quality of teaching they provide. It is distressing that head teachers, governors and—most of all—parents in my constituency have been so alarmed by the county council's scaremongering about massive cuts in funding of £24 million, or 10 per cent. The council has also pretended that the cuts will take place in one year, and blames it all on the Government.

The phoneyness and falseness of the campaign has been portrayed in the "East Sussex Education Committee Strategic Forum". The first page of the document is signed by the county education officer, and contains the revealing statement that > "It is possible that up to 10 per cent. reductions in the budget may be necessary over this time".

The time referred to is the three years between 1996 and 1999. That puts the scaremongering campaign in its proper perspective.

Mr. Waterson: Is my hon. Friend aware that the county treasurer's worst case scenario involves a reduction of only 8 per cent. overall?

Sir Timothy Sainsbury: My hon. Friend powerfully reinforces my point about political scaremongering. The 8 per cent. to which the county treasurer refers would again be spread over three years, and would not be introduced in one year.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: I apologise for interrupting my right hon. Friend to repeat a point which has been made, but it needs to be emphasised. The quotation from the county education officer is couched in moderate language. However, the notice issued by the three Liberal Democrat Members to whom my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) referred—they have not even done us the courtesy of coming to the debate or informing us that they were sponsoring a meeting—draws attention to a meeting at which it was said that East Sussex would be "compelled" to accept £24 million cuts. I received many letters from constituents who attended meetings organised by governors and headmasters of schools and attended by parents and teachers. They wrote to me to say that there would be no alternative but to knuckle under unless we made representations to the Government on the matter.

Sir Timothy Sainsbury: My hon. Friend vividly illustrates the party-political posturing which is causing alarm and concern. Responsible chief officers must stick accurately to the facts, and the county education officer's quote puts matter in perspective. The remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes about the document were entirely justified. The only proper and honourable course for the Liberal Democrat-controlled county council now is to withdraw the document and to apologise to those whom it has alarmed and scared by its campaign.

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): I am very pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate, and I join my right hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Sir T. Sainsbury) in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) on obtaining it. The debate has been well attended by Conservative Members representing constituencies in East Sussex, and I am pleased to see my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Sir D. Spencer) in the Chamber.

I shall develop some of the themes expressed so well by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes in his remarks. There is a pattern of politically inspired scaremongering by the Liberal Democrats and their Labour coalition partners in East Sussex. We have seen it occur in debates on libraries, social services, the fire service and education. There has been a series of well-timed announcements of considerable drama about cuts which have to be made—it is said—as a result of the wicked Conservative Government. Perhaps the most dramatic example was in the fire service. Within days or almost hours of announcing a new offshore firefighting facility, the council made another announcement that it was threatened by possible cuts. That is precisely the approach adopted by the current administration in East Sussex which is so destabilising. It is worrying for council tax payers, parents, governors and teachers and it must be destabilising for the staff who have to operate the services when they are subject to political ping-pong all the time.

My hon. Friend the Member for Lewes talked about social services. There are threats to close homes and day centres, yet there is on any view a projected substantial underspend this year on care in the community. That strikes me as remarkable because when I raise cases on behalf of my constituents the answer that I am given almost without exception is that there is a lack of resources—again, presumably, the Government's fault.

I have mentioned libraries, but let me deal with education. My hon. Friend the Member for Lewes put a powerful case, as did my right hon. Friend the Member for Hove, on education. In my constituency there is a substantial need and demand for pre-school education. I am sure that the same applies to the constituencies of my hon. Friends who are present this evening. I know that because of the activities of IPNA, the independent nursery operators, with which I have worked closely and from the various play groups that I have visited in recent months, many connected with the Pre-School Learning Alliance.

Contrary to its image in some parts of the world, Eastbourne is a town growing younger at a rapid rate. That means that there are many families with young children. We all know—the evidence is striking—that children who have had the benefit of pre-school education in some form tend to do a lot better when they go into formal schooling. Along with my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mrs. Lait), who is in her place, I was one of the first to write to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education when she made her announcement a few months ago about nursery education. I wrote to say how useful and valuable it would be if East Sussex was one of the authorities involved in the pilot scheme so that parents could be some of the first beneficiaries of the vouchers worth, say, £1,100 a year which would be made available for all four-year-olds so that they could have some form of pre-school education.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes has already said, the suggestion that East Sussex should be part of the pilot scheme has been dismissed out of hand, not by the county council or the local education authority, or even by the East Sussex education committee, but by the chairman of that committee, Councillor Norcross. Barely had the suggestion been made than he issued a statement describing the scheme as a political con which he wanted nothing to do with. Not only have elected members of the authority not had the opportunity even to debate the issue but parents and children in my constituency and across East Sussex have been denied the opportunity of pre-school education.

Mrs. Lait: I know that my hon. Friend has read closely the draft consultation document. Does he agree that it is appalling, given the circumstances with regard to nursery education that he has outlined and the opportunities that would be available to parents to use the nursery vouchers, that one of the options for cuts suggested by the Liberal Democrats is nursery education?

Mr. Waterson: My hon. Friend is right. I shall describe in a moment how I believe that whenever the so-called "cuts" are proposed, they tend to be the ones most likely to upset parents such as the teaching of French and music, special education and nursery schools.

The plain truth is that the East Sussex LEA is sulking because it wanted the Government to give it a big bag of money to run pre-school education the length and breadth of East Sussex. It did not want to see independent nurseries operated, heaven forbid, by the private sector, or even playgroups operated by committed people whether in church halls or more dedicated facilities. They wanted nursery education to be operated as a wholly owned subsidiary of the LEA. That is exactly why it has reacted so precipitately against the Government's trial scheme. When one leaves aside all the political rhetoric that is flying around, what all this means is that a raft of children in my constituency and elsewhere will be denied the opportunity of pre-school education for the one and only time in their lives. That is exactly because of a politically motivated decision by the chairman of the education committee. As I have said, there was no consultation about that decision.

My hon. Friends have referred in some detail to the letters that we have been receiving. As I said when I spoke at the Ratton school awards ceremony in my constituency last Friday, I am not surprised that parents, governors and teachers have written to me in those terms and nor do I blame them. After all, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if someone who seemed to know what he was talking about told you that you were going to be hit on the head by a meteor, you would be worried about being hit on the head by a meteor, but that would not mean to say that it was right.

The disgraceful aspect of this episode is that people who know better because they are professionals or the councillors involved in the education part of the authority's work have allowed a document to go out widely in East Sussex which contains some massive and extremely pessimistic assumptions. Even Members of Parliament do not yet know the allocation for education spending for 1996-97. We will not know, and therefore East Sussex cannot know, what the allocation will be until after the Budget. I am pretty sure that education spending will rise. The only question is by how much.

I am sure that most of my constituents agree that the Government should try to control public spending and borrowing. Even the report recognises that > "Opposition political parties do not suggest that a change of Government would lead to a dramatic change of policy."

I stress again that we cannot yet know the allocation for the coming year. East Sussex county council has at present a total budget of about £420 million. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes that it is difficult to believe that there is no scope for cutting waste and bureaucracy within that figure. We have heard how the LEA has just effected a saving of £1.2 million on school meals alone.

I wish to have assurances from the authors of the document that any increase in spending on education in East Sussex will be passed in full to the schools and not spent on central administration—

Mr. Rathbone: Or on a reduction in the council tax.

Mr. Waterson: Or, as my hon. Friend says, on a reduction in the council tax.

The council's reserves are estimated at some £15 million, whereas the figure recommended by the National Audit Office is only £8 million. It seems to me that judicious use of reserves plus cutting out any waste could produce significant additional funding for the chalkface—the schools themselves. It seems to me that some of the conclusions reached in this curious document about possible cuts are surprising and worrying. I suspect that they are designed to be worrying.

It is an abdication of the local education authority's responsibilities to invite people to tick boxes at the end of the report to show which cuts they prefer. Of course, if one's child is doing rather well at his or her music lessons, one will clearly not tick that box.

The truth is that we elect councillors to do the task of allocating significant resources, difficult though it sometimes is. Only councillors and the officers who advise them have the detailed information necessary to make those choices. One of the features of the Liberal Democrats, even when they temporarily win power in a local authority, is that they continue to behave as though they were in opposition. They do not like making decisions. It is in the nature of running any political organisation that decisions have to be made and it is a sad fact that they tend to upset one group or another. How much easier, even when one is nominally in charge, simply to abdicate that responsibility.

A considerable amount of money and officer time has been spent on producing the document, for no great purpose except to worry parents, governors and teachers. The report accepts that > "the Education Service in East Sussex is relatively well funded. Pupil/teacher ratios in particular bear favourable comparisons".

Along with my colleagues, I will do all I can to continue to press for sufficient funding to maintain those high standards. I hope that when it is proved that these alarmist conclusions are not accurate, as I believe to be the case, the people of East Sussex will receive an apology from the architects of the document and the campaign behind it. People are playing politics with other people's lives and their aspirations for their children—the one thing about which almost everyone gets very passionate.

In conclusion, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you may have seen, as I did recently, that the Liberal Democrats have a new policy for what they call a "virtual Parliament", by which they mean Parliament being organised by video links and the Internet, so that hon. Members would not have to trouble themselves to come to this place, but could operate from their constituencies. That is quite appropriate for the Liberal Democrats because a virtual Parliament would merely confirm that they are virtually never here anyway, and tonight is no exception.

We have heard how the document was produced. It was based on specious assumptions, with strange conclusions, and it has been used as the basis for a campaign directed at parents, teachers and governors and, through them, at myself and fellow Conservative Members, and a campaign to be organised in the House, of which we have had no notice. That gives away the purpose behind the entire operation—to cause political trouble. It is not directed at the welfare of children in East Sussex.

That shows what the campaign is about. I hope that the people of East Sussex will realise how people have been trying to manipulate them and how remarkable it is that, despite the alleged seriousness of the issues, not a single Liberal Democrat is in the Chamber to participate in this debate.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Sir Paul Beresford): I am particularly grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone) for initiating the debate. Looking over my shoulder at one point, I began to wonder whether the East Sussex mafia—I think that almost every Conservative Member representing the county is present—was here as a lynching party. I am relieved that the pressure has landed on East Sussex county council, as it deserved.

This is a good opportunity to discuss some local government measures and local government resources. As hon. Member after hon. Member said, there appears to be a campaign. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern), who was described as an hon. Friend from across the border, pointed out, that county council is not the only one in the campaign, but it is interesting that the more virulent and unpleasant campaign seems to have come from the Liberal Democrats, with the Labour party not far behind.

Before coming to the House, I always saw such campaigns as "bleeding stumps" campaigns. At the last minute, when it is too late for people to react, the word "cuts" comes out—it is never savings, always cuts. The alarmists use the opportunity to go for the most valuable and treasured service—the one that will hurt the most. They then threaten to cut it off and wave the bleeding stump around, hence the name of the syndrome. I am afraid that East Sussex is not the only authority to do so. Many others are doing the same—I could mention West Sussex, Nottinghamshire and a number of others.

There is a straight campaign, but this time it may have been carried too far. That certainly seems to be the case in East Sussex, as I have never seen so many cross Conservative Members of Parliament utilising the opportunity of a lengthened Adjournment debate. The vehemence was such that I feared that it would last until 10 o'clock.

As my hon. Friends are aware, local government spending for 1996-97 will be announced as part of the Budget statement on 28 November. As a result, they will appreciate that I am not in a position to answer some of the questions on the proposed settlement.

While we are talking about the figures and the fact that the council has utilised last year's and extrapolated from them, let me say that I find it interesting that, when local authorities look for increases they talk of percentages, but when they are talking of cuts they use figures. Of course, figures are more dramatic in the minds of the people whom they are trying to frighten.

I am aware that the total amounts involved in the local government settlement for 1995-96 were not as much as local authorities wished. I do not think that they ever have been. Total standard spending rose by 2.2 per cent., however, which was a fair settlement. I believe, particularly because of my background, that local authorities have sufficient resources to carry out their functions. It is too easy for an authority to pick a wish list, add new demands, add it all up—the taxpayer picks up the bill—and, if it is not arrived at, say that it is the result of cuts.

There ought to be a change. We must recognise the importance to the economy of the way in which local authorities spend their finances. About 25 per cent. of Government expenditure is local government expenditure. It is just as important for local government to squeeze effectiveness out of every drop of other people's money spent as it is for central Government. We need local authorities to look to that. They must realise that they can squeeze full value out of every pound that they spend. They must be more efficient and provide better services. An old local authority motto is, "More services, better services, but for less cost." It can be done.

My hon. Friend the Member for Lewes and others highlighted issues relating to East Sussex and areas of savings. It is a lesson to councillors that, if Members of Parliament without the expertise, the figures and the official advice that they would receive if they were councillors, can find the savings, it ill behoves the local authority not to do the same by utilising the expertise at its disposal.

Each local authority has its own problems and, equally, should sort out its own local solutions. The Government's responsibility is for the overall level of resources available to local government and for the fluidity of the means of resource distribution among authorities.

Every year, we have to set the demands of local authorities in the context of what the country can afford as a whole and that is right. Local government spending accounts for a quarter of all public spending and no Government, including—in the dim and distant past—the last Labour Government, could afford to ignore it. No Government will in the future.

Public spending decisions are made in the context of a medium-term financial strategy to promote sustained economic growth and thus ensure higher living standards. The best way to protect local government services is to ensure that the national economy is strong and inflation under control. To that end, we must continue to seek better use of existing public expenditure and to keep control of public sector bills. Both local and central Government have essential parts to play in bringing about those benefits.

I have no doubt—this has been illustrated tonight—that there is still scope for increased efficiency in East Sussex and in every other local authority despite the claim made by some, or many, that the potential for more effective working has been exhausted. If successful private business can use every opportunity to find a better way of doing things at better value, and bearing in mind the fact that nothing stays the same in business—after all, the provision of public services is a business—such opportunities should be taken by local authorities.

The local authority associations acknowledge that significant efficiency gains are there for the taking. In effect, we need less whingeing and more action. I was interested in the comment of my hon. Friend the Member for Lewes about administration and East Sussex's claim that it is among the best local authorities. Anyone who examined the figures would question that.

For example, consider the number of central full-time administrators per thousand of population: in Essex, it is 12.1; in Hampshire, 12.5; in Kent, 13.1; in Surrey, 11.6; and in West Sussex, 13.2, giving an average of 12.5. West Sussex, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Horsham noted, has the highest figure among that small contingent of councils. However, East Sussex outdoes it with a figure of 14.4. That could mean that some considerable savings are available.

Sir Andrew Bowden (Brighton, Kemptown): I apologise for not being here earlier in the debate.

I suspect that East Sussex county council is trying to put up a smokescreen to conceal its inefficiency, given the excessive number of administrators in relation to the county's population. What makes me angry is that the way in which it has presented information has frightened parents and teachers and misled even governing bodies.

I received a copy of a letter that was sent to the Prime Minister by the chairman of a governing body which said specifically, without qualification, that, as a result of Government action, £26 million would be cut from the education budget in the next financial year. There was no qualification at all. I can only say that the chairman of that governing body—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Geoffrey Lofthouse): Order. I appreciate that the hon. Gentleman was late and wants to contribute, but his intervention is turning into a speech.

Sir Andrew Bowden: May I ask a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call the Minister.

Sir Paul Beresford: My hon. Friend is right. He has put down, as a physician would say, the diagnostic pointers to what I call the "bleeding stumps" syndrome. That is exactly what we are talking about.

[Sir Paul Beresford]

I shall give one or two other examples. Standard spending assessment per head for this financial year is in the region of £570. East Sussex ranks slightly above the middle figure for all the counties. If other counties can provide the same service, or better, for less, perhaps East Sussex should take a hint. On the SSA for education, East Sussex is the second highest out of 38 counties. West Sussex, since my hon. right Friend the Member for Horsham is here, is 11th. The complaints and the whingeing do not carry the weight that they ought to.

Much has been made of area cost adjustment. This is analysed each year using the data available from the previous year. The data are distributed to the local authority associations and this year went out in August. East Sussex should be aware, unless communications have completely broken down, that the data show a shift of 0.5 per cent. Yes, that is negative, but it is 0.5 per cent. and not quite what the bleeding stumps syndrome diagnosis would suggest.

Education funding has been raised as a matter of special concern, mainly because parents feel vulnerable. Local education authorities have faced some tight decisions in setting their budgets this year, but I do not believe or accept that they need to do anything that would lead to a drop in standards. In fact, with a little imagination, they could improve them, especially when we remember that schools, as well as local authorities, have a variety of means with which to make efficiency gains and to improve standards without incurring extra costs. My hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mrs. Lait) gave an example—and that was from somebody who is not at the chalk face and who does not have the figures available. If they are easily available for her to give to the House, I am quite sure that the local authority could do that, and more.

As has been mentioned, the Prime Minister has said that education will be given priority as the economy delivers further growth. Successive settlements have taken into account factors such as the increase in pupils, and future settlements will continue to do so.

My hon. Friend the Member for Lewes questioned ring fencing. I do not agree with him. The vast majority of government funding for local authority spending on education is provided by way of an un-ring-fenced grant, if hon. Members will excuse the awkward phrase. I believe that that should remain so because local authorities are best placed to decide their spending priorities in the light of local needs and the available resources. The Government cannot dictate such minutiae, and as an ex-local government member, I think that it is vital that local authorities have that opportunity but that they are then held responsible by the public for those decisions rather than shirking them with the sort of campaign that East Sussex is pursuing.

It is important for local democracy that there is a choice available but it is also important for local accountability. Local authorities must be answerable to their electorate, and I hope that in six months, or in a year's time, we may be able to review what has been said by East Sussex and question its decisions and alarmist statements. I hope that parents and governors will also do that and reflect on what has been said and on what has happened and what could have happened, especially if all the local education funding was not allocated to the schools.

Mention was made of nurseries and vouchers and the rather dog-in-the-manger attitude taken by East Sussex. I remember, before the days of vouchers, as someone who was involved in a unitary authority, being interested in the opportunity that was offered. That authority, with no positive shift in Government spending, was able to use the availability of nurseries and nursery education in such a way that it was able to offer every three and four-year-old child nursery education free, without nursery vouchers. In addition, it encouraged private sector nurseries and nursery education and a top-and-tailing, or latchkey, system. If that was possible in the difficult parts of central London in which many of us have worked as local authority members, I should have thought that it would be simple for a local authority such as East Sussex to do the same. The opportunity of vouchers is a challenge for local authorities to meet, if they are capable of outdoing the private sector.

Once the total resources available for local government have been decided, they will be distributed according to need. Each year, the standard spending assessment methodology is discussed in detail and at length with representatives of local government, and each year it is updated and improved. It is an open and fair system. The difficulty that I have with it is that it began as a simple system and the refinements seem to make it worse day by day.

One element of the distribution formula that always gives rise to arguments is the area cost adjustment. No one disputes the fact that some adjustment to take account of higher costs in some parts of the country is needed, but those who get it say that they are not getting enough and those who do not, say that those getting it are getting too much. The Government cannot win.

Both my Department and the local authority associations carried out work on the area cost adjustment this year. The Department commissioned research intended to see whether the zones used for the area cost adjustment could be defined more satisfactorily, particularly by reference to travel-to-work areas. The associations carried out further analysis of those higher costs in London and the south-east. They also sought to define alternative ways of determining the area cost adjustment.

Despite that work, we have had to conclude that, so far, we have nothing that is sufficiently well founded to provide a basis for the area cost adjustment which we could be confident represented an improvement. We accept, however, that the present methodology causes considerable dissatisfaction outside the south-east. We need to continue to investigate potential improvements.

The Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration met leaders of the local authority associations on 16 October to discuss concerns about the effects if changes were made to the area cost adjustment. During the meeting, he proposed to the local authority associations that we set up an independent review of the area cost adjustment. We would ask it to seek a basis for the area cost adjustment that is conceptually sound, achieves the widest possible acceptance among local authorities in all parts of the country, and is practical to apply—there is nothing like hoping.

We have suggested to the associations that the review be steered by a group of three, chaired by a leading academic economist. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh, no!"] I note the cynicism. The other members would be a nominee of the local authority associations and a nominee of the Department. We would expect the review to require research to be commissioned, the cost of which would be met by the Department. We would ask for the review to be completed by June 1996, so that its findings could be taken into account when determining the standard spending assessments for the following year.

My hon. Friend the Member for Lewes mentioned capping. That subject comes up for discussion every year. Hon. Members will understand that capping has been successful in ensuring that all authorities play their part in the restraint of public expenditure, and it has protected council tax payers from high bills. As hon. Members will know from some of the conferences—one in particular—there are two sides to the argument. The Secretary of State and I are well aware of the debate, but the abolition of capping could lead to increases in council taxes and hence to higher public expenditure. Moreover, such increases feed through to Government spending on benefits. Such a policy would therefore conflict with our stated aim to reduce the share of the nation's wealth that is taken by the public sector.

Nevertheless, this year, as every year, we are considering our approach to capping as part of the next local government finance settlement. The Secretary of State will announce his intentions for capping at the same time as his proposals for the 1996-97 settlement. As in previous years, he will be happy to meet authorities to allow them to make representations, once that announcement has been made.

It has been mentioned that East Sussex is spending at its capping limit. It is inherent in the rationale behind capping that, for local authorities budgeting above their SSA, increases in SSA do not necessarily feed through into increases in the cap limit. That is to ensure that, over time, such authorities bring their budgets into closer alignment with their SSAs. As I have said, I am not in a position at this stage to signal any proposals for capping. I am afraid that my hon. Friend will have to wait for the announcement, but he will have expected that.

My hon. Friend also mentioned housing requirements. I understand that the county council's suggestion that continuing housing requirements in the county might be met by completely new settlements has aroused strong feelings—to put it mildly. This option is considered in its draft—I emphasise the word, "draft"—proposals for housing and employment on which it has recently consulted the public as part of the structure plan review. That document makes it clear that no decisions have been taken on the draft proposals, and that the views of the local people, especially, I hope, of local Members of Parliament, are important to the council in deciding where new developments might be accommodated in the country.

I hope that local people will take the opportunity to make their views known to the county council so that those can be taken into account in developing the new draft plan. There will be a further opportunity to make representations in the new year, and an examination in public may be held on selected issues before an independent panel, which would report to the county council and may recommend changes. If the council makes changes, it must advertise them and provide another opportunity for objections and representations to be made. In that way, the development plan system allows for appropriate consideration of development needs and can meet those in a way that is sensitive to other key planning objectives of conserving the countryside and the built heritage.

This has been an interesting debate. I hope that Liberal Democrat and Labour councillors in East Sussex take note of the points that have been made and recognise that they are scaremongering. A final example of that was the prospect of Brighton and Hove unitary authority not gaining finances that would be available to other shadow authorities. That is not so. It will be treated no differently from other shadow authorities. I know from my experience of the delightful disappearance of the Greater London council, followed by that of the Inner London education authority, and of the development of unitary authorities within London, that the opportunities for efficiency savings to produce better services for less for the public in general were massive in unitary authority areas. I hope that, especially in the case of Brighton and Hove, where two authorities are linked and then become a unitary authority, the opportunity for even greater savings are recognised and achieved.

The Liberal Democrats distribute at irregular intervals a leaflet called "Focus". I hope that they recognise that, in any good business, as one sets one's budget at the beginning of the financial year, one focuses on the anticipated shifts in expenditure throughout that financial year through to the next. To leave it to this stage to look for savings might mean that cuts must be imposed. That is the fault of members of the local authority. Looking over my shoulder, I anticipate that Conservative Members of Parliament will drum that message home vehemently and try to spell out to parents that the "bleeding stump" syndrome does not exist if the local authority is efficient.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at eight minutes past Seven o'clock.

Prorogation

Her Majesty's Most Gracious Speech

Madam Speaker: I have further to acquaint the House that the Lord High Chancellor, one of the Lord Commissioners, delivered Her Majesty's Speech to both Houses of Parliament, in pursuance of Her Majesty's Command. For greater accuracy, I have obtained a copy and also directed that the terms of the speech be printed in the Votes and Proceedings. Copies are being made available in the Vote Office.

The Gracious Speech was as follows:

My Lords and Members of the House of Commons

The Duke of Edinburgh and I were pleased to receive the State Visits of His Highness the Amir of Kuwait in May and His Excellency the President of Finland in October. We also remember with great pleasure our State Visit to South Africa in March. We are enjoying our visit to New Zealand, where we shall be present at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting.

The Duke of Edinburgh and I were pleased to receive Heads of State and Government, or their representatives, from fifty-six countries, to commemorate Victory in Europe Day in May. We were also pleased to see many veterans, and representatives from countries whose forces served under the Crown during the Second World War, in London in August to attend the ceremonies to commemorate the fiftieth anniversaries of the end of the Second World War.

We were pleased to attend the ceremony marking the Fiftieth Anniversary of the signing of the United Nations Charter in London in June.

My Government continued to make provision for the defence of the United Kingdom and our allies and for the promotion of international peace and stability. They were among the leading participants in United Nations peace-keeping operations. They contributed to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and to the development of effective and reliable European defence arrangements which complement those of NATO. They welcomed the success of the Partnership for Peace between the countries of NATO and other countries of Europe; the commitment by NATO and Russia to build a co-operative relationship; and the decision to extend indefinitely the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

My Government continued to be at the forefront of attempts to find a lasting solution to the crisis in the former Yugoslavia. In response to a worsening of the conflict there, they substantially increased the British contribution to United Nations operations and provided humanitarian aid on a significant scale to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population. In Africa, my Government helped the United Nations and the Organisation of African Unity in their work to prevent and resolve conflicts.

My Government have continued to act vigorously against terrorism, drugs and organised crime, both in the United Kingdom and overseas.

In the European Union, my Government welcomed the accession of Sweden, Finland and Austria. They worked to promote a closer relationship between the European Union and the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, with a view to the enlargement of the Union. They continued to help the former communist states of Europe and Asia to establish democratic market economies: bilaterally, using the Know How Fund, and together with our European Union Partners.

My Government contributed to the European Union's efforts to combat unemployment and promote growth. They secured agreement to liberalise telecommunications by 1998. They worked to promote effective action against fraud and to achieve higher standards of farm animal welfare throughout the European Union. They participated in meetings of the Study Group which is preparing for the 1996 Inter-Governmental Conference. They welcomed the Commission's first annual report on subsidiarity.

Reducing poverty in the poorest countries remained a priority. To this end, my Government continued a substantial overseas aid programme and took a leading role in securing more generous terms for bilateral debt relief for the poorest, most indebted countries.

At the Summit of the seven leading industrialised nations in Halifax in June, my Government contributed to far-reaching proposals on the reform of the international financial institutions and the United Nations. They worked at home and with our European Union partners to implement the outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations.

In the interests of the people of Hong Kong, my Government worked to achieve a smooth transfer of sovereignty to China in 1997. My Government in Bermuda consulted the people of Bermuda about the future constitutional arrangements for the Territory and its relationship with the United Kingdom. My Government gave assistance to the Cayman Islands to alleviate the problems caused by the arrival of a large number of migrants from Cuba in 1994.

In Northern Ireland my Government have continued to promote peace and political stability and to encourage progress towards a political settlement. They held substantive talks with the Northern Ireland parties and other exploratory talks. They published a document describing a framework for a political accommodation in respect of Northern Ireland. Legislation has been passed to enable certain prisoners to be released on licence at the half-way point of their sentence. My Government have sought to improve social and economic conditions through inward investment and other means.

Members of the House of Commons

I thank you for the provision you have made for the honour and dignity of the Crown and for the public service.

My Lords and Members of the House of Commons

My Government have pursued firm financial policies which have allowed recovery to broaden and strengthen, while maintaining low inflation. Measures have been taken to ensure that the public sector borrowing requirement is brought back towards balance over the medium term.

My Government showed their commitment to improving the nation's competitiveness through the White Paper "Competitiveness: Forging Ahead." Legislation has been passed to promote increased competition in the supply of gas to customers, and to reform the agricultural tenancy laws in England and Wales, so that more agricultural land is made available for rent. The first proposals were made for use of the new deregulation order-making power.

An Act has been passed to create a Jobseeker's Allowance, reforming benefits for unemployed people and giving them better help into work.

The Sunday licensing hours have been revised.

My Government continued to pursue a programme of privatisation with the successful sale of the coal mining activities of British Coal. They published a White Paper on the future prospects for nuclear power in the United Kingdom and began work to transfer parts of the industry to the private sector.

An Act has been passed which takes forward my Government's commitment to sustainable development and the protection of the environment.

The criminal justice system has been improved through legislation to establish a Criminal Cases Review Commission for England, Wales and Northern Ireland and to provide statutory authority for a compensation scheme for victims of violent crime. Legislation has also been enacted to reform the Scottish criminal justice system and the law relating to children and their families in Scotland.

Legislation has been passed to combat discrimination against disabled people; to improve child support; to equalise the State Pension age between men and women; and to improve security, equality and choice in non-state pensions.

Health services have been strengthened. An Act has been passed to make further improvements to the management of the National Health Service. There has also been legislation to provide for people with a severe mental disorder discharged from hospital to be cared for under supervision, and to increase the powers of the General Medical Council to deal with doctors whose professional performance is seriously deficient.

Further successful use has been made of new procedures for enacting uncontroversial measures of law reform.

Other important measures have been enacted.

My Lords and Members of the House of Commons

I pray that the blessing of Almighty God may attend you.

Thereafter a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read, after which the Lord Chancellor said:

"My Lords and Members of the House of Commons: by virtue of Her Majesty's Commission which has now been read, we do, in Her Majesty's name, and in obedience to Her Majesty's Commands prorogue this Parliament to Wednesday the fifteenth day of this instant November, to be then here holden and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Wednesday the fifteenth day of this instant November."

End of the Third Session (opened on 16 November 1994) of the Fifty-First Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, in the Forty-Third Year of the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 30 October 1995

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Dementia Relief Trust

Ms Short: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Dementia Relief Trust to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.. [40713]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 6 November to Friday 10 November 1995.

TREASURY

Direct and Indirect Taxation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 19 December to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith), Official Report, columns 944-50, providing a table giving estimates for the burden of direct and indirect taxes in 1996–97 based on the 1995–96 indexed tax and national insurance regime. [39098]

Mr. Jack: The burden of direct and indirect taxes in 1996–97 will depend on the level of income and on spending patterns. Figures showing the impact of tax on specimen households will be available after the Budget in the usual way, based on revenue forecasts and economic assumptions published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". It would be misleading to provide figures on the basis of speculative assumptions.

National Lottery

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the tax revenue arising from the sale of national lottery tickets for each of the last 12 months. [39743]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The sale of national lottery tickets began in November 1994. The receipts of lottery duty for each month since are:

	£ 000's
December 1994	11,629
January 1995	32,755
February 1995	29,979
March 1995	29,542
April 1995	32,860
May 1995	64,191
June 1995	52,756
July 1995	50,962
August 1995	60,433
September 1995	45,611

Steam Rollers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to remove vehicle excise duty from steam rollers, preserved working models; and if he will make a statement. [38116]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It would not be appropriate to comment on detailed tax issues in the run-up to the Budget.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total estimate revenue which will be raised by the imposition of vehicle excise duty on steam rollers, preserved working models, and the proportion of this sum expressed as a percentage of the overall revenue raised by vehicle excise duty. [38117]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: These vehicles will pay less than £30,000 in total in vehicle excise duty, representing around 0.01 per cent. of total VED receipts. Steam rollers pay the lowest rate of duty of any of the HGV tax classes, which represents a substantial saving over full rates of duty.

Personal Pension Schemes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the reduction in employer contributions to public sector superannuation schemes as a result of members opting out to join personal pension schemes. [38266]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 25 October 1995]: No separate assessment has been made of employer contributions as a result of members opting out. Actuaries perform regular valuations on public service schemes. If they advise that employers' contribution rates needs adjusting to take account of the number of opted-out members, and any other factors, appropriate action to adjust the rate would be taken.

Departments with superannuation votes bid for the sum of money that they estimate they need to cover the cost of pensions. This takes into account the level of employer contributions which are appropriated in aid against expenditure. If there are significant numbers opting out then, other things being equal, there will be an increase in the vote.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the names and salaries of the inspectors of magistrates courts, and give their place of residence; and if he will make a statement. [39231]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Inspectors are currently paid on a civil service grade 7 salary range of £26,535 to £41,092 in London and £25,392 to £39,324 outside London. Progression through the range is subject to satisfactory performance.

Senior inspectors' salaries range between £35,113 and £38,211. They are also eligible for performance-related non-pensionable cash bonuses of up to a maximum of 15 per cent. of annual salary, subject to an overall maximum of 50 per cent. for the four-year period covered by their contracts.

All senior inspectors and inspectors are on four-year fixed-term appointments with the possibility of extension.

The names and places of residence are as follows:

Northern Team

Mr. Colin Monson (Senior Inspector)—North Yorkshire
Mrs. Sally Radford—North Yorkshire
Mr. Steve Jacobs—North Humberside
Mrs. Rachael Jenkinson—Derbyshire

Western Team

Miss Julia Eeles (Senior Inspector)—Gloucester
Mr. Malcolm Dodds—Avon
Mrs. Janet Macpherson—Avon
Mrs. Margaret Sleight—Avon

Eastern Team

Ms Sue Steel (Senior Inspector)—London
Mr. Michael Hughes—Hampshire
Mrs. Margaret Scorer—London
Ms Louise Goodfellow—London

Central and Southern Team

Mr. Duncan Gear (Senior Inspector)—Bedfordshire
Mr. Robert Spencer—North Humberside
Ms Susan Mew—Somerset

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which petty sessional divisions in Wales, within magistrates courts committees, have benches of (a) under 10 and (b) under 20 and if he will make a statement. [39228]

Mr. Taylor: The number of petty sessional divisions in Wales with a bench strength of (a) under 10 and under 20, on the latest information available, is as follows:

Magistrates courts committees may at any time submit to the Lord Chancellor, under section 23 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1979, proposals for reorganising the petty sessional divisions within their area or the Lord Chancellor may call for a review.

(a) Benches with under 10 justices

	Number
Gogledd Preseli	9
Machynlleth	7
North Meirionnydd	9
Ystradgynlais	9

(b) Benches with under 20 justices

	Number
Berwyn	15
Brecon	18
Carmarthen North	10
Ceredigion Ganol	14
De Ceredigion	12
Gogledd Ceredigion	19
Upper Rhymney Valley	13
Pwlheli/Porthmadog	17
Radnor and Brecknock	18
South Anglesey	18
South Meirionydd	19

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which magistrates courts areas in Wales have been inspected by Her Majesty's inspectorate; and if he will make a statement. [39226]

Mr. Taylor: The magistrates courts committee areas in Dyfed and Powys have already been inspected, in the 1995–96 inspection programme. The inspection reports will be published by the end of December 1995 and March 1996 respectively, with versions in Welsh.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what extra resources he will provide to make magistrates court premises more welcoming, including the installation of vending machines; and if he will make a statement. [39230]

Mr. Taylor: The provision of refreshments and other facilities for court users is a matter to be determined locally by the magistrates courts committee. Each committee decides, in conjunction with the local authority, how its revenue budget is to be used in any year. Approval for capital projects is subject to the availability of funding and other priorities.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many inspectors of magistrates courts are resident in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [39232]

Mr. Taylor: There are no inspectors of magistrates courts resident in Wales at present.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many inspectors will inspect in Wales, in which HM inspectorate team they will inspect; and if he will make a statement. [39227]

Mr. Taylor: Each inspection of a Welsh magistrates courts committee will be carried out by the Western inspectorate team—consisting of a senior inspector and three inspectors. They will be joined on each inspection by an associate inspector, a staff member from a magistrates courts committee outside the Western team inspection area.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement concerning his policy on smoking in magistrates courts. [39229]

Mr. Taylor: Where, if anywhere, smoking is permitted in a magistrates court is a matter of local policy to be determined by the magistrates courts committee.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current breakdown by party political affiliation of members of the Doncaster bench. [38998]

Mr. Taylor: The current breakdown by party political affiliation of members of the Doncaster bench on the latest information available is as follows:

Conservative: 92

Labour: 50

Lib/Dem: 25

Independent/Not Known: 11

Mr. Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many additional inspectors of magistrates courts he plans to employ, and if he will make a statement. [39233]

Mr. Taylor: There are no plans at present to increase the number of inspectors beyond the current complement of one chief inspector, four senior inspectors and 12 inspectors.

Maxwell Brothers Trial

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the pay telephone available at the Maxwell brothers trial is now available for normal calls in addition to calls to the emergency services; and if he will make a statement. [39079]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about the availability of the pay-telephone at the Maxwell brothers' trial.

A pay-telephone from which all outgoing calls can be made has been available for public use outside the courtroom since the trial began on 31 May 1995.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the dates of the equipment failure in respect of the Maxwell brothers trial to date; which of the problems have now been solved; and if he will make a statement. [39105]

Mr. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about equipment failure at the Maxwell brothers' trial.

On the first day of the trial, 31 May 1995, there was a problem of interference between the lapel microphones worn by counsel and the instantaneous transcription equipment used by the court reporters. This was resolved within 45 minutes by using fixed desk microphones for counsel. There have been no equipment failures since then.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ministerial Information Systems

Mr. Allen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action has been taken to progress MINIS arising from the report of spring 1995; and if he will make a statement. [39613]

Mr. Horam: The multi-departmental scrutiny of Government's management information and planning systems produced its report in May 1995. The report noted many examples of good practice in both the public and private sectors. Its recommendations provided a checklist of best practice for Departments and agencies to use in developing integrated systems to suit their particular needs.

The report has been widely welcomed. Departments and agencies have now produced action plans in response to the scrutiny. These plans are being considered by the Prime Minister's adviser on efficiency. Departments and agencies are already taking steps to ensure that their information and planning systems are up to the level of the best, so aiding the Government's continuing quest for greater efficiency.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to install an electronic/computer diary giving details of media events organised by other Government Departments; what estimate he has made of the cost of obtaining, installing and operating such a diary; and if he will make a statement. [39648]

The Deputy Prime Minister: A dedicated IT-based network linking the offices of Cabinet Ministers will start to become operational next month. Work began on the network in early 1995. By cutting down on paper-based management systems and bringing up-to-date information to all Ministers' offices more quickly, it will improve efficiency and effectiveness both in individual Departments and in the dispatch of collective ministerial business. The forward diary of policy announcements will be only one of the uses to which the new infrastructure is put. The total start-up cost, including hardware and software development, is likely to be in the order of £150,000. Annual running costs are likely to be about £10,000.

Engagements

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 18 October 1995, Official Report, column 279, (1) on which days he was in the office in August; [38757]

(2) if he will list the others referred to; [38743]

(3) if he will list those occasions on which his attendance was required outside London. [38758]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave the hon. Member on 18 October.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what has been the cost to date of refurbishing his Department's offices. [39016]

The Deputy Prime Minister: In the current financial year expenditure on refurbishment of the Cabinet Office building at 70 Whitehall is estimated at £1,445,000 excluding VAT. Most of this expenditure results from a major programme to replace old wiring in part of the building, which was becoming dangerous. Recent changes in ministerial accommodation did not result in additional expenditure on refurbishment.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary; [39432]

(2) if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his office makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39462]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 26 October 1995, Official Report, column 749.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated in such frauds and (2) subsequently recovered. [39124]

The Deputy Prime Minister: There were no known frauds committed by employees of the Cabinet Office during this period. The information in respect of those agencies and non-departmental bodies for which the Deputy Prime Minister has responsibility is as follows:

Year	Number of cases	Total misappropriated £	Total recovered £
Agencies
1993–94	1	200	200
1994–95	1	558	558
Non-departmental public bodies
1991–92	1	100	100

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage of central Government has been in the hands of executive agencies in each year since 1979. [39840]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Executive agencies are set up under the next steps programme which began in 1988. Prior to that, no such agencies existed. The figures show the percentage of home civil servants working in next steps agencies or on next steps lines at 1 April of each year. The first next steps agency in Northern Ireland was launched in 1990, and figures for the Northern Ireland civil service are shown separately.

Proportion of home civil servants working on next steps lines at 1 April each year

	Percentage
1989	1
1990	11
1991	40
1992	51
1993	60
1994	63
1995	67

1990	6
1991	7
1992	26
1993	30
1994	31
1995	41

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list those agencies which do not have (a) a Fraser figure and (b) a ministerial advisory board. [39833]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The following agencies do not have a Fraser figure—so-called by reference to the report by Sir Angus Fraser to the Prime Minister in 1991, "Making the Most of Next Steps: The Management of Ministers' Departments and their Executive Agencies":

Army Base Repair Organisation

Former Ministers (Appointments)

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if Her Majesty's Government have reached a conclusion on the text of the guidelines on business appointments of former Ministers. [40210]

Mr. Freeman: I have today placed in the Libraries of both Houses guidelines on the acceptance of appointments outside Government by former Ministers of the Crown. The guidelines will come into effect from the start of the next Session of Parliament.

Civil Service Code

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if Her Majesty's Government have reached a conclusion on the text of the proposed civil service code. [40209]

Mr. Freeman: The period of further consultation on the draft civil service code, published in "The Government's Response to the First Report from the Committee on Standards in Public Life", Cm 2931, has ended. Subject to the required Order in Council the Government now propose to bring the new code into operation from the start of 1996, and will finalise the necessary amendments to the civil service management code and arrangements for implementation in consultation with the Council of Civil Service Unions. The intended final text of the code is as follows:

1. The constitutional and practical role of the Civil Service is, with integrity, honesty, impartiality and objectivity, to assist the duly constituted Government, of whatever political complexion, in formulating policies of the Government, carrying out decisions of the Government and in administering public services for which the Government is responsible.
2. Civil servants are servants of the Crown. Constitutionally, the Crown acts on the advice of Ministers and, subject to the provisions of this Code, civil servants owe their loyalty to the duly constituted Government.
3. This Code should be seen in the context of the duties and responsibilities of Ministers set out in Questions of Procedure for Ministers which include:

   —accountability to Parliament;

   —the duty to give Parliament and the public as full information as possible about the policies, decisions and actions of the Government, and not to deceive or knowingly mislead Parliament and the public;

   —the duty not to use public resources for party political purposes, to uphold the political impartiality of the Civil Service, and not to ask civil servants to act in any way which would conflict with the Civil Service Code;

   —the duty to give fair consideration and due weight to informed and impartial advice from civil servants, as well as to other considerations and advice, in reaching decisions; and

   —the duty to comply with the law, including international law and treaty obligations, and to uphold the administration of justice;

   together with the duty to familiarise themselves with the contents of this Code.
4. Civil servants should serve the duly constituted Government in accordance with the principles set out in this Code and recognising:

—the accountability of civil servants to the Minister or, as the case may be, the office holder in charge of their department;

the duty of all public officers to discharge public functions reasonably and according to the law;

the duty to comply with the law, including international law and treaty obligations, and to uphold the administration of justice; and ethical standards governing particular professions.

5. Civil servants should conduct themselves with integrity, impartiality and honesty. They should give honest and impartial advice to Ministers, without fear or favour, and make all information relevant to a decision available to Ministers. They should not deceive or knowingly mislead Ministers, Parliament or the public.

6. Civil servants should endeavour to deal with the affairs of the public sympathetically, efficiently, promptly and without bias or maladministration.

7. Civil servants should endeavour to ensure the proper, effective and efficient use of public money.

8. Civil servants should not misuse their official position or information acquired in the course of their official duties to further their private interests or those of others. They should not receive benefits of any kind from a third party which might reasonably be seen to compromise their personal judgment or integrity.

9. Civil servants should conduct themselves in such a way as to deserve and retain the confidence of Ministers and to be able to establish the same relationship with those whom they may be required to serve in some future Administration. They should comply with restrictions on their political activities. The conduct of civil servants should be such that Ministers and potential future Ministers can be sure that confidence can be freely given, and that the Civil Service will conscientiously fulfil its duties and obligations to, and impartially assist, advise and carry out the policies of the duly constituted Government.

10. Civil servants should not without authority disclose official information which has been communicated in confidence within Government, or received in confidence from others. Nothing in the Code should be taken as overriding existing statutory or common law obligations to keep confidential, or to disclose, certain information. They should not seek to frustrate or influence the policies, decisions or actions of Government by the unauthorised, improper or premature disclosure outside the Government of any information to which they have had access as civil servants.

11. Where a civil servant believes he or she is being required to act in a way which:

is illegal, improper, or unethical;

is in breach of constitutional convention or a professional code;

may involve possible maladministration; or is otherwise inconsistent with this Code;

he or she should report the matter in accordance with procedures laid down in departmental guidance or rules of conduct. A civil servant should also report to the appropriate authorities evidence of criminal or unlawful activity by others and may also report in accordance with departmental procedures if he or she becomes aware of other breaches of this Code or is required to act in a way which, for him or her, raises a fundamental issue of conscience.

12. Where a civil servant has reported a matter covered in paragraph 11 in accordance with procedures laid down in departmental guidance or rules of conduct and believes that the response does not represent a reasonable response to the grounds of his or her concern, he or she may report the matter in writing to the Civil Service Commissioners.

13. Civil servants should not seek to frustrate the policies, decisions or actions of Government by declining to take, or abstaining from, action which flows from ministerial decisions. Where a matter cannot be resolved by the procedures set out in paragraphs 11 and 12 above, on a basis which the civil servant concerned is able to accept, he or she should either carry out his or her instructions, or resign from the Civil Service. Civil servants should continue to observe their duties of confidentiality after they have left Crown employment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Care Disregard

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families in Scotland have benefited from the child care disregard of up to £40 a week since October 1994; and what is the average financial gain per family. [39928]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: From 1 October 1994 to 30 June 1995, 5,000 families in Scotland claimed for help with their child care charges. Of these, 2,000 claims were disallowed, 1,000 families had their child care charges allowed but received no extra benefit because they were already in receipt of their maximum family credit and 2,000 families received higher family credit awards as a result of the help with child care charges with an average gain of £12.67 family credit per week.

Information Technology

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research has been carried out by the Social Security Information Technology Services Agency into computer systems for the Child Support Agency; and what is the estimated cost of this research. [39931]

Mr. Burt: ITSA has supported the Child Support Agency for some years in the provision of its IT services. This has required a considerable amount of detailed analysis into the CSA's requirements and the most appropriate technical solutions. In addition, there have been a number of short reviews carried out including a recent examination of child support systems within the USA. The cost of these activities cannot be separated from overall support costs, but the amount spent on the review has been very small.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department has taken to monitor the operational effectiveness of the computer system supplied by the company EDS to the state of Florida Child Support Agency before awarding EDS the computer system contract for the UK Child Support Agency. [39932]

Mr. Burt: As part of the normal tender evaluation process and prior to completion of contract negotiations, officials from DSS visited Florida in early 1992 to discuss with them the EDS system. At that time the system was not fully implemented, but it was demonstrated and no operational problems came to light.

Maintenance Payments

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents with dependent children claiming income support were receiving maintenance in each year since 1989; and in the case of Child Support Agency assessments, how many of these were minimum assessments of £2.30 or less. [37589]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The numbers of income support recipients with dependants receiving maintenance were:

Year	Cases
1989	174,000
1990	171,000
1991	194,000
1992	210,000
1993	196,000
1994	114,000

The figure for 1994 covers only cases in which maintenance is paid directly between the two parties. Figures are not yet available for maintenance collected by the Department.

Number of cases with maintenance of £2.30 or less

Year	Cases
1989	7,000
1990	5,000
1991	8,000
1992	7,000
1993	4,000
1994	4,000

It is not possible to break this down to show amounts due solely to Child Support Agency assessments. Again, the figure for 1994 covers only cases where maintenance is paid directly between the parties.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39440]

Mr. Lang: The DTI is not responsible for any non-departmental public bodies in the county of South Yorkshire.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39472]

Mr. Lang: Information on lay appointments to the industrial tribunals is not available for South Yorkshire as appointments are made on a regional rather than a county basis. Appointments are made triennially from 25 October for an initial period of three years and are renewable up to age 70. Lay members are not paid a salary but receive a fee of £119 for a whole day's sitting plus travelling and subsistence allowances, where applicable.

The DTI makes no other public appointments in the county of South Yorkshire.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39557]

Mr. Lang: Estimated outturn for 1994–95 and plans for 1995–96 for civil service manpower and pay bill are set out in my Department's annual report, Cm 2804, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. A breakdown by grade could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times in the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39863]

Mr. Lang: The heads of agencies have meetings with their responsible Ministers to discuss the work of their agencies as appropriate. I would expect to meet them when particular issues arise and in any event to discuss their corporate plans as part of the DTI MINIS management process. I have not met any heads of agencies since my arrival in July.

Regional Assistance, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to change the present strategy of regional assistance as it affects the Doncaster area. [39449]

Mr. Page: None. When the DTI's assisted areas map was announced in 1993 Ministers made it clear that it would last for at least three years. There are currently no plans to revise the map.

Liquidation Sales

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to strengthen consumer protection legislation as it relates to liquidation sales and similar sales. [38894]

Mr. Lang: The Government have no plans to change consumer protection law as it relates to liquidation and similar sales.

Oil and Gas Division

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are employed with the Department of Trade and Industry's oil and gas division in Scotland on (a) a full-time and (b) a part-time basis. [39666]

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 27 October 1995]: My Department's oil and gas division employs 41 full-time staff and one part-time in Scotland.

My Department's offshore supplies office also employs 67 full-time and two part-time staff in Glasgow and eight full-time staff in Aberdeen.

PRIME MINISTER

President of Iran

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister on what dates in the last two years he received letters from the President of Iran; and on what dates he replied to them. [40277]

The Prime Minister: I received a letter dated 30 May 1995 from President Rafsanjani. The letter did not require a reply.

Policy Unit (Costs)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the cost of the No. 10 policy unit for each year since 1980–81 in (a) cash prices and (b) 1994–95 prices. [38824]

The Prime Minister: The cost of the policy unit was not accounted for separately before 1987–88. Expenditure from 1987–88 is listed in cash prices and 1994–95 prices.

£000's

Year	Expenditure Cash	1994–95 prices
1987–88	476	680
1988–89	535	716
1989–90	521	652
1990–91	537	622
1991–92	577	629
1992–93	622	652
1993–94	659	671
1994–95	644	644

Departmental Staff

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the number of staff in his office at the beginning of each financial year from 1990 to 1995, expressed as (a) full-time equivalents, (b) head count of numbers of staff employed and (c) identify separately the number of staff in office service support grades either as full-time equivalents or as head count for the same years. [38822]

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

	Total[1] (full-time equivalents)	Total (head count)	Office service support grades (head count)
1 April 1990	95	102	26
1 April 1991	97	102	26
1 April 1992	95	102	26
1 April 1993	100	107	26
1 April 1994	100	107	26
1 April 1995	100	107	26

[1] The figures for full-time equivalent staff in post have been rounded to the nearest whole number. The figures for 1990 and 1991 include office services support grades working in No. 10 who were formally transferred to the No. 10 complement on 1 April 1992.

Breast Cancer Campaign

Ms Corston: To ask the Prime Minister when he will be in a position to report the precise number of postcards he has received in support of the national postcard campaign for breast cancer. [40389]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 16 October, Official Report, column 23.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid Statistics

34. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total of overseas aid, excluding EU aid, to be made by his Department in the current financial year; and what were the comparable totals five and 10 years ago. [37869]

Mr. Hanley: In 1995–96 the total planned ODA aid budget excluding EC aid is £1,502 million. In 1990–91 it stood at £1,378 million and in 1987–88 at £1,094 million.

China

35. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of multilateral aid projects to China to which Britain contributes; and what is that cost to Britain of such multilateral aid. [37870]

Mr. Hanley: In 1994, the World bank, Asian development bank, and the United Nations aid agencies committed the equivalent of around £2.9 billion to China. An overall estimate of the cost to the UK cannot readily be calculated. In addition, the EC committed the equivalent of some £27 million in 1994, of which the expected British share will be £4.5 million.

Aid Budget (Discussions)

36. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with aid agencies regarding the 1996–97 overseas aid budget. [37871]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had any recent formal discussions with aid agencies, but my right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker has regular meetings with non-governmental organisations, to which she attaches high priority and at which all aspects of ODA policies are discussed.

Hurricane Damage, Caribbean

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding recent hurricane damage in the Caribbean; what has been Her Majesty's Government's response. [37899]

Mr. Hanley: We have received requests for relief assistance from the Governments of Anguilla, Antigua, Barbuda and the Commonwealth of Dominica.

The following commitments have been made:

Country	Purpose	Amount committed £
Regional	Mobilisation of Caribbean disaster relief unit assessment mission	16,155
Anguilla	Purchase of relief supplies	143,000

Country	Purpose	Amount committed £
Anguilla	Subsistence costs of Royal Marines	10,000
Anguilla	Anguilla disaster relief fund	100,000
Antigua	Restoration of power supplies (Northern Ireland Electricity)	381,200
Barbuda	Roofing repairs to hospital	5,000
Dominica	Purchase/delivery of basic foodstuffs	250,000
Total		905,355

In addition, soon after Hurricane Luis passed directly over Anguilla, the West Indies guardship, HMS Southampton, arrived to co-ordinate damage assessment and repairs. She was accompanied by her support ship RFA Oakleaf. Within 24 hours of HMS Southampton's arrival, the assessment was completed and repairs were under way. Work parties from the two ships were bolstered by the arrival of a party of Royal Marines, whose duties included support to the Royal Anguilla police force.

British forces were also able to make a major contribution in Antigua, where a party of Royal Marines was instrumental in reopening the airport and repairing Halberton hospital as well as undertaking a host of other tasks.

Regarding longer-term rehabilitation, we have invited Anguilla to submit proposals and are currently considering the needs of the affected independent states.

Angola

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is currently being granted to (a) Angola and (b) children in Angola; and if he will make a statement. [38645]

Mr. Hanley: We are currently providing bilateral emergency aid through non-governmental organisations and UN agencies for seeds and tools, primary health, humanitarian de-mining, food supply and distribution, demobilisation and logistic support—in addition to our share of EC assistance for similar activities. Children are among the most vulnerable groups in Angola who benefit under many of these interventions. Our longer-term development aid is focused on English language training and a fund to support NGO long-term rehabilitation projects.

Amazonia

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what safeguards exist within the G7 pilot programme to conserve the Brazilian rain forest to protect the interests of indigenous people in Amazonia. [38544]

Mr. Hanley: The programme includes a project to regularise indigenous lands in Amazonia and to protect indigenous populations and areas. The interests of indigenous people are further safeguarded by a separate requirement within the programme that they participate in the zoning of the region.

Illegal Drug Production

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent progress he has to report on programmes to eradicate the production of illegal drugs. [37864]

Mr. Hanley: ODA's current largest involvement in such programmes is in Pakistan where there has recently been encouraging progress. ODA approved a further £3.6 million in January this year for phase 2 of the United Nations drugs control programme alternative development project in the Dir district to cover the period 1995 to 1998. Opportunities to identify similar activities in other developing countries remain under constant review.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Postal and Proxy Votes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedures will be put in place prior to the general election to ensure that those entitled to postal and proxy votes are made aware of their rights as soon as possible by means of public advertising; and if he will make a statement. [39159]

Mr. Ancram: The nature and extent of advertising or publicity specifically in Northern Ireland has yet to be decided.

Housing Executive Grants Offices

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the budgetary allocation to Housing Executive grants offices; and if he will make a statement on the measures he will take to deal with the financial deficit faced by such offices and delays in processing applications for home improvement grants. [38810]

Mr. Moss: None. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is responsible for the allocation of its financial resources among its regional and district offices. I have, however, increased the overall resources available to the Housing Executive by £18 million during the 1995–96 financial year, bringing the total to £544 million. The chief executive of the Housing Executive has informed me that, in response to the very high demand for grant aid, an additional £8 million has been directed to support the grants budget, bringing the total to £42 million. Due to this continued demand the Housing Executive has prioritised the issue of grant approvals with precedence being given to applications relating to disabled facilities grants, repairs grants, minor works assistance for the elderly and replacement grants which have an element of adaption for the disabled.

Sheep and Suckler Cow Quota

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the application forms for sheep and suckler cow quota in respect of the 1995 national reserve will be made available; and what is the reason for delay. [38808]

Mr. Ancram: Application forms for sheep and suckler cow quota in respect of the 1995 reserves are expected to be available before the end of 1995.

The opening of these reserves has been delayed because, together with the UK Agriculture Departments, we have been putting into place arrangements to deal with the outcome of a judicial review which found that the administration of part of the 1993 reserve process in the UK has been unlawful. This judgment had repercussions on the supply of quota for subsequent reserve years and it was essential to consider these implications in advance of opening the 1995 reserves.

Prisoners

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to bring legislation to the House restoring 50 per cent. remission to prison sentences served in Northern Ireland prisons; and if he will make a statement. [40448]

Sir John Wheeler: The legislation was introduced to the House on 26 October.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in which prisons there are prisoners restricted to closed visits; and what are the numbers of prisoners involved. [39417]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 30 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question relating to closed visits in Northern Ireland prisons and the number of prisoners involved.

Within the Northern Ireland Prison Service there is provision to restrict a prisoner to closed visits where there is no contact between the visitor and the prisoner, usually in order to prevent the passage of contraband. Such restrictions are applied from time to time on the authority of the Governor. As of 25 October 1995 no prisoner is subject to such a restriction.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many category A prisoners are currently in the prison system in Northern Ireland; and how many are in each sub-category; [38845]

(2) what arrangements are made for prisoners who are restricted to closed visits to have (a) visits from their legal advisers and (b) consular visits. [38842]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 30 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to two Parliamentary Questions which you have tabled, one relating to visiting arrangements for legal advisers for prisoners restricted to closed visits, and the other in relation to numbers of Category A prisoners in NI prisons.

Visiting Arrangements

In Northern Ireland prisoners who are restricted to closed visits with ordinary visitors or relatives are allowed to receive visits from their legal advisers and consular officials in rooms designated for that purpose. Such rooms do not incorporate glass partitions or other restrictions between prisoners and families.

Number of Prisons in Category A

In the Northern Ireland Prison Service the terms used in determining the security category of a prisoner differ from the terms used in the Prison Service in England and Wales. I have set out below the broad equivalent categories in each service.

Northern Ireland	England
Top Risk	Exceptionally High Risk Category A
High Risk	High Risk Category A/Standard Category A
Medium Risk	Category B
Low Risk	Category C

Using Northern Ireland terms the answer to your second question is that on 23 October 1995 one Top Risk and 356 High Risk Prisoners were held in Northern Ireland Prisons.

I hope this information is helpful.

Youth Organisations

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the criteria laid down by the Youth Council of Northern Ireland for grant assistance to (i) uniformed youth organisations; and (ii) other youth organisations. [38846]

Mr. Ancram: Youth organisations are considered for funding if they

(a) have a governing body responsible for all assets and liabilities;

(b) are registered as a charity or corporated;

(c) have a published memorandum/articles of association which reflect the objectives of the Northern Ireland Youth Service;

(d) are voluntary, ie not operating for commercial gain; and

(e) publish audited accounts.

There is no differentiation in criteria for assistance to uniformed and non-uniformed organisations.

The Youth Council is currently reviewing its criteria for funding with the aim of applying new arrangements from April 1997.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what account is taken of the multiple membership of some uniformed youth organisations, by some individuals, when calculating the level of grant aid available from the Youth Council for Northern Ireland; and what impact this has had on organisations that do not include members of other uniformed organisations. [38839]

Mr. Ancram: Membership is not a criterion for deciding the levels of funding allocated to youth organisations. The Youth Council for Northern Ireland allocates core funding for HQ administrative costs rather than programme activities.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans has he to increase the funding available to youth organisations in Northern Ireland. [38838]

Mr. Ancram: About 5 million ecu will be made available to the youth sector under the European Union special initiative for peace and reconciliation.

The Government will provide additional funds to meet up to 25 per cent. of the total cost of projects funded under this initiative.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of funding provided to uniformed youth organisations by the Youth Council for Northern Ireland is awarded to organisations perceived to be (i) Catholic, (ii) Protestant, and (iii) non-denominational. [38837]

Mr. Ancram: All uniformed organisations are open to membership by young people from all sections of the community. However, a number of organisations are based in particular churches. In these cases, the organisations may be perceived as being associated with a specific denomination.

	Percentage
Catholic	23.5
Protestant	37.5
Non-denominational	39.0

Cable Television

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what environmental protection measures have specifically been included in contracts awarded to CableTel for cabling in Northern Ireland as a result of experience in England. [38809]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

Cable franchisees require licensing under both broadcasting and telecommunications legislation. Although CableTel was awarded the Northern Ireland franchise earlier this year, and on 2 October was licensed under the Broadcasting Act 1990, it has yet to be granted a Telecommunications Act licence to enable it to install and run its systems in the street and on private land within the franchise area. During statutory public consultation on the granting of CableTel's licence there will be an opportunity for representations to be made about the inclusion of licence conditions relating to environmental protection.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area, in hectares and percentage terms, of environmentally sensitive areas in England is made up of productive, or potentially productive, agricultural land. [37131]

Mr. Boswell: Current estimates of productive or potentially productive agricultural land within environmentally sensitive areas in England are:

Environmentally sensitive areas	Productive or potentially productive area (hectares)	Percentage of total area designated
Stage I ESAs (launched in 1987)
Broads	24,000	67
Somerset Levels and Moors	25,800	93
Pennine Dales	39,900	86
West Penwith	6,700	93
South Downs	51,700	75
Stage II ESAs (launched in 1988)
Breckland	51,600	55
North Peak	50,500	92
Clun	17,600	82
Suffolk River Valleys	32,800	75
Test Valley	3,300	69
Stage III ESAs (launched in 1993)
Avon Valley	3,800	73
Exmoor	67,700	84
Lake District	202,600	83
North Kent Marshes	12,200	83
South Wessex Downs	38,300	83
South West Peak	29,500	87
Stage IV ESAs (launched in 1994)
Cotswold Hills	66,100	78
Dartmoor	84,500	84
Blackdown Hills	32,000	81
Essex Coast	21,300	79
Shropshire Hills	34,900	91
Upper Thames Tributaries	23,200	84
Total	920,000	80

The area given in the first column exclude woodland, urban areas—(e.g., built-up land, recreational/amenity land), mineral workings, roads, water (e.g. rivers and lakes), non-farmed land (e.g reedbed, swamp/marginal vegetation and saltmarsh) and unvegetated land (cliff/foreshore, mudflats and bare rock).

Intervention Beef

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of stock in beef, in tonnes, held in intervention in the United Kingdom; and if he will give details of the age profile of the stock. [38983]

Mr. Baldry: The level of intervention beef stocks in the United Kingdom on 23 October 1995 was 8,858 tonnes. This figure includes stocks of beef committed under the current processing sale EEC regulation 1181/95.

The age profile of these stocks is:

1990: 378.0 tonnes

1991: 2230.5 tonnes

1992: 3677.5 tonnes

1993: 2572.0 tonnes

Premium Schemes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost in 1994, in Humberside and the three counties of Yorkshire of payments under (a) the sheep annual premium, (b) the suckler cow premium, (c) the beef special premium and (d) the hill livestock compensatory allowances: and what is his estimate of the cost in 1995. [38990]

Mr. Baldry: The cost in 1994 and an estimate of the cost in 1995 for Humberside and the three counties of Yorkshire of the sheep annual premium scheme, the suckler cow premium scheme, the beef special premium scheme and the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme are as follows:

1984 Scheme payments

£ million

County	SAPS	SCPS	BSPS	HLCAs	Total
Humberside	1.031	1.074	1.476	0.000	3.581
North Yorkshire	17.172	4.737	6.061	4.107	32.077
South Yorkshire	0.663	0.610	0.687	0.213	2.173
West Yorkshire	1.967	1.215	0.938	0.719	4.839

1995 Scheme estimated payments

£ million

County	SAPS[1]	SCPS[2]	BSPS[3]	HLCAs[4]	Total
Humberside	1.165	1.407	1.951	0.000	4.523
North Yorkshire	19.405	6.206	8.012	4.107	37.730
South Yorkshire	0.750	0.799	0.909	0.213	2.671
West Yorkshire	2.222	1.592	1.240	0.720	5.774

Notes:

[1] Based on an estimated 13 per cent. increase in premium rate

[2] Based on an estimated 31 per cent. increase in premium rate

[3] Based on an estimated 28 per cent. increase in premium rate where extensification is payable and 35 per cent. where it is not payable

[4] Based on an estimate of a nil increase in allowance rate

EC Grant Schemes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost in 1994, in Humberside and the three counties of Yorkshire, of payments under (a) the environmentally sensitive areas scheme, (b) the nitrate sensitive areas scheme, (c) the farm and conservation grant scheme, (d) the pilot beef and sheep extensification schemes, (e) the woodland grant scheme, (f) the farm woodland premium scheme, (g) the orchard grubbing scheme, (h) the optional five-year set-aside scheme, (j) the habitat scheme, (j) the habitat scheme, (k) the moorland scheme, (l) the countryside access scheme and (n) the organic aid scheme; and what is his estimate of the cost in 1995. [38991]

Mr. Boswell: The information is available on a financial year basis as follows:

Level of expenditure

£000's

Scheme	1994–95 (actual)	1995–96 (estimate)
Environmentally sensitive areas	1,375	1,479
Nitrate sensitive areas	15	650
Farm and conservation grant scheme	2,106	660
Pilot beef and sheep extensification schemes	114	114
Woodland grant scheme	1,064	1,280
Farm woodland premium scheme	[1]n/a	[1]n/a
Orchard grubbing scheme	0	0
Five year set-aside scheme	[1]n/a	[1]n/a
Habitat scheme	0	55
Moorland scheme	0	0
Countryside access scheme	0	2
Organic aid scheme	0	2.5

[1]n/a = Not Available

The information requested is not readily available for these schemes and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a scheme of grants for work to and equipment for fishing vessels under 12 m in length which is required by the new safety standards. [39815]

Mr. Baldry: The safety code for under 12 m fishing vessels is still being developed by the Department of Transport's Marine Safety Agency in consultation with the fishing industry. The aim is to publish the code in 1996 and for it to come into force in 1997 with requirements for existing vessels being phased in over a two-year period. Once the code is finalised the Government will carefully consider the implications for the current vessel safety grants scheme which applies to vessels of 12 m and over.

Coriander

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of land during 1995 have been used to grow coriander as an alternative to oilseed rape; what was the figure for 1994; and if he will make a statement. [39537]

Mr. Baldry: This Ministry does not routinely collect data on this crop. Coriander was not grown on set-aside in 1994 or 1995. The crop can be used as a green vegetable or for flavouring and the seeds contain 18 per cent. oil predominantly of oleic and petroselenic fatty acids but germination of the crop can be erratic in the UK.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total tonnage of disposable stocks of each commodity held in intervention stock in the United Kingdom on 30 June; and what was the figure for that date in (a) 1994, (b) 1993 and (c) 1992. [39535]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 23 October 1995, Official Report, column 480.

Oilseed Rape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of land during 1995 have been used to grow oilseed rape; and what were the figures for (a) 1985, (b) 1975 and (c) 1965. [39536]

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as follows:

	[1]1968	1975	1985	[2]1995
Area (hectares)	6,486	38,987	295,620	441,620

[1] No census data are available for 1965.

[2] Provisional.

Set-aside Payments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the 20 highest sums paid in set-aside payments in each of the past three years for which payments have been made. [39824]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 July, Official Report, column 631. Set-aside payments for 1995 are still being made and details will not be available until after the close of the payment window on 31 December.

Turtles

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his guidelines for fishermen on how to deal with (a) reptiles and (b) endangered species of turtles in the waters around the United Kingdom. [39426]

Mr. Baldry: The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 provides protection for marine turtles within UK territorial waters. If any fisherman finds a reptile or a marine turtle in his nets, it should be returned to the sea.

TRANSPORT

MOT Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to improve the efficiency of MOT tests on cars and lorries. [39820]

Mr. Norris: We are continually looking for ways to improve the efficiency of tests. For example, we believe the introduction of computerisation into the MOT scheme would increase compliance and improve testing standards, so we have recently appointed consultants to advise on the options for doing so. We are also allowing vehicle inspectorate examiners to test HGVs at vehicle operators' premises, provided they are suitably equipped.

Company Cars

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his calculation of the additional accident rates of company cars; and what measure he plans to introduce to reduce the accident totals. [39818]

Mr. Norris: The annual involvement in injury accidents per 10,000 vehicles is given in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1995", HMSO; for vehicles registered in 1991 to 1993 the accident involvement in 1993 was 128 per 10,000 privately owned cars and 192 per 10,000 company cars.

My Department works with, and grant aids, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, which is a key provider of driver training courses to companies. These have reduced accidents among company car drivers and have proved cost-effective for employers. The Department is conducting research on the effectiveness of driver training and other fleet management safety policies. Many road safety measures, aimed at all drivers, will also cut accidents among company car drivers.

US-UK Air Talks

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current status of the US-UK air talks; and if he will make a statement. [40309]

Mr. Norris: Despite concessions offered by the United Kingdom Government, the US Government formally broke off talks on UK-US air services on 20 October. The talks covered a package of new measures designed to increase opportunities for air travellers, shippers and airlines. We stand ready to resume talks as soon as the US Government are ready to do so.

Bus Companies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints have been received to date by the Office of Fair Trading on anti-competitive behaviour by bus companies; and how many were made by his Department. [40488]

Mr. Norris: I understand that 610 such complaints have been received by the Office of Fair Trading—none initiated by my Department.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of cars are fitted with catalytic converters. [39890]

Mr. Norris: The last assessment of the percentage of cars fitted with three-way catalytic converters was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) on 17 July, Official Report, column 877. The number estimated at that time was equivalent to 21.85 per cent. of the total passenger car fleet which numbered 22.2 million at the end of 1994.

Since all new petrol-engined passenger cars must now be fitted with three-way catalytic converters the percentage will continue to rise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect on the ozone level of the use of catalytic converters in vehicles. [39891]

Mr. Norris: The third report of the United Kingdom photochemical review oxidants group, which advises the Secretary of State for the Environment, states that the

> "3—way automotive catalyst is the best currently available technology for control of emissions of CO, VOCs and NO, from petrol engine vehicles".

The report discusses in detail the likely effect of this control on levels of ozone in the air. A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

Benzene

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what impact the use of super-unleaded petrol has had on emissions of benzene. [39893]

Mr. Norris: Current data indicate that, on average, petrol—both leaded and unleaded—in the United Kingdom contains between 2 per cent. and 3 per cent. benzene with no significant trends between the grades.

Low Sulphur Fuel

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to encourage the use of low sulphur fuel by bus operators. [39905]

Mr. Norris: Regulations are already in place—SI 1994 No. 2295—which require low sulphur diesel fuel from 1 October 1996. This new fuel, which will be widely available and not restricted to certain market sectors, will bring benefits, in terms of particulate reduction, across the whole of the diesel fleet.

Devolved Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what items of his Department's expenditure have been devolved to local authorities since 1979. [39978]

Mr. Norris: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tachographs

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 688, if he will list the inspection rates for tachographs for each of the European Countries referred to. [40009]

Mr. Norris: The European Commission has to report every two years to the Council on implementation of the EU regulation on drivers' hours, based upon information supplied by member states. The last report, covering the years 1986 to 1990, provided insufficient detail to compare individual countries accurately. I am sending the hon. Member an extract from it. However, checks carried out by the Vehicle Inspectorate in the United Kingdom exceed the regulation's requirement for member states to check at least 1 per cent. of days worked by drivers and our police forces carry out additional checks.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to encourage tamper-proof tachographs. [39981]

Mr. Norris: EU regulations set out the technical specifications for recording equipment in road transport. From 1 January 1996, new vehicles must be fitted with a tachograph which automatically records on the chart any interruption of the power supply and each opening of the tachograph case. In addition, the connecting cable from the transmitter must have improved protection. We have also supported Commission proposals for the introduction of digital recording equipment, and regret that at its meeting in June the Transport Council was unable to agree how best to take these proposals forward.

Car Alarms

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on the use of car alarms and the impact on noise pollution during the night. [39896]

Mr. Norris: Car alarms are a positive deterrent to car crime. I am aware, however, of the concern felt about their potential for noise nuisance and will shortly be consulting on regulations which will reduce the maximum period of audible alarm signal permitted to 30 seconds for new alarms and prohibit the use of audible signals to confirm setting or unsetting of the alarm system. These changes, while not compromising the security value of alarms, should considerably reduce any noise nuisance.

Noise nuisance can also now be tackled in the street by environmental health officers. Powers under the Noise and Statutory Nuisance Act 1993, permit EHOs to forcibly enter cars, in certain circumstances, to disable illegally sounding devices which are causing a noise nuisance.

Windscreen Washers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy towards persons cleaning car windscreens at traffic lights; and if he will make a statement. [39897]

Mr. Norris: Road traffic law provides that if a person, without lawful authority or excuse, wilfully obstructs the free passage along a highway, he or she is guilty of an offence. We have no evidence that persons cleaning car windscreens at traffic lights represent a road safety problem.

Vehicle Pollution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has to show whether a minority of cars emit a majority of pollution; and what proposals he has to resolve the problem. [39901]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 18 July at column 1016 and 16 October at column 89.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what impact vehicle pollution has on drivers inside their vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [39906]

Mr. Norris: There is no evidence to suggest that the health of drivers is subject to any greater degree of risk as a result of pollution inside their vehicles than that to which the public at large are exposed.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department offers to motorists buying a new car on the relative health benefits and disbenefits of diesel and petrol cars. [39888]

Mr. Norris: At the moment the Government neither recommend nor discourage the purchase and use of diesel or petrol cars on environmental or health grounds. This policy will be reviewed and updated, as necessary, in the light of medical evidence as to the health effects of these fuels.

HGV Drivers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department is currently undertaking into the effects of fatigue in heavy goods vehicle drivers. [39982]

Mr. Norris: We are continuing with our research programme into the relative effectiveness of possible countermeasures to tiredness, to ensure that the best advice is available to all drivers on how to minimise the risk of having a sleep-related accident.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues on penalties for employers who bring pressure on heavy goods vehicle drivers to work illegally long hours; and if he will make a statement. [39992]

Mr. Norris: Enforcement authorities can, and do, prosecute employers where it can be proved that they caused or permitted a driver to break the drivers' hours or tachograph rules. These offences carry maximum fines of £2,500—level 4—and £5,000—level 5—respectively. Deliberate falsification of a tachograph chart can result in up to two years' imprisonment.

Such offences are also taken into account by the licensing authorities when reviewing an operator's compliance with the conditions of his licence. Offenders can be called to a public inquiry, and their licences can be curtailed, suspended or revoked.

Local Authority Spending

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the balance of spending on transport between local authorities and central Government. [39979]

Mr. Norris: Figures for central and local Government expenditure on transport are contained in table 1.17 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1995," copies of which are in the Library.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to conduct a general review of the trunk roads programme. [39848]

Mr. Watts: The current programme was set out in "Trunk Roads in England—1994 Review". We keep the programme under review and adjust it as circumstances change.

Channel Tunnel Link

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the high-speed link from the channel tunnel to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [39762]

Mr. Watts: The start of the main construction works will follow the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill gaining Royal Assent and the promoter completing sufficient design and other work to achieve the necessary raising of finance. The Government will place contractual obligations on the private sector promoter as to the timetable for construction of the main works, but as negotiations with the shortlisted bidders are still under way it is too early to say what the timetable might be. Union Railways planned a construction programme of about five and a half years.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what policy proposals Her Majesty's Government have put to the recent conference held in Vienna to decide on the standards to be adopted for casks used to transport by air consignments of plutonium in mixed oxide form and what response was made by the British delegation to the United States proposals. [39253]

Mr. Norris: The Advisory Committee on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Materials—ACTRAM—concluded that the air transport of certain physical forms of mixed plutonium—uranium oxide constitutes no significant inhalation hazard. At the meeting in Vienna in September the United Kingdom delegation therefore supported the proposal that such material could continue to be transported by air in packages currently approved to International Atomic Energy Agency standards, provided that the material itself meets stringent test requirements which minimise the potential inhalation hazard.

The UK, in common with a large majority of other member state delegations, could not accept the United States proposals.

Humber Bridge

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when legislation will be introduced to enable powers to be given to him to reduce the debt on the Humber bridge; and if he will make a statement. [39886]

Mr. Watts: We remain committed to introducing, at the earliest opportunity, a Bill to deal with the debt.

Eurostar

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he has to ensure that sufficient space to allow bicycles to be carried is available on Eurostar. [40058]

Mr. Watts: There is no requirement in the current train operator's licence for European Passenger Services and the Secretary of State has no plans to vary this. Eurostar does, however, intend to begin carrying bicycles in a few months' time.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spends annually on (a) road building, (b) light rapid transits and (c) cycleways. [39771]

Mr. Watts: In 1994–95, the Department provided capital resources of £1.9 billion for constructing trunk roads and supporting the construction of local authority roads, and £60.2 million for light rapid transit schemes.

The majority of the Department's expenditure on cycleways is included in the overall capital settlement for local transport. With the exception of the specific grant the Department is providing this year for the London cycle network, provision for cycleways forms part of local authorities' wider allocation for highways and traffic management schemes. The exact sum spent is at the discretion of the local authorities, and the Department does not collect figures centrally. In addition, many of the Highways Agency's trunk road schemes include measures to improve the safety of cyclists, and the agency is committed to helping provide safe and convenient crossings of trunk roads by the national cycle network.

Open Skies Pact

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the latest effort of the European Union to replace separate national air traffic accords with an open skies pact between the US and Europe. [39760]

Mr. Norris: The European Commission's proposal for a draft negotiating mandate for EU-US negotiations, aimed at liberalising the EC-US market, was put to the Council of Ministers for consideration at its meeting in June 1995.

The Council agreed to postpone discussion of the Commission's proposal and instead requested the Commission to carry out a thorough analysis to show whether a better result for all member states could realistically be produced by negotiations at Community level and to define the common interest. The study is due to be presented at the December Transport Council meeting.

A34

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the European Commission's plan to drop legal action on the A34 Newbury bypass and the M77. [39761]

Mr. Watts: We welcome the Commission's announcement. It confirms the view that the British Government have taken all along.

Toll Roads

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department has for the introduction of toll roads; and if he will make a statement. [39766]

Mr. Watts: Trials of electronic motorway tolling systems will start next year. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) announced on 2 December 1993, Official Report, columns 646–49, this assessment of technology will provide the basis on which to decide when to bring forward the legislation necessary for electronic motorway charging. I have no other proposals for the introduction on toll roads.

"Life on the Edge"

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the videotape, "Life on the Edge" on guidance to emergency repair operators on motorways. [39623]

Mr. Watts: The video and the associated code of practice provide advice on good practice in vehicle recovery operations. They are a welcome initiative from the industry and a valuable contribution towards improving safety standards.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost to date of rail privatisation. [37914]

Mr. Watts: Costs incurred to date by the Department, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Office of the Rail Regulator are as follows. They include running costs and consultancy costs.

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96[1]
DOT	1.0	6.7	13.5[2]	14.2	8.8
OPRAF	—	—	2.4	16.6	15.4
ORR	—	—	1.4	9.0	4.0
Total	1.0	6.7	17.3	39.8	28.2

Notes:

[1] Estimated costs to 30 September 1995.

[2] Includes £1.5 million contribution by DOT to the costs of setting up Opraf and ORR prior to formal appointments of the franchising director and Rail Regulator.

In addition, British Rail and Railtrack have incurred costs linked to privatisation. These are shown in the following table:

£ million

Year
BR/Railtrack
1991–92	—
1992–93	—
1993–94	92.2
1994–95	131.0
1995–96[1]	57.0

Note:

[1] Estimated costs to 30 September 1995.

HEALTH

Prescriptions

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy considerations underlie his policy on whether medication for glaucoma sufferers should be dispensed free of charge in the same manner as for diabetes sufferers. [37652]

Mr. Malone: Exemption from prescription charges on medical grounds was first introduced in 1968. The list was agreed with representatives of general medical practitioners who made it clear that they could agree to exemption only for certain readily identifiable conditions which called automatically for life-long medication.

The arrangements were reviewed in 1993 as part of the Government's review for health service spending. We concluded that the present arrangements should stand.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total capital expenditure in (a) trusts by region and (b) health authorities and other bodies in each of the last three years. [37926]

Mr. Sackville: The total capital expenditure for 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 will placed in the Library.

The audited figures for 1994–95 are not yet available.

The definition of capital has changed during this period, therefore comparisons between years cannot readily be made. For 1993–94 the threshold value for the definition of capital expenditure was increased from £1,000 to £5,000. This technical change to accounting policy reduced capital expenditure as money spent on tangible assets which was formerly classed as capital was in 1993–94 recorded as revenue. In 1993–94 over £100 million was transferred from capital to revenue to take account of the increase to the capital threshold.

Accident and Emergency Department

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients presenting themselves to accident and emergency departments within (a) the London area and (b) England in 1994 were assessed by a nurse within five minutes of arriving. [38623]

Mr. Malone: In the quarter ended 31 December 1994, 91 per cent. of patients in England were assessed immediately on arrival in accident and emergency departments. The latest information, for the quarter ended 30 June 1995, shows that national performance has risen to 93 per cent. These figures are based on samples.

Information on the performance of individual London trusts in the quarter ended 31 March 1995 is contained in the 1994–95 NHS performance tables, copies of which are available in the Library.

Research

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into (a) cystic fibrosis and (b) colonic strictures; and if he will make a statement; [39317]

(2) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into gastrointestinal transit in the elderly; and if he will make a statement; [39315]

(3) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into (a) heart rate variability in mountaineers and (b) autonomic function and altitude; and if he will make a statement; [39311]

(4) what research his Department carried out into the long term safety and efficacy of TCV-116, 4; 8; 12; 16 mg. once daily, in patients with mild to moderate essential hypertension; and if he will make a statement; [39303]

(5) what research his Department has carried out into the evaluation of palliative care services to people with chronic obstructive airways disease; and if he will make a statement; [39056]

(6) what research his Department has carried out into Valaciclovir international Zoster assessment—VIZA; and if he will make a statement; [39307]

(7) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into the long-term consequences of gastrointestinal infections; and if he will make a statement; [39299]

(8) what proposals his Department has carried out for a multi-centre pilot study to investigate the physical performance of the Allevyn adhesive dressing; and if he will make a statement; [38967]

(9) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out to assess the efficacy of semi-permanent acupuncture needles in the prevention of post-operative nausea and vomiting; and if he will make a statement; [39313]

(10) what research his Department carried out into avoidable, acute admissions; and if he will make a statement; [39305]

(11) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into diagnostic reasoning in occupational therapy; and if he will make a statement; [39297]

(12) what research his Department has carried out into the maintenance of activity and acceptability of Tianeptine administered in its prolonged release form—1 x 50 mg/day—in the treatment of (a) major depressive disorders and (b) dysthymia; and if he will make a statement; [39309]

(13) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out to investigate the effects of clinical use on the durability of Versaflex linear compression bandages; and if he will make a statement; [39301]

(14) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into the prevention hypoxia after hip fractures; and if he will make a statement; [39316]

(15) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into the personality in juvenile myoclonic epilepsy; and if he will make a statement; [39312]

(16) what research his Department carried out into current local awareness and trends in the treatment of carpal tunnel syndrome; and if he will make a statement; [39304]

(17) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into the BASO breast study; and if he will make a statement; [39296]

(18) what research his Department has carried out into a randomised, double-blinded, paralleled group, placebo controlled study of topical lithium succinate cream applied either twice or four times daily in the treatment of herpes labalis U2E-93-02-001; and if he will make a statement; [39308]

(19) what research and evaluation his Department has recently carried out into the needs of adolescent offenders with psychological problems and others with similar difficulties; and if he will make a statement; [39300]

(20) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out to see if early changes in (a) insulin sensitivity and (b) insulin secretion in early diagnosed type II diabetes predict an ultimate treatment outcome; and if he will make a statement; [39314]

(21) what research his Department has carried out into the prevention of relapse/recurrence in depression with Isapirone treatment—Esprit—and if he will make a statement; [39306]

(22) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into a randomised controlled trial to compare non-pharmacological methods of relieving perineal discomfort following childbirth; and if he will make a statement; [39298]

(23) what research his Department has carried out into BU9209UK/GP97 comparative effects of Bumetanide plus Captoril, and Frusemide plus Captopril in patients with congestive cardiac failure with long-term follow-up for up to two years; and if he will make a statement; [39310]

(24) what research and findings his Department carried out into an open multicentre study with response dependent dose titration and with a final double-blind comparison with placebo, run-out period; and if he will make a statement; [39302]

(25) what research and evaluation his Department has carried out into the use of an analgesic protocol as a means of rationalising the prescribing of analgesics for pain relief; and if he will make a statement. [39318]

Mr. Malone: None. Research commissioned within the Department's policy research programme is set out in "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions 1994/95", copies of which are available in the Library.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The MRC is an independent body receiving its grant in aid from the Office of Science and Technology which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Osteoporosis

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to help post-menopausal women suffering from osteoporosis. [39606]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health published the report of its advisory group on osteoporosis in January 1995. Copies of the report were distributed to all national health service bodies in England and are available in the Library. The Department is presently working to implement its recommendations. This year, the Department has increased its support for the National Osteoporosis Society.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department last made a study of the methods used by Doncaster royal infirmary and Mexborough Montagu hospital of the incineration of clinical waste; and if he will make a statement. [39569]

Mr. Sackville: My Department does not carry out studies of individual trust clinical waste incineration operations. It does take an overview of clinical waste disposal throughout the national health service and has provided comprehensive guidance.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial years 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39502]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the tables in the form readily available from the agencies concerned. The costs include all casual staff and employers' superannuation and national insurance contributions.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to collate centrally by national health trust the expenses paid annually to chairmen; and if he will make a statement. [39544]

Mr. Malone: No.

Free Treatment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the methods used for identifying those not entitled to free treatment from the NHS; and what are the means used to ensure that payment is made.

Mr. Sackville: All national service hospitals are required to have procedures in place to identify and charge patients who are not eligible for free NHS treatment.

Doncaster Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the names of the chairman, general manager or chief executive of the Doncaster health authority and its successor bodies and the Doncaster Healthcare NHS trust in each of the years since 1988–89 and the amounts paid to each person in fees, salaries, other remuneration and expenses for each year; [39540]

(2) if he will list the names of members serving on the Doncaster health authority, its successor bodies and the Doncaster Healthcare NHS trust in each of the financial years since 1988–89 and the amounts paid to each person in fees, salaries, other remuneration and expenses for each year. [39539]

Mr. Malone: Those who have served on the board of Doncaster Healthcare NHS trust since it was established on 1 November 1991—operational on 1 April 1992—and on the board of Doncaster health authority since 1988–89, are as follows:

DONCASTER HEALTHCARE NHS TRUST

Chairman:

1 November 1991 until 30 November 1993: Peter Horsburgh

6 December 1993 to date: David Bertram

Non-executive directors:

M. Spencer (from 1 November 1991 until December 1993), C. Fleming, J. Liversedge, J. Lucas, J. Millar, S. Bryant (from 15.08.94).

Chief Executive:

1 November 1991 until January 1995: Michael Bone 16 January 1995 to date: Peter Oldridge (acting chief executive)

DONCASTER HEALTH AUTHORITY

Members:

1988–89: Mr. P. Adey, Dr. A. Berry, Mrs. R. Cottrell, Mr. E. Dickinson, Mr. R. Fawcett, Dr. J. Finbow, Mrs. J. Fish, Mrs. E Harris, Dr. R. Leggett, Mr. J. McHale, Mrs. B. Meeke, Mrs. M. Robinson, Cllr. F. Milnes, Cllr. N. Swan, Cllr. E. Tattersall, Cllr. P. Welsh.

1989–90: Mr. P Adey, Dr. A. Berry, Mrs. R. Cottrell, Mr. E. Dickinson, Mr. R. Fawcett, Dr. J Finbow, Mrs. J Fish, Mrs. E Harris, Dr. R. Leggett, Mr. J. McHale, Mrs. B. Meeke, Mrs. M. Robinson, Cllr. J. Hawley, Cllr. A. Mitchinson, Cllr. E. Tattersall, Cllr. P. Welsh.

October 1989 to September 1990: Mr. P. Adey, Mr. G. Bardhan, Dr. A. Berry, Mrs. R. Cottrell, Mr. E. Dickinson, Mrs. J. Fish, Mrs. E. Harris, Mr. R. Fawcett, Dr. R. Leggett, Mr. D. McFadden, Mrs. B. Meeke, Mrs. M. Robinson, Cllr. J. Hawley, Cllr. A. Mitchinson, Cllr. E. Tattersall, Cllr. P. Welsh.

September 1990 to March 1991: Mr. E. Dickinson, Mrs. E. Harris, Mr. J. Lusby (resigned November 1990), Mr. M Mitchell, (replaced by Mr. T. Sly, November 1990), Mr. J. Staniland.

April 1991 to date: Mr. E. Dickinson (resigned May 1992), Ms V. Ferres, Mrs. E. Harris, Mr. T. Sly, Mr. J. Staniland, Mr. M. Glover (from April 1993, to replace Mr. Dickinson).

Chairman:

1988–89: Malcolm C. Foy replaced by Graham Smith in June 1989.

1 June 1989 until 31 March 1994: Graham Smith.

1 April 1994 to date: Keith Jones.

Chief Executives:

1989–90: John Lusby until November 1990.

July 1991 to date: John Newton.

Chairmen of district health authorities have been entitled to remuneration annually at the following rates:

Date	Renumeration
Prior to 1 April 1989	£11,868
Between 1 April 1989 and 31 March 1990	£12,462
Between 1 April 1990 and 31 December 1990	Within the range £13,674 to £17,437
Between 1 January 1991 and 30 November 1991	Within the range £13,812 to £17,610
From 1 December 1991 to date	Within the range of £15,125 to £19,285

Non-executive members of health authorities are remunerated at a flat rate of £5,000 per annum—before 1990 they received no remuneration.

Since December 1991, chairmen of NHS trusts have been remunerated within the range £15,125 to £19,285 per annum. Non-executive directors of trusts are remunerated at a flat rate of £5,000 per annum. Details of expenses paid to NHS board members are not held centrally.

The total remuneration of the chief executives of Doncaster Healthcare NHS trust and Doncaster health authority during the periods in question is as follows:

Health authority

1988–89: £44,105

1989–90: £47,700

1990–91: £53,353

1991–92: £56,438

1992–93: £70,832[1]

1993–94: £73,270

1994–95: £78,244

Trust

1992–93: £47,000

1993–94: £48,000

1994–95: £50,000

[1] A joint chief executive, for Doncaster DHA and Doncaster FHSA, was appointed on 1 July 1991. Prior to that date there was a DHA general manager and an FHSA general manager.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39849]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. friend the Secretary of State meets the chief executives of my Department's agencies as and when a specific need to do so arises. Since July, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has held one such meeting.

Trent Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the location of the new headquarters of Trent health authority, indicating the cost of relocation and the cost of using existing premises. [39500]

Mr. Malone: Trent regional health authority will be abolished on 31 March 1996. A number of the functions of the RHA will be carried out by the Trent regional office of the NHS executive. The regional office will occupy the headquarters of the former RHA at Fulwood house, Sheffield. Because the space requirements for the regional office's 135 staff will be smaller than for the RHA, negotiations are under way for Sheffield health authority to take over the freehold for the site and to lease part of the site to the regional office.

Pharmacists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to hold centrally records on the numbers of pharmacists who have been dismissed by his Department as a result of engaging in the practice of fraudulently collecting a prescription fee from a customer and ticking the exempt box on the prescription form; and if he will make a statement. [39509]

Mr. Malone: Pharmacists are not employed by the Department of Health but are under contract to individual family health services authorities. FHSAs are responsible for taking action against any pharmacist found to be engaging in fraudulent activities. Details of such cases are not available centrally.

Since 1 April 1995 all patients presenting prescriptions for dispensing have been asked to sign the declaration on the back of the prescription form indicating the category of exemption claimed or the amount of the charge they have paid.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which this Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39570]

Mr. Sackville: None.

Treatment Costs

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward measures to make all patients aware of the cost of their individual treatment under the NHS. [39741]

Mr. Malone: The "Code of Practice on Openness in the NHS", issued in April 1995, sets out the information that NHS trusts are required to make available to members of the public. In most cases, this information will enable estimates of treatment costs to be made. There are no plans to advise patients of the cost of their individual treatment. Copies of the code are available in the Library.

Employment of Children

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for changes to the law on children's employment. [40690]

Mr. Bowis: We have today issued a consultation document proposing some changes to the law on children's employment in England and Wales. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is undertaking a separate but similar exercise in Scotland. Copies of both consultation documents have been placed in the Library.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by (a) trust, (b) health authority and (c) region, the amounts allocated for the administration of the private finance initiative. [40693]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 2 May, columns 175-76, for the available information.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, columns 683-84, when the necessary regulations to establish the special health authority to administer the clinical negligence scheme for trusts will be laid before Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [40791]

Mr. Malone: We have today laid before Parliament an order and regulations to set up the special health authority to deal with the establishment and administration of a clinical negligence scheme for trusts under section 21 of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. The authority will be known as the national health service litigation authority.

It is my intention to appoint Sir Bruce Martin QC as the chairman of the authority, and Dr. Oscar Craig and Mr. Ronald Bradshaw as non-executive members.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the currently available methods for the detection of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in living humans. [38559]

Mr. Sackville: While there are currently no reliable methods for ante-mortem detection of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, in a small proportion of cases, it may be possible to confirm the diagnosis by a brain biopsy while the patient is still living.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued to pathologists and post-mortem technicians when handling cases involving or potentially involving transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. [38548]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health issued guidance to national health service post-mortem staff on handling of bodies suspected to have had, or to have been at risk of developing Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease or Gerstmann-Straussler-Scheinker syndrome in April 1994. Further guidance from the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens on precautions for work with human and animal transmissible spongiform encephalopathies was issued in September 1994. Copies of each of these sets of guidance are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the locations where homogenisation and centrifugation of potential transmissible spongiform encephalopathies takes place. [38851]

Mr. Sackville: Homogenisation and centrifugation of potential transmissible spongiform encephalopathies should take place in laboratories with containment level 2 facilities, with additional precautions as specified by the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens in its guidance on precautions for work with human and animal transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. Information about the locations of these laboratories is not available centrally.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance is issued to NHS personnel in maternity units in respect of patients who have received human growth hormone; and what procedures are operated for the handling of placenta and membranes; [38852]

(2) what is the procedures for the disposal of human tissue obtained for the purpose of identifying a transmissible spongiform encephalopathy where tests confirm infection; [38553]

(3) how personnel involved in neurosurgical procedures are advised of potential health risks associated with transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. [38554]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of health issued the NHS with guidance on precautions for work with human and animal transmissible spongiform encephalopathies produced by the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens in September 1994. Copies of this guidance are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the Department has made of the effectiveness of sodium hypochlorite as a sterilising agent for transmissible spongiform encephalopathies; how widespread is its use; and if he will make a statement. [38555]

Mr. Sackville: The Advisory Committee on Dangerous pathogens guidance on precautions for work with human and animal transmissible spongiform encephalopathies assesses sodium hypochlorite to be the disinfectant of choice when autoclaving—the method of choice for decontamination—is not practicable. Information on its use is not available centrally but it is believed to be used widely.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Department's assessment of the nature of the causative agent for transmissible spongiform encephalopathies in humans. [38556]

Mr. Sackville: There are currently three main hypotheses which identify a prion, virino or virus respectively as the causal agents for transmissible spongiform encephalopathies in humans. Details of these hypotheses are contained in the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's publication "Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies: A Summary of Present Knowledge and Research", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of occurrence for (a) suspected and (b) confirmed Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease, within the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [38557]

Mr. Sackville: 115 suspected cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease were reported to the national CJD surveillance unit in 1994. After further investigation, 59 of these were classified as definite or probable cases, of which 53 were sporadic CJD.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has of increases in prostate cancer after vasectomy; and if he will make a statement. [38549]

Mr. Sackville: Several studies have been undertaken both in this country and internationally into the possible causal links between vasectomy and prostate cancer. The findings of these studies have been inconclusive.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his current predictions for the incidence of Alzheimer's disease, within England, for the next 10 years. [38558]

Mr. Bowis: The prevalence of dementia is 5 per cent. for people aged 65 years and over and 20 per cent. for people aged 80 years and over. The increase in the elderly population is likely to result in a rise in the numbers suffering from dementia.

Migration

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people have emigrated from the United Kingdom in the last 10 years; and if he will provide a breakdown by age and nationality. [38207]

(2) how many immigrants have entered the United Kingdom in the last 10 years; and if he will provide a breakdown by age and nationality. [38208]

Mr. Sackville: The information for the years 1983 to 1992 is published in tables 2.1 and 2.9 of "International Migration, 1992". Information for 1993 is published in tables 17 and 19 of "Population Trends", volume 81. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

These tables do not include people migrating to or from the Irish Republic and it is also highly likely they exclude people admitted as short-term visitors who are subsequently granted an extension of stay for a year or longer, for example as students, on the basis of marriage, or because they applied for asylum. Estimates of net international migration from 1986 to 1993, including such people, are given on page 5 of "Population Trends", volume 81.

Boneloc Cement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what is his calculation of the total number of patients on whom Boneloc cement was used; and where in the United Kingdom it was used. [39819]

Mr. Sackville: Section 118 of the Medicines Act precludes the disclosure of information which is provided about products in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

Hip Replacements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what proposals he has to reduce the percentage of revision of total hip replacement operations. [39821]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health plans to support research and evaluation programmes aimed at improving the safety, performance and life of total hip replacements. These include assessment of the clinical performance of implants by explant studies; the development of techniques to predict long-term clinical outcomes from short-term clinical data; and the development and assessment of new materials and technologies. The Department of Health is also supporting an analysis of the data from a five-year outcome study of total hip replacements in the Trent region.

Herbal Medicines

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct the Office of Fair Trading to investigate misleading advertising of unlicensed herbal medicines. [38663]

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency regulates the advertising of medicinal products, both licensed and unlicensed. The Medicines (Advertising) Regulations 1994 prohibit the advertising of a relevant medicinal product in respect of which no product licence is in force. The Department has sufficient powers in existing legislation to monitor the advertising of medicinal products, whether licensed or not.

The Office of Fair Trading is empowered to undertake investigations into complaints against specific advertisements rather than particular sectors of advertising activity.

Spending Statistics

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the latest available figures for (a) the district health authorities' spend per capita and (b) the family health services authorities' spend per capita for (i) London, (ii) Birmingham, (iii) Manchester, (iv) Liverpool, (v) Leeds and (vi) Newcastle. [40194]

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the per capita spending figure for each (a) district health authority, (b) family health services authority and (c) commissioning agency for 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96. [40282]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 12 December 1994 at column 465.

Figures for 1994–95 and 1995–96 are not yet available.

Information is not available centrally for commissioning agencies, as they exist only as a managerial arrangement for some district health authorities and family health services authorities, and are not statutory bodies.

Management Costs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will itemise by health authority spending per head of weighted population on management costs. [40280]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Members for York (Mr. Bayley) and for Dulwich (Ms Jowell) on 27 October, Official Report, column 848.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will itemise spending on (a) M1 management costs and (b) M2 management costs by (i) health authority and (ii) trust for each year for which figures are available, by both amount and percentage of income; [40281]

(2) what measures of management and administrative costs in (a) trusts and (b) health authorities his Department maintains. [40283]

Mr. Malone: We shall be publishing information shortly on management costs in national health service trusts and on the costs of running health authorities for 1994–95. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 19 October at columns 363–64, for the details of what information will be provided about trusts' management costs for 1994–95 and what other measures of management costs have been provided previously. The 1994–95 information on the costs of running health authorities will cover all staff and non-staff costs with the exception of costs incurred in direct service provision—for example, health promotion, AIDS co-ordination; inherited costs—for example, premature retirement payments and costs of medical negligence claims—and capital charges on health centres and on surplus property in the process of disposal.

Cancer

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of mouth cancer in the United Kingdom for each of the past 10 years. [38099]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 27 October 1995]: The information for the United Kingdom is shown in the table.

Registration in the United Kingdom on oral cancers ICD9[1] codes 140 (lip), 141 (tongue), 142 (salivary glands), 143 (gum), 144 (floor of mouth), 145 (other and unspecified parts of the mouth) from 1980 to 1989.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery Funding, Northamptonshire

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is, to the latest convenient date, the total sum allocated under the national lottery and total sum allocated to applications in (a) Northamptonshire, (b) the Corby borough and (c) the East Northamptonshire district. [38336]

Mr. Sproat: The total sum allocated under the national lottery, as at 20 October, is £546 million—£546,146,920.04. There have been no awards, to date, for projects based in the Corby borough. A split between projects in the East Northamptonshire district and Northamptonshire are not available. There have been 12 awards to projects based in Northamptonshire with a total grant of £2,375,755.

National Lottery Administration Costs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what have been the administration costs to date of the (i) Arts Council Lottery Board, (ii) Sports Council Lottery Board, (iii) National Heritage Memorial Fund, (iv) National Lottery Charities Board and (v) Millennium Commission. [38748]

Mr. Sproat: As at 30 September, total administration costs for each of the lottery distributors were as follows:

Distribution body	£
The Arts Council of England	2,539,411
The Scottish Arts Council	368,953
The Arts Council of Wales	302,947
The Arts Council of Northern Ireland	110,015
The Sports Council (of England)	2,543,000
The Scottish Sports Council	391,493
The Sports Council of Wales	327,451
The Sports Council of Northern Ireland	304,255
The National Heritage Memorial Fund	2,641,402
The National Lottery Charities Board	4,706,848
The Millennium Commission	3,101,839
Total	17,337,614

The sums include start-up costs.

George III Coronation Bible

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what attempts her Department has made to find a purchaser who will keep in the United Kingdom the bible on which King George III swore his coronation oath in 1761; and if she will make a statement. [39023]

Mr. Sproat: A licence to export the George III coronation bible was applied for in March this year. The granting of the licence was objected to by my Department's expert adviser and the case was referred in the normal way to the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art.

My Department accepted the committee's recommendation that a decision on the export licence application should be deferred for three months to give an opportunity for a purchaser to come forward to offer to buy the bible at or above the fair market price of £350,000. A news release announcing this decision was widely circulated on 19 June 1995.

At the end of the three-month period no offer to purchase had been made, nor were my officials aware of any other interest in purchasing the bible. The export licence was therefore issued and the bible exported in September of this year.

A report on this case is contained in the 1994–95 report of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art which was presented to Parliament on Tuesday 24 October, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Ernest Bevin School, Winsford

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration her Department is giving to listing the school where Ernest Bevin was educated at Winsford, Somerset; and if she will make a statement. [39080]

Mr. Sproat: There is no proposal for the listing of any school in Winsford under consideration within my Department at the present time. However, if the hon. Member could provide photographs and location plan of the school where Ernest Bevin was educated, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will ask her advisers at English Heritage for an assessment of whether it is of special architectural or historic interest. As the hon. Member may be aware, Bevins house, Winsford, the birthplace of Ernest Bevin, is already listed in grade II.

Drugs in Sport

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many persons tested positive in the Sports Council drug testing programme in 1994–95. [39787]

Mr. Sproat: The Sports Council publishes a report on its doping control programme annually containing, among other information, statistics on the number of tests taken and the number of positive reports. In 1994–95, the Sports Council reported that 60 persons tested positive for banned substances and there were seven refusals out of a total of 4,374 tests.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those sportspeople who were tested for illegal substances during 1995, indicating those who were drug free and those found to be drug positive. [39797]

Mr. Sproat: This information is not available centrally. The names of those tested, and who subsequently test positive, are reported by the Sports Council's doping control unit to the governing body of the sport under whose authority testing has taken place. It is the responsibility of the individual governing body to decide when and how to release that information. Not all substances prohibited in sport are controlled substances. Sports organisations themselves decide on the parameter for controlling drug misuse in sport.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much of the Sports Council funds are allocated to anti-drug information. [39786]

Mr. Sproat: In 1994–95, the Sports Council's doping control unit spent £86,099 on education and information, supplemented by expenditure by the Sports Councils in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

National Stadium

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the role of her Department in awarding lottery funds to the proposed national stadium. [39789]

Mr. Sproat: None. It has always been an important point of the national lottery that the distribution of proceeds should be handled at arm's length from the Government. The award of lottery funding for the new national stadium will be a matter for the Sports Council lottery awards panel when the successful bidder has submitted a formal application.

Sports NVQs

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress has been made on national vocational qualifications for sport; which are the awarding bodies; and what is the role of the Minister of Sport. [39784]

Mr. Sproat: There are currently 16 NVQs available in sport. The Sports Council is working closely with sports governing bodies on an on-going programme to implement NVQs in sports where they do not already exist. The awarding bodies for NVQs in coaching are: City and Guilds, Royal Society of Arts and the Business and Technology Education Council. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications, along with the Department for Education and Employment, has responsibility for the administration of NVQs, but as Minister for Sport I take a keen interest in the development of NVQs in sport.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the NVQs now available for sports; and when she expects NVQs to be available for all sports organisations. [39783]

Mr. Sproat: There are currently 16 NVQs available in the coaching of sport. These are: canoeing, karate, cricket, skiing, badminton, squash, basketball, swimming, exercise and fitness, target shooting, football, table tennis, gymnastics, tennis, hockey and windsurfing. NVQs are also available in sports administration and management. The Sports Council is working closely with sports governing bodies on an on-going programme to implement NVQs in sports where they do not already exist.

Football Dishonesty Inquiry

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made of the inquiry into football financial dishonesty held by the football authorities; what is the role of the Department of National Heritage; and when she expects the report to be passed to her. [39798]

Mr. Sproat: The football governing bodies are independent of Government and the Department of National Heritage therefore has no role in the FA Premier league's commission of inquiry into player transfers. I am satisfied that the commission's first interim report, concerning Mr. George Graham, and the subsequent rule changes and codes of conduct adopted by the Premier league indicate that the football authorities are serious in their commitment to ensure the highest possible standards within the game. I look forward to the commission's subsequent reports when they are ready.

Sports Coaches (Training)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the annual expenditure of the training and promotion of sports coaches by Her Majesty's Government. [39788]

Mr. Sproat: The majority of Government support for sport and active recreation is channelled through the GB Sports Council. The Sports Council's grant to the National Coaching Foundation, which provides services for 70,000 coaches throughout the UK, is £1,550,000 for 1995–96. Additional support for coaches is provided through the council's grants to national governing bodies of sport and through other Sports Council funded sports development projects nationwide. The Government's sportsmatch scheme helps fund a small number of schemes which involve the training and promotion of sports coaches. The sports policy statement "Sport: Raising the Game" also identified a number of ways in which coaching would be extended and improved in schools, through clubs, further and higher education and elite athletes.

Yorkshire Air Museum

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action her Department is taking to preserve the Yorkshire air museum based at Elvington, North Yorkshire, after the closure of Royal Air Force Elvington, with particular reference to (a) the air shows carried out there and (b) the allocation recently awarded to the museum from national lottery funds; and if she will make a statement. [39518]

Mr. Sproat: The decision to close RAF Elvington is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. The Yorkshire air museum would be free to make an offer for the site, should it be placed on the open market, and the Yorkshire and Humberside Museum Council would be able to advise the museum on this and other matters. I understand from the national heritage memorial fund that the closure of RAF Elvington would not affect the grant awarded to the museum from the heritage lottery fund.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if she will list the public appointments for which her Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary; [39458]

(2) if she will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which her Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39437]

Mr. Sproat: My Department does not have responsibility for any public appointments or appointments to non-departmental public bodies in the county of South Yorkshire.

Digital Terrestrial Broadcasting

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on local and regional access to future digital terrestrial broadcasting. [38540]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Digital terrestrial broadcasting will provide opportunities for national, regional and local television and radio services. The Government's proposals for digital broadcasting are set out in "Digital Terrestrial Broadcasting", Cm 2946. Those proposals are designed to let viewers and listeners have access as soon as possible to digital terrestrial broadcasting; ensure that there is a wide range of services appealing to a variety of tastes and interests, including regional and local interests; and give broadcasters the opportunity to provide services in a fair and effective competitive market.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is her current estimate of the total allocation of national lottery proceeds for the Millennium Commission; and if she will give a regional breakdown of the allocations made so far from the Millennium Commission. [38762]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The Millennium Commission receives a fifth of the allocation for the good causes. As at Friday 20 October, the Millennium Commission's allocation stood at £223.9 million.

The regional breakdown for the 81 Millennium Commission awards to date is as follows:

Region	Amount £	Number of Awards
London	2,200,000.00	1
North West	3,882,000.00	6

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tenants in receipt of income support have been able to purchase their homes under the right to buy in each of the past five years. [39265]

Mr. Curry: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants have completed the purchase of their council homes under the rent-to-mortgage scheme in each month since the introduction of the scheme. [39266]

Mr. Curry: Information on completed sales under rent-to-mortgage since the scheme was introduced in October 1993 is given is the table. The figures are taken from the quarterly housing returns received from local authorities in England.

Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about future funding of the leasehold enfranchisement advisory service. [39873]

Mr. Curry: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 24 January 1995, Official Report, column 111.

Nuclear Waste Repository, Cumbria

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's assessment of the long-term safety of the proposed Nirex repository in Cumbria.

Mr. Gummer: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has received no proposal from Nirex under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 for a repository in Cumbria and consequently cannot comment on the long-term safety of any such facility.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his assessment of the likelihood of ground water contamination from any future nuclear waste repository in Cumbria; [39737]

(2) what is his assessment of the likelihood of any radioactive substances from any nuclear waste repository in Cumbria reaching the surface by a colloidal transport process. [39738]

Mr. Gummer: It will be for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or, after 1 April 1996 the Environment Agency, to assess the case supporting any future application, under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, for a nuclear waste repository in Cumbria. It would be for the developer to address in such a case any potential groundwater contamination and whether colloids or any other transport processes significantly influenced the risk of radioactive substances reaching the surface.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the cost of his Department of any investigations that have either been carried out by or commissioned by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution into the proposed Nirex repository site in Cumbria. [39736]

Mr. Gummer: No costs were incurred by the Department for the studies that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution commissioned relating to Nirex's programme. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution recovered from Nirex the costs of the work undertaken.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has received no proposal from Nirex under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, for a repository in Cumbria and consequently has not commissioned or carried out investigations relating to such a proposal.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the investigations that have been (a) commissioned and (b) carried out by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution into the proposed Nirex repository site in Cumbria. [39735]

Mr. Gummer: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution let two contracts for studies relating to Nirex's programme; a contract with W. S. Atkins for a "Scientific review and assessment of Nirex submissions" and a contract with Intera Information Technologies/R. M. Consultants for a "Post closure radiological safety assessment of Nirex proposals". Reports arising from the latter contract will be placed in the House Library. Reports from the W. S. Atkins contract are still in preparation and a set will be placed in the Library when they are completed.

These studies by HMIP were undertaken to test and develop the Inspectorate's assessment capabilities. The studies were not designed to inform HMIP on the suitability of the site in Cumbria for possible future development of a repository.

HMIP has received no proposal from Nirex, under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, for a repository in Cumbria and consequently has not commissioned or carried out investigations relating to such a proposal.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the county if South Yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years; [39421]

(2) if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39450]

Sir Paul Beresford: The only body, based in South Yorkshire, to which the Secretary of State makes public appointments is the Sheffield development corporation. For this body, I have provided three tables, giving the information requested. Table 1 shows the total annual budget broken down into total expenditure and total grant in aid for the four financial years between 1992 and 1996, 1995–96 being an estimate. Table 2 shows the number of appointments and reappointments for the calendar years 1992 to 1995 and table 3 shows the current composition of the SDC board.

Leasehold Reform Act Codes of Practice

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the code of management practice provided for under the provisions of part I of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993. [39871]

Mr. Curry: We plan to lay before the House very shortly an order which approves the Association of Retirement Housing Managers code of practice for leasehold sheltered housing. It will be published by and be available from the Association of Retirement Housing Managers, 50 City Way, Rochester, Kent ME1 2AB.

The Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors has submitted two codes for approval and negotiations on the text are nearing completion.

Land Management Agreements, Suffolk

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown, by type, of the land management agreements in existence between land owners and English Nature for the current financial year in the county of Suffolk, giving the amount of funding in each category. [40148]

Mr. Gummer: In the current financial year, the following management agreements under sections 15 and 16 of the Countryside Act 1968 are in existence in the county of Suffolk:

Section	Number	Cost
S15	29	104,030
S16	5	94,818

Social Housing

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify and categorise the 70,000 social lettings referred to in the seventh paragraph of the letter of 23 October from his Department to hon. Members on the subject of homelessness legislation. [40279]

Mr. Curry: Details of the 70,000 social lettings expected to be provided through public investment in 1995–96 were given on page 60 of the Government's Housing White Paper "Our Future Homes", published in June. The figures are as follows:

Providing homes for rent	England output
The Housing Corporation helps housing associations to build new homes to rent.	27,100
The Housing Corporation also helps associations to buy and rehabilitate existing homes.	8,900
Local authorities fund housing associations to build new homes and buy and rehabilitate existing homes, helped by Government grant.	11,000
A small number of new homes are provided from local authorities' own resources	1,000
Making better use of existing homes
We release additional existing social lettings through the Cash Incentive Scheme, giving local authority tenants grants to help them to buy their own homes in the private sector.	5,500
We run a similar scheme for housing association tenants, the tenants incentive scheme.	7,200
Supporting low cost home ownership
We help people on low incomes, who need a home, to buy at low cost, by building homes for shared ownership	4,600
Through the do it yourself shared ownership scheme, we help people on low incomes, who are often living in social housing, buy on the open market.	4,700

Local Government Finance, East Midlands

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the amount of extra grant each county council in the east midlands would receive in 1995–96 if there were no area cost adjustment in the standard spending assessment system. [38919]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The contribution of the area cost adjustment to authorities' standard spending assessments is some £1.5 billion. It is widely believed, incorrectly, that the abolition of the area cost adjustment would release this amount for addition to the SSAs of authorities throughout England.

If the area cost adjustment were abolished, it would be necessary to revise the analyses on which the SSA formulae are based. Most of the formulae are based on analyses of expenditure from which the element related to higher costs in London and the south-east has been deducted. If there was no area cost adjustment, the analyses would have to be carried out afresh, based on expenditure without any such deduction.

We would wish to discuss with the local authority associations what would then be the most appropriate formulae. But if the formulae were recalculated retaining the existing indicators, those indicators would have different weights from those which applied in 1995–96. The resulting standard spending assessments, for all authorities in England, would then be as shown in the table which I have placed in the Library. The table also shows the differences between the actual SSA and the alternative SSA. These differences are virtually the same as the differences in each authority's revenue support grant.

The Department has prepared a technical note about these calculations for the local authority associations. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Canal Freight

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to increase the volume of cargo transport by canals. [39661]

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The Government continue to encourage the maximum use of inland waterways for freight transport where this is a practical and economic option. However, freight hauliers must have the freedom to choose the mode of transport that best suits their needs. We draw attention, where appropriate, to the potential of water for the carriage of freight, and to the Government grants that are available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

27. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to improve the relationship between the Crown Prosecution Service and the police. [37857]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service and the police are working closely together on a number of initiatives including reducing the volume of paper in prosecution files, greater use of information technology and co-ordinated training.

28. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the working of the Crown Prosecution Service. [37859]

The Solicitor-General: The primary function of the Crown Prosecution Service is to prosecute firmly but fairly the 1.5 million cases submitted to it each year by the police. The service is working actively with the other agencies in the criminal justice system both to achieve this objective and to improve the way the system treats witnesses and victims.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to improve efficiency in the Crown Prosecution Service. [37853]

The Attorney-General: Efficiency in the Crown Prosecution Service continues to improve. My key priorities currently are to improve still further the close liaison between the CPS, the police and the courts.

Scott Inquiry

29. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General what recent requests he has received from Lord Justice Scott. [37860]

The Attorney-General: It is the intention of the inquiry that any exchanges with individual witnesses should be confidential. That is to be respected.

Lenient Sentences

30. Dr. Spink: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the impact to date of his ability to appeal against unduly lenient sentences. [37862]

The Solicitor-General: The power is now accepted as an important and necessary addition to the criminal justice system because very occasionally a sentence will be imposed in the Crown court which is unduly lenient, and causes disproportionate damage to public confidence in the judiciary.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Attorney-General what recent use he has made of his powers to initiate appeals against lenient sentences.

The Attorney-General: Since January 1995, 60 offenders have had their sentence referred to the Court of Appeal as unduly lenient. One case has since been withdrawn. To date, 20 cases have been determined by the Court of Appeal, all of which have resulted in increased sentences.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Court

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with the United Kingdom's EU partners about a common approach to revising procedures following the European Court of Human Rights verdict on the killing of IRA terrorists in Gibraltar; what plans he has to propose an amendment to article 2.2 of the European convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in relation to the phrase to take account of the verdict; and if he will make a statement. [38019]

"the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary"

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Government are deeply concerned by the conclusion reached by the European Court of Human Rights in the Gibraltar case and are considering the implications of the court's judgment. When we have come to conclusions, we shall make our views known within the Council of Europe as the European Court of Human Rights is an institution of the Council of Europe and not of the European Union. Consultation with others is an option that we may wish to pursue.

As regards article 2 of the European convention on human rights, the court did not find a violation in relation to compatibility of the national law on the use of lethal force with article 2 standards.

The court unanimously rejected most the applicants' claims. It refused to award compensation—on the grounds that those killed were terrorists planning to plant a bomb. The sole point on which the court found against the United Kingdom was over the control and organisation of the operation. The majority of 10 judges thereby overturned the opinion of the European Commission of Human Rights which, after conducting its own fact-finding exercise, found in September last year that the Government had not violated the European convention on human rights. The judges also contradicted the conclusion on the lengthy 1988 inquest which, after interviewing 79 witnesses, decided that what had happened was lawful.

The judgment of the majority, based on no new evidence and defying common sense, has done nothing for the standing of the court in the United Kingdom.

The dissenting minority of nine, which included some of the most senior judges on the court including its President, disagreed entirely with the majority's findings on the one contentious issue. These they demolished point by point in a lengthy and well-argued joint dissenting opinion.

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which cases at (a) the European Commission and (b) the Court of Human Rights at Strasbourg costs have been awarded against the United Kingdom Government and how much was paid in each instance; if he will indicate the cases where costs have not been awarded despite a finding against the United Kingdom; and if he will specify the subject matter of each case. [39915]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: In the past two years the Government have been ordered by the European Court of Human Rights to pay costs to successful applicants in the following cases:

Darnell	3,207
Boner and Maxwell	5,560
Welch	15,010
Tolstoy	91,516
McCann, Farrell and Savage	33,804

The amounts awarded have been paid, save for the recent case of McCann. In one case, McMichael, the successful applicants were not awarded costs because they claimed none.

I shall write to the hon. and learned Member detailing the costs awarded by the court in judgments given between 1975 and 1993.

I shall also write separately detailing costs awarded by the Committee of Ministers over the last two years in United Kingdom cases not referred to the court by the commission. To go back further would involve disproportionate costs.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government intend to pay the costs awarded against them by the European Court of Human Rights in the case of the deaths of Farrell, Savage and McCann in Gibraltar. [39916]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The matter of the payment of costs will be considered in the normal way.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the numbers of cases at the European Court of Human Rights, by signatory state, which those states have lost; and if he will indicate for each such state the date from which its citizens were enabled to bring cases individually. [39917]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The following is the information requested, correct as at 6 October 1995.

ECHR: comparative table of violations

No case for the member states parties has yet reached the court.

Bosnia

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps her Majesty's Government have taken to secure full implementation of UN Security Council resolution 752 and withdrawal of regular Croation forces from Bosnian territory. [40015]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Since that resolution in 1991, the United Kingdom has deployed up to 9,000 troops in Bosnia, contributed more than £275.5 million in humanitarian aid and played a leading role in trying to reach a comprehensive settlement to the conflict there.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many refugees have been driven out of Krajina by the Croatian army; and what assistance Her Majesty's Government and the international community are giving to them. [40017]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimates that approximately 11,000 refugees moved from sector west into northern Bosnia following the Croation military offensive in May. In August, approximately 200,000 Croation Serbs fled from sectors north and south and some 25,000 Bosnian Muslims left the Bihac pocket for Croatia. We have contributed more than £2 million in grants through non-governmental organisations—Oxfam, Save the Children and the British Red Cross—to meet emergency needs of these refugees, as part of comprehensive assistance programme co-ordinated by UNHCR.

NATO (Expansion)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards expansion of NATO to the Visegrad countries. [39996]

Mr. David Davis: The NATO summit in January 1994 confirmed that the alliance expected and would welcome expansion of its membership to include democratic states to its east, as part of an evolutionary process, and taking into account political and security developments in the whole of Europe. In December 1994, NATO Foreign Ministers set in hand work on a study into the practicalities and principles of enlargement. This study has now been completed and was presented to all partners in Brussels on 28 September. Copies of the study have been placed in the Library of the House.

The alliance is agreed that it would be premature to discuss at this stage which countries might be invited to join.

Pakistan

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Pakistan. [40000]

Mr. Hanley: We have good and active relations with Pakistan. We look forward to deepening and extending our political, commercial and cultural links.

Nuclear-free Zones

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards nuclear-free zones in (a) the Pacific and (b) central and eastern Europe. [39998]

Mr. David Davis: On 20 October we announced jointly with the US and France that we would sign the protocols to the south Pacific nuclear-free zone treaty in the first half of 1996. We believe that internationally recognised nuclear weapon free zones, based on arrangements freely arrived at by all the states in a given region, can help prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. However, proposals for such zones have to take into account prevailing circumstances in the area concerned.

Stranded Holidaymakers, Turkey

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance was offered by the British embassy in Ankara to the passengers on the Airtours flight from Belfast to Dalaman on 9 September, following the collapse of Villmar Holidays; and if he will make a statement. [39923]

Mr. Hanley: Consular staff in London, Ankara and Marmaris worked closely with the Civil Aviation Authority and Villmar Travel's agents in Turkey, Gentur, to help the stranded passengers. Whilst Gentur assumed primary responsibility, consular staff intervened to persuade local hotels to accept the CAA's guarantee of payment.

UNESCO

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to renew British membership of UNESCO. [39967]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We are keeping this issue under review.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relationship to UNESCO. [39966]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We operate an observer section to UNESCO based in the Embassy in Paris which monitors developments within the organisation. This includes coverage, with the assistance of officials in London, of the twice yearly executive board sessions and the biennial general conference.

We retain membership of certain UNESCO programmes—World Heritage Committee; Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission; and the Intergovernmental Council of the International Hydrological Programme.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much it would cost for the United Kingdom to rejoin UNESCO this year; and what percentage of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Overseas Development Administration budget that represents. [39968]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Annual assessed contribution would be approximately £11 million. This represents 0.31 per cent. of the total FCO-ODA 1995–96 budget.

In addition, there would be staffing costs which have yet to be quantified.

Croatia

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government support Croatian membership of the EU. [40013]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Croatia has not applied for accession to the EU. Any application would need to be considered against the background at that time of Croatia's democratic stability and respect for human and civil rights, as well as her relations with other countries in the region.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the current level of human rights abuse in Croatia. [40016]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We continue to receive reports of human rights abuses in Croatia, including killing of civilians. We condemn these atrocities. With our EU partners, we will ensure that such reports are made available to the international tribunal on former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Croatia in respect of human rights abuse and ethnic cleansing in Krajina. [40012]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have condemned the human rights abuses in Krajina and called for the Serb refugees to be allowed to return to their homes if they so wish. Along with our EU partners we have repeatedly warned Croatia that its future relations with the EU are dependent on its respect for human rights and minorities.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Croatia. [40014]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Kingdom has a resident ambassador in Zagreb. We established diplomatic relations with Croatia in January 1992.

Bangladesh

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Bangladesh. [40001]

Mr. Hanley: We have good and active relations with Bangladesh. We look forward to expanding our political, commercial and cultural links.

India

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with India. [39999]

Mr. Hanley: We have good and active relations with India. We look forward to expanding our political, commercial and cultural links.

Know-how Fund

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the amounts spent annually since 1989 on the British know-how fund; and if he will list the countries where it has been spent indicating the amount spent per country. [40086]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The amounts spent annually since 1989 on the British know-how fund are, in million pounds sterling:

1990–91: 13.676
1991–92: 33.395
1992–93: 44.866
1993–94: 57.750
1994–95: 77.286

[1] Including 62 million from the Polish zloty stabilisation fund.

Expenditure breakdown by country is as follows, in million pounds sterling:

On January 1 1993 the former Czechoslovakia divided into the Czech and Slovak Republics. From then on assistance to these two countries is shown separately. Those joint programmes which began before this date are still recorded under former Czechoslovakia.

Irish Territorial Claims

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government have raised the matter of the claim on the territory of the United Kingdom by the Irish Republic with international or regional bodies of which both countries are members. [39918]

Mr. Rifkind: No. Northern Ireland's status as part of the United Kingdom is not disputed in any international organisation of which the UK and the Republic of Ireland are both members. No purpose would therefore be served in raising the matter in any of these bodies.

Kashmir

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards relations between India and Pakistan in respect of their dispute over Kashmir. [40011]

Mr. Hanley: We have consistently encouraged the Indian and Pakistani Governments to resolve their dispute over Kashmir through bilateral negotiation.

Brazil (Makuxi Indians)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Brazilian Government concerning the treatment of the Makuxi people by the Roraima state authorities. [38542]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Government of Brazil are aware of our concern that the rights of the Makuxi and the other indigenous people of Brazil should be observed and protected. Our embassy in Brasilia keeps in regular touch with the Brazilian authorities and monitors the situation closely.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to meet representatives of the Makuxi Indians of Brazil when they visit London later this month. [38543]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Representatives of the Makuxi Indians will meet officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 1 November.

Former Communist Countries (Elections)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about assistance provided by his Department to ensure free and fair elections in former communist countries. [37866]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have provided a wide range of assistance to former communist countries, including advice on the drafting of constitutions and electoral laws, advice to a range of political parties on campaigning and party management, assisting the development of free and fair media as well as supporting the preparations for elections and election monitoring.

Visas

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out for each of the last five calendar years (a) the number of cases in which Ministers have reversed the decision of an entry clearance officer and (b) the country in which the entry clearance application was lodged. [40193]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not available for the years 1991 to 1993 as files are kept for only two years when a visa has been granted. For the years 1994 to 1995 the information is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Arms Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the relationship between his Department and BMARC between 1980 and 1992. [40103]

Mr. David Davis: Research undertaken in the context of the Trade and Industry Select Committee inquiry has revealed no evidence of any contact between BMARC and my Department between 1985–91. However, during the latter period my Department routinely saw export licence applications covering defence sales submitted by BMARC to the Department of Trade and Industry. Information is not readily available for the period prior to 1985. I will write to the hon. Member.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the 23 and 24 October meeting of the study group preparing for the intergovernmental conference. [40395]

Mr. David Davis: I attended the 10th meeting of the study group, which took place in Brussels on 23 and 24 October, as the Foreign Secretary's representative. The meeting revisited a number of subjects which had come up in earlier discussions.

With regard to the European Court of Justice, I presented some British ideas for improving the operation of the court, and for helping to overcome problems which arise, especially where judgments may have disproportionate financial implications. Other members of the group had not yet examined our ideas in detail, but undertook to do so on the basis of a short paper which I had circulated to the group, and which has been placed in the Library of the House.

The meeting considered a paper by the Council legal service on options for simplifying the treaties. I applauded the intention to increase transparency and public comprehension, but doubted whether it would be possible to simplify the structure or wording of the treaties very much without changing their effect. I agreed, nevertheless, that it should be possible to eliminate obsolete articles.

There was a brief discussion on the role of national parliaments. I again commended ideas in the European Legislation Committee's 24th report on the IGC, which had been circulated in the group. In particular, I supported the recommendation to introduce a formal treaty obligation that national Parliaments should have adequate time to scrutinise draft proposals before these are considered by the Council.

In a discussion of other Community institutions, I said that all of them needed to be reviewed in the light of experience of Maastricht, and in the expectation of further enlargements. In particular, I raise the question as to whether the Economic and Social Committee was still fulfilling the purpose for which it was intended now that the Commission was systematically engaging in direct consultation with interested parties through Green and White Papers, and following the creation of the Committee of the Regions.

There was a brief discussion of ways in which fundamental rights are protected in the different member states, on the basis of a council legal service paper which has been placed in the Library of the House, together with other Council legal service papers on national parliaments, Council working methods and treaty simplification.

Iran

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to improve relations with Iran following the public statements by the President and other members of the Iranian Government that they would play no part in any attempts on the life of Salman Rushdie. [40278]

Mr. Hanley: The Government of Iran have not yet given satisfactory assurances of Mr. Rushdie's safety. I urge them to do so.

Diplomatic Wing Cash Limits

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's diplomatic wing cash limits for 1995–96. [40634]

Mr. Hanley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the following changes will be made:

> The cash limit for class II, vote 2—other external relations—will be increased by £80,001,000 from £211,632,000 to £291,633,000. The increase is in respect of contributions by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for international peacekeeping. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the agenda of the forthcoming Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting includes (a) reform of UN institutions, (b) good governance and (c) steps to reduce international debt. [40026]

Mr. Hanley: The Commonwealth Secretary-General, after consulting Heads of Commonwealth Governments earlier in the year, has proposed that each of these subjects be discussed at the Heads of Government meeting in New Zealand in November.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which prisons there are prisoners restricted to closed visits; and how many prisoners are involved. [38840]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prisons in which there are prisoners restricted to closed visits; and how many prisoners are involved.

On 26 October this year, there were fifteen prisoners in England and Wales subject to closed visits. Eight were at Belmarsh prison and seven were at Whitemoor.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are made for prisoners who are restricted to closed visits to have (a) visits from their legal advisers and (b) consular visits. [38843]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the arrangements made for persons who are restricted to closed visits to have (a) visits from their legal advisors and (b) consular visits.

A policy of closed visits was introduced for category A exceptional risk prisoners on 20 June this year. The aim of the policy was to ensure the most secure conditions possible for the highest risk prisoners. Only the elimination of all contact between prisoner and visitor was regarded as ensuring this security. The position of legal advisors and consular officials was carefully considered before deciding that the policy should also be applied to them to avoid the possibility that they might become potential targets for intimidation, threats or taken hostage in order to coerce them into assisting escape attempts.

Visits for legal advisors and consular officials take place out of hearing, but in sight of, prison staff. Where it is necessary to pass documents from the visitor to the prisoner the documents can be placed in an envelope which is then passed through an X-ray machine. In the most exceptional circumstances, for example when there is a need to discuss matters with a large number of prisoners at the same time, an Operational Director may authorise an open visit.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A prisoners are currently in the prison system in (a) England and (b) Wales; and how many are in each sub-category. [38847]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Seamus Mallon dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of category A prisoners currently held in prison establishments in (a) England and (b) Wales, and the number in each sub-category.

There are no prison establishments in Wales which hold category A prisoners on a permanent basis. For establishments in England, the information requested is given in the table below:

Number of category A prisoners held in prison establishments in England and the number in each escape risk classification at 23 October 1995

	Number
Exceptional escape risk	15
High escape risk	150
Standard escape risk	[1]645
Total number of category A prisoners	810

[1] Figure includes 19 young offenders.

Probation Services

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which ombudsman has jurisdiction to review the administration of probation and after care committees and their related probation services; and if he will make a statement. [39419]

Mr. Kirkhope: None. The operation of probation services is subject to inspection by Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation and to review by the Audit Commission.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentages of the current probation service work force are (a) over 30 years, (b) male (c) from an ethnic minority background and (d) from a military, police or Prison Service background. [39624]

Mr. Kirkhope: The latest available information is as follows.

At 31 March 1995, 35 per cent. of probation service staff—48 per cent. at probation officer grades—were male.

At 31 March 1994, 6.9 per cent. of probation service staff[1] and the same proportion for probation officer grades were recorded as belonging to ethnic minority groups.

Statistics on the age and employment background of probation service staff are not collected centrally.

[1] Excludes non-probation officer hostels staff and sessional supervisors.

Ms Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when circulars on changes to probation training were issued to chief probation officers and to relevant universities. [39596]

Mr. Kirkhope: Copies of the decision document published on 2 October were sent the same day to each chief probation officer and university providing courses attracting Home Office sponsorship.

Ms Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for future financial arrangements of probation officer qualification training. [39595]

Mr. Kirkhope: As the decision document published on 2 October makes clear, the money now spent on supporting the sponsorship scheme will be devolved to area probation services to fund new training arrangements when the necessary plans and preparations have been satisfactorily made.

General Election Expenditure

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce limits to control the national spending by political parties in general elections. [39825]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have no such plans.

Daylight Saving

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken and what plans he has for the future to press for the introduction of daylight saving time to reduce road casualties. [39822]

Mr. Kirkhope: Our policy on future summer time arrangements remain under review, including whether or not it would be right to move to central European time. The effect of any change on road traffic casualties is one of the many issues for consideration.

Religious Cults

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to allowing into the United Kingdom foreign nationals who are leaders of religious cults responsible for brainwashing and the breaking up of families. [40417]

Mr. Howard: All applications for entry are considered in accordance with the immigration rules, including the provisions relating to the refusal of entry on the ground that exclusion from the United Kingdom is conducive to the public good.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about Mr. Moon's application for entry into the United Kingdom. [40400]

Mr. Howard: I have directed that Mr. Moon should not be allowed entry to the United Kingdom, on the ground that his exclusion is conducive to the public good.

EU Common Visa List

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from which date he expects visa requirements for entry into the United Kingdom to be determined by an EU common visa list in accordance with the regulation adopted at the Home Affairs Council meeting on 25 September. [39914]

Mr. Howard: From 3 April 1996. The common visa list is a list of countries to which a visa regime will be applied by all member states. Visas will remain national documents issued according to nationally determined criteria.

South Yorkshire Fire Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amendment is necessary to the Fire Services Act 1947 to enable South Yorkshire fire service to receive funding for a dedicated rescue vehicle; and if he will make a statement. [40002]

Mr. Kirkhope: Under section 1 of the Fire Services Act 1947 a fire authority has a duty to make provision for fire fighting purposes and, in particular, to secure the services of a fire brigade and equipment in order to meet efficiently all normal requirements. Section 3(1)(e) of the Act gives the fire authority discretionary powers to employ its brigade and use its equipment for purposes other than fire fighting. Fire authorities have been able to provide such services from within their existing resources.

Bail Hostels, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostel places currently exist in South Yorkshire for (a) men and (b) women; and what was the figure for 12 months ago. [39564]

Mr. Kirkhope: There are currently 106 approved hostel places available in South Yorkshire for either men or women, and seven places designated for female residents only. In September 1994, there were 112 places available for either men or women, and five places designated for female residents only.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by location the number of places available in bail hostels in the county of South Yorkshire, at the latest available date and what were the figures 12 months ago. [39459]

Mr. Kirkhope: In September 1994 and September 1995, the number of places available in each of the South Yorkshire hostels was as follows:

	September 1994	September 1995
Norfolk Park (Sheffield)	39	39
Rookwood (Rotherham)	39	39
Town Moor (Doncaster)	39	35

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by location the occupancy rate for the hostels in the county of South Yorkshire at the latest available date; and what the figures were 12 months ago. [39460]

Mr. Kirkhope: In September 1994 and September 1995, the occupancy rate at each of the South Yorkshire hostels, as a percentage of funded beds, was as follows:

Percentage

	September 1994	September 1995
Norfolk Park (Sheffield)	89	87
Rookwood (Rotherham)	88	91
Town Moor (Doncaster)	80	86

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1 September checks have been made on alarm systems and security cameras at Doncaster prison; what are his Department's guidelines; and if he will make a statement. [39546]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking on how many occasions since 1 September checks have been made on alarm systems and security cameras at Doncaster prison; what are his Department's guidelines; and if he will make a statement.

Premier Prison Services, the contractor which operates Doncaster prison, is required by the terms of its contract to ensure that alarm systems and security cameras are regularly checked for effectiveness. Repairs, when required, have to be completed within twelve hours. The on site Prison Service Controller monitors these systems continually to ensure proper operation.

For security reasons it is not usual practice to make public the details of the guidelines.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners at Doncaster prison are currently on rule 43. [39550]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many prisoners at Doncaster prison are currently on Rule 43.

On 23 October the following number of prisoners were on Rule 43.

	Adult	Young Offender
Segregated under Rule 43/own protection	5	4
Segregated under Rule 43/good order and discipline	18	16

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates, of what grade and on what dates have (a) escaped or (b) attempted to escape from Doncaster prison since it was opened. [39513]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many inmates, of what grade and on what dates have escaped or attempted to escape from Doncaster prison since it was opened.

On 10 August 1994 one remand prisoner changed places with his visitor and left the prison through the visitors' entrance. He was recaptured the same evening. There have been no other escapes or attempted escapes from Doncaster since it opened on 20 June 1994.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the latest figure of the number of assaults on prisoners at Doncaster prison; [39552]

(2) what is the latest figure of the number of assaults on custody officers at Doncaster prison. [39553]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions asking for the latest figures of the number of assaults on prisoners and on custody officers at Doncaster prison.

Figures for 1994 were published in Table 13 of "Statistics or offences against prison discipline and punishments, England and Wales" (Cm.2934) a copy of which is available in the Library of, the House.

The latest available provisional information is for assaults proved at adjudication during January to September 1995 when there were 113 assaults on prisoners and 61 on staff and others.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the incidents at (a) Doncaster and (b) Ford prisons notified to his Department in the last year, indicating the date, type and outcome of each incident. [39498]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking about incidents at (a) Doncaster and (b) Ford prisons notified in the last year, indicating the date, type and outcome of each incident.

Incidents reported to Prison Service headquarters from 1 January to 30 September 1995 are given in the attached table. These incidents are reported for data collection purposes. There is no central record of the outcome of all the incidents.

Type of incident	HMP Doncaster	HMP Ford

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those prisoners requiring immediate transfer from Doncaster prison during the last 12 months (a) had self-inflicted injuries and (b) had injuries received as a result of assault from other prisoners. [39549]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many of those prisoners requiring immediate transfer from Doncaster prison during the last 12 months, had self-inflicted injuries, and had injuries received as a result of assault from other prisoners.

Two prisoners have required immediate transfer from Doncaster to outside hospital, between 1 October 1994 and 25 October 1995. One was for reasons of self-harm and one as a result of an assault by another prisoner.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by grade, the number of inmates being held in Doncaster prison on the first day of each month for the last 12 months. [39003]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if he will list, by grade, the number of inmates being held in Doncaster on the first day of each month for the last 12 months.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contact (a) the Health and Safety Executive, (b) the Environmental Health Office and (c) the fire service has had with Doncaster prison since it was opened; how many inspections of the prison have been made by each of these bodies; and what the findings were in each case. [38964]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about contacts between the Health and Safety Executive, the Environmental Health Office, the Fire Service and Doncaster prison.

The Health and Safety Executive examined the alarm systems at Doncaster twice. They considered that the systems were adequate.

The local Environmental Health Officer visited on 3 August His report is still awaited.

Doncaster has been inspected by the Home Office Fire and Safety Section on several occasions.

The local fire brigade has visited Doncaster prison on 13 occasions.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases staff shortages at Doncaster prison have been the reason for the non-production of prisoners in court in the past 12 months. [39053]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about cases in which staff shortages at Doncaster prison have been the reasons for the non-production of prisoners in court in the past 12 months.

There have been no cases of non-production in court as a result of staff shortages at Doncaster.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff at Doncaster prison have (a) resigned or (b) been dismissed since the prison opened. [39002]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many staff at Doncaster prison have resigned or have been dismissed since the prison opened.

Doncaster prison opened on 20 June 1994. 629 staff have been recruited in all grades at Doncaster. 127 have since resigned and 12 members of staff have been dismissed. 14 of the staff resigned to take up posts in establishments in the public sector.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been paid by his Department for loss, destruction, or damage to Doncaster prison since it was opened; and if he will indicate the circumstances and amount of each separate payment. [38962]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arranged for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how much money has been paid by his Department for loss, destruction or damage to Doncaster prison since the prison opened and if he will indicate the circumstances and amount of each separate payment.

No payments have been made in respect of loss, destruction or damage to Doncaster since it opened.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) staff and (b) people applying to become staff at Doncaster prison since it was opened have been refused Home Office certification as fit to perform such duties, and of these, how many have later reapplied and received such certification. [39021]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about unsuccessful applications for certification to work at Doncaster prison.

Twenty one people have been refused certification as prisoner custody officers to perform custodial duties at Doncaster prison. None of them was employed at the prison following its opening in June 1994 or subsequently reapplied for certification.

Director General of the Prison Service

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria have been used in the past to assess the size of the Director General of the Prison Service's performance-related bonus. [39602]

Miss Widdecombe: The former Director General was eligible for payment of a performance bonus of up to 35 per cent. of his basic salary. The amount payable was assessed on the basis of both qualitative and quantative measures reflecting performance against the Prison Service's key targets as set out in the agency's corporate and business plans.

Ms Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of the financial settlement for the ex-Director General of the Prison Service. [39604]

Miss Widdecombe: The former Director General has issued a writ claiming compensation. The matter is being dealt with by the Treasury Solicitor on behalf of the Home Office.

Fire Services, Wales

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the fire services in Wales. [39584]

Mr. Kirkhope: The long-standing proposal to establish three brigades in Wales following local government reorganisation from next April is based on clear and unequivocal professional advice from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services and from the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers' Association. After careful consideration of the comments made during the recently completed consultation process, the Government intend to proceed with a three-brigade structure from next April.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from local authorities in Wales and other bodies, concerning the future structure of local government and consequent implementation in the organisation of the fire service; and if he will make a statement. [38984]

Mr. Kirkhope: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from local authority interests and others about the brigade structure in Wales, including comments on draft combination schemes from the constituent authorities of each proposed combined fire authority and the existing county fire authorities. The proposal to establish three brigades was based on clear and unequivocal professional advice from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services and from the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers' Association. After careful consideration of the position in the light of the above representations and comments, the Government intend to proceed with a three brigade structure for the fire service in Wales from next April. The draft combination scheme orders were laid in Parliament on 24 October.

Television Licence Fee

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently serving sentences in British prisons for non-payment of the television licence fee. [39739]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Directory General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mrs. Anne Campbell, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many people are currently serving sentences in British prisons for non-payment of the television licence fee.

The latest available information is for 30 September 1995. On that date there were four people in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for non-payment of a fine imposed for using a television without a licence.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were serving a prison sentence for the non-payment of a television licence fee as at 10 October. [39754]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many people were serving a prison sentence for the non-payment of a television licence fee as at 10 October.

The latest available information is for 30 September 1995. On that date there were four people in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for non-payment of a fine imposed for using a television without a licence.

Drugs Rehabilitation Services

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the detailed arrangements for drugs rehabilitation services which have been put in place in the mandatory drugs testing prisons in England and Wales; and what measurements of efficiency are being made. [39811]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. Richard Tilt to Mr. Tim Rathbone, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on the arrangements for drugs rehabilitation services which have been put in place in the mandatory drugs testing prisons in England and Wales; and what measurements of efficiency are being made.

By the end of the year all prisons will have developed a local drugs strategy which will include arrangements to identify individuals with drug problems and the provision of treatment, counselling and support. The strategy will include a timed implementation plan with performance measures and monitoring arrangements. The local strategy will form part of a prison governor's contract with his/her area manager and will be subject to audit.

In addition, the Prison Service is substantially expanding the number and type of drug treatment programmes and services. The first phase of expansion involves 13 pilot projects spread over 22 establishments. The projects include therapeutic communities, dedicated treatment units, detoxification, education, counselling and throughcare. We aim to have let the contracts for all these projects by the end of the year. They will be subject to independent evaluation over an 18 month period and the results will inform the future provision of drug treatment programmes throughout the Service. Proposals for 29 establishments to be included in the second phase of the pilot drug treatment programmes have been received and will be implemented during 1996.

Mandatory drug testing (MDT) is being introduced to all establishments in a rolling programme which will be completed by the end of March 1996. All prisons introducing MDT are required first to send staff to attend a Prison Service drugs strategy course and to develop supportive responses to those prisoners who test positive. An evaluation programme to examine the longer-term impact of MDT has already been established.

Mock Air Attacks on Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions or guidance have been issued to prison governors since 27 September 1994 concerning the employment of mock attacks by low flying military jets in an attempt to resolve prison incidents. [38122]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what instructions have been issued to prison governors since 27 September 1994 concerning the employment of mock attacks by low flying military jets to resolve prison incidents.

No instructions have been issued with regard to incidents in prisons.

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to ensure that the company running Blakenhurst prison in Birmingham recognises trade unions. [38083]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. John McAllion, dated 30 October 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about trade union recognition at Blakenhurst prison.

Whether or not a trade union is recognised at a contracted out prison is a matter for the contractor. The contractor at Blakenhurst prison, United Kingdom Detention Services, has decided not to recognise a trade union to represent staff.

There is a staff consultative committee at Blakenhurst which enables staff representatives to meet with senior managers on a regular and formal basis.

DEFENCE

Procurement Fraud

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the level of reported fraud in his Department in each year since 1990, including all forms of procurement fraud, including those perpetrated by contractors involving corruption of officials by contracts and collusion between officials and contractors; how many officials have been disciplined or dismissed for involvement in these cases; how many officials involved in these cases remain employed by the Ministry of Defence or other Government Departments and agencies; and if he will make a statement. [39158]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The level of reported non-procurement fraud and theft since 1990 is as follows:

1990–91: 53 cases
1991–92: 45 cases
1992–93: 54 cases
1993–94: 108 cases
1994–95: 207 cases

The figures for officials, including service personnel, disciplined or dismissed for non-procurement fraud and theft are as follows:

1990–91: 104 disciplined and/or dismissed
1991–92: 51 disciplined and/or dismissed
1992–93: 55 disciplined and/or dismissed
1993–94: 85 disciplined and/or dismissed
1994–95: 124 disciplined and/or dismissed

The level of reported procurement fraud including corruption and collusion is as follows:

1990–91: 23 cases
1991–92: 18 cases
1992–93: 27 cases
1993–94: 7 cases
1994–95: 10 cases

Three officials were convicted in this period for procurement crimes involving corruption and collusion. Each of them retired at the time or before investigations and prosecution commenced. None of the three is presently employed by another Government Department or agency.

Trident

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the cost savings that could be made over the next 25 years from the immediate cancellation of the Trident nuclear programme. [39245]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government remain committed to the Trident programme. It follows that no detailed assessment has been made of the financial consequences of its cancellation. At this stage of procurement, the chief saving that would accrue from cancellation would be the operating costs, currently estimated to be some £6 billion over the life of the programme.

Trident remains the most effective means of providing a credible deterrent into the next century. No other use of the resources to be spent on Trident, such as an increase in our conventional forces, could contribute so significantly to deterrence.

RAF Machrihanish

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the purpose, and the cost, of upgrading RAF Machrihanish in each year since 1990. [39044]

Mr. Soames: Information on the cost of upgrading is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Since 1990, however, about £56 million has been spent on capital projects at RAF Machrihanish to provide and maintain the level of infrastructure necessary at a NATO forward operating base. The majority of this expenditure was funded by NATO.

National Radiological Protection Board

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions or advice his Department has given to the National Radiological Protection Board regarding the storage and safekeeping of records, including computerised data, which arose from or related to its study into the effects of radiation on the veterans of British nuclear tests; what instructions he has issued to have parts of this information destroyed; and if he will make a statement. [39212]

Mr. Soames: None. The NRPB is, however, proposing to cease to maintain its database on the incidence of death and cancer among veterans of the British nuclear test programme. The existing data will continue to be stored but may be retained in a paper-based or equivalent format.

Uranium Stocks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the amounts of uranium stocked at (a) Chapelcross, (b) Dounreay and (c) Sellafield. [39013]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It would not be in the national interest to make public details of fissile materials, such as uranium, associated with the defence programme.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by date and location for the last 12 months the low flying monitoring that has been carried out by the RAF Skyguard radars; and what were the results on each occasion. [39529]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) of 19 October 1995, Official Report, column 344. No breaches of military low flying regulations were detected during the deployments conducted between 1 November 1994 and 20 October 1995, although the results of the Huntingdon deployment between 17 and 20 October 1995 are provisional until the radar and video tapes have been analysed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the operational range of the RAF Skyguard radars; and if he will make a statement. [39527]

Mr. Soames: The maximum range of the Skyguard radar in the search mode is approximately 20 km and in the tracking mode, 15 km. However, effective ranges will vary according to the nature of the terrain in which the radar is operating.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by date and location for the last 12 months the low flying monitoring that has been carried out by the RAF Skyguard radar in the electronic warfare training at Royal Air Force, Spadeadam; and what were the results on each occasion. [39528]

Mr. Soames: The Skyguard radar has not been used to monitor military flying at low level within the electronic warfare tactics range at RAF Spadeadam during the past 12 months.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the designation of each unit that currently operates the Royal Air Force Skyguard radar. [39526]

Mr. Soames: The RAF Skyguard radars are operated by RAF Spadeadam personnel when operating in the electronic warfare threat role and by RAF Spadeadam and RAF police flying complaints flight personnel when monitoring military low flying.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Skyguard radars are in operational service with the Royal Air Force; and if he will make a statement. [39530]

Mr. Soames: There are two Skyguard radars in operational service with the Royal Air Force and one in-use reserve.

Military Corrective Training Centre (Colchester)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he last visited the military corrective training centre at Colchester; [39491]

(2) at what dates during the past 12 months his Ministers have visited the military corrective training centre at Colchester. [39488]

Mr. Soames: I visited the centre on 21 June 1995.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current types of offences committed for which prisoners at the military corrective training centre at Colchester are convicted; and if he will make a statement. [39505]

Mr. Soames: The following list gives details of offences for the current detainees being held at MCTC: Absent without leave and desertion; drug offences; violence; indecency with children; dishonesty; criminal damage and other military offences.

Lockheed U-2R Missions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by date, for the last 48 months, and by airfield the number of Lockheed U-2R aircraft missions that have been made from Royal Air Force stations; if the aircraft missions were (a) arriving or (b) departing from the station; and if he will make a statement. [39533]

Mr. Soames: United States air force U-2R reconnaissance aircraft have conducted a number of missions in support of NATO and UN peacekeeping and humanitarian aid operations from RAF stations. With the closure of RAF Alconbury's runway on 31 March 1995, the U-2Rs were temporarily transferred to RAF Fairford to continue this mission. However, it is not our policy to comment in further detail on operational matters.

Yorkshire Air Museum

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department is taking to preserve the Yorkshire air museum based at Elvington, North Yorkshire after the closure of Royal Air Force, Elvington, with particular reference to the air shows carried out there; and if he will make a statement. [39531]

Mr. Soames: The Yorkshire air museum is a commercial enterprise situated on its own land adjacent to RAF Elvington. The museum is one of a number of civil organisations to whom my Department has licensed casual use of RAF Elvington both before and since its closure in 1992 as a relief landing ground. Subject to former owner obligations, it is therefore planned to dispose of it in the best interests of the taxpayer by offering it for sale on the open market, at which time the Yorkshire air museum and others will have an opportunity to bid for it. It is, however, our intention to continue to make the airfield available for casual use for as long as practicable before sale.

Battle of Britain Memorial Flight

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decision he has come to in respect of the future of the battle of Britain memorial flight with particular reference to (a) its composition, (b) its activities and (c) its cost; and if he will make a statement. [39503]

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to change the composition or activities of the battle of Britain memorial flight, which will continue to be one of the most celebrated display assets of the Royal Air Force. A review of the current charges for air display assets generally is about to be undertaken, together with a study into the possibility of sponsorship for the BBMF.

Captain Chris Kelly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to make a statement on the circumstances of the death of Captain Chris Kelly. [39504]

Mr. Soames: As the board of inquiry into the death of Captain Kelly is on-going it would be inappropriate to make a statement at this time.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by grade the number of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39487]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information on staff numbers and costs for defence agencies is given in the annual report and accounts of each agency, which are laid before the House or placed in the Library of the House, as appropriate.

Former Yugoslavia (Reconnaissance)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by date for the last 48 months the number of Royal Air Force Canberra photo-reconnaissance missions that have been made over former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [39532]

Mr. Soames: It is not our policy to comment on operational matters of this nature.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement in respect of the United Kingdom resuming its nuclear test programme should the United States Government cease their moratorium on nuclear testing. [39574]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Her Majesty's Government have no plans to carry out further nuclear weapon test explosions and we hope to see the negotiations on a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty successfully completed in the first half of 1996. We have no reason to believe that the United States will abandon its moratorium before then.

Royal Naval College, Dartmouth

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 16 October, Official Report, column 36, if he will make a statement outlining the procedure enabling students at the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, to train for the management and operation of diesel powered submarines. [39959]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency, NRTA, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. D. Ferguson to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 30 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked the Chief Executive of the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency (NRTA) to reply to your Parliamentary Question, pursuant to the Answer given on 6 October, about the procedures that enable students at the Britannia Royal Naval College, Dartmouth to train for the management and operation of diesel powered submarines. I am replying on behalf of the Chief Executive who is away.

You will wish to be aware that the Britannia Royal Naval College at Dartmouth, which is part of the NRTA, provides initial training to newly entered Royal Naval Officers (as part of the Naval General Training syllabus) and to International students from Foreign and Commonwealth navies. The NRTA does not, however, provide training in support of the management and operation of diesel powered submarines, since such submarines are no longer in operational use by the Royal Navy.

Operation Deliberate Force

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many targets were hit by RAF missions during Operation Deliberate Force. [40019]

Mr. Soames: Twenty-two were hit by RAF aircraft during Operation Deliberate Force.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many munitions and bombs were dropped by the RAF during Operation Deliberate Force. [40021]

Mr. Soames: Forty-eight laser-guided bombs and 30 1,000 lb freefall bombs were dropped by RAF aircraft during Operation Deliberate Force.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost so far to the United Kingdom of Operation Deliberate Force. [40020]

Mr. Soames: The additional costs to the United Kingdom of Operation Deliberate Force are not separately identifiable from the costs arising from Operation Deny Flight, which are estimated to be some £31 million in 1995–96.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many missions were flown by RAF aircraft during Operation Deliberate Force. [40018]

Mr. Soames: RAF aircraft flew 268 missions during Operation Deliberate Force.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimates of collateral damage and the number of Bosnian Serb casualties during Operation Deliberate Force as a result of (a) NATO and (b) British action. [40022]

Mr. Soames: This information is not available though there is no evidence that Operation Deliberate Force caused significant civilian casualties or other collateral damage. In selecting targets, UN and NATO commanders paid careful attention to minimising such risks.

Mount Igman

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 24 October, and to his letter of 17 August, what considerations led him to suggest that a non-governmental organisation's aid convoy over Mount Igman could jeopardise an agreement between the UN and the Bosnian Serb army. [40174]

Mr. Soames: The hon. Member was strongly urged to seek the advice of UNPROFOR and the UNHCR on the choice of aid routes to Sarajevo. At the time in question, their advice was firmly against the use of the Mount Igman route in the light of the agreement which the UN had secured with the Bosnian Serbs on the use of the Kiseljak road as the main aid route.

Married Quarters (Discounts)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discounts are offered on the sale of surplus married quarters; what is the basis of such discounts; and if such discounts can be offered in respect of properties other than the properties in which the claimer of the discount resides. [40491]

Mr. Soames: A discount of 30 per cent. is given under the discounted married quarters sales scheme. The 30 per cent discount has a five-year property retention condition, as stipulated by the Inland Revenue, which was based on local authority "right to buy", at the time of the scheme's inception. The married quarters offered for sale in the scheme are surplus, and, as such, would not normally be occupied by the applicant, and are regularly advertised to the three services.

Gulf War Fatalities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his most recent estimation of the total number of fatalities suffered in the Gulf war by (a) coalition forces and (b) the Iraqis. [39826]

Mr. Soames: Coalition forces suffered the loss of 223 personnel killed in action in the Gulf war.

No reliable figures are available for Iraqi casualties.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls (Orford Ness)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the responsibility for, and the cost of, removing transformers containing polychlorinated biphenyls buried in his Department's land at Orford Ness in Suffolk. [40192]

Mr. Soames: My Department no longer owns any land at Orford Ness; the site was sold to the National Trust in March 1993. The National Trust is in the process of removing the contamination, and discussions are taking place between the trust, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, which is an adjacent landowner, and the Ministry of Defence to determine how the work should be funded.

Bosnia (Rents)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the amounts of rent paid for each of the military facilities used by British troops in Bosnia and in total. [40398]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not available as the United Nations pays the rent for the military facilities used by British troops in Bosnia.

Regimental Museums

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the name and location of each regimental museum in the United Kingdom. [40399]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is contained in the tables:

Exercise Co-operative Nugget 95

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British personnel were involved in Co-operative Nugget 95 in Louisiana, USA; and if he will make a statement. [37797]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 19 October 1995]: A total of 97 British personnel—five officers and 92 soldiers—were involved in Exercise Co-operative Nugget 95, a NATO sponsored partnership for peace exercise.

Queen's University Air Squadron, Belfast

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the annual cost of the university air squadron at Queen's university, Belfast; and what percentage it represents of the total annual cost of all the university air squadrons in the United Kingdom. [39351]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 25 October 1995]: The estimated annual cost of Queen's university air squadron for the financial year 1995–96 is £957,000, which represents 9.3 per cent. of the total estimated annual cost of the 16 university air squadrons.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (i) misappropriated in such frauds and (ii) subsequently recovered. [39139]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The number of reported non-procurement frauds and thefts committed by Ministry of Defence employees, including defence agencies, during each of the years 1991–92 to 1994–95 is as follows:

1991–92: 45 cases
1992–93: 54 cases
1993–94: 108 cases
1994–95: 207 cases

There were no reported frauds and thefts committed by staff working in non-departmental public bodies during the period in question.

The estimated sums misappropriated and the sums recovered in each of the years 1991–92 to 1994–95 are as follows:

	Misappropriated £	Recovered £
1991–92	63,000	22,492
1992–93	205,000	37,816
1993–94	571,000	74,725
1994–95	1,095,584	128,722

With regard to procurement fraud, including corruption and collusion, the numbers of cases recorded over the years in question were as follows:

1991–92: 18 cases
1992–93: 27 cases
1993–94: 7 cases
1994–95: 10 cases

Only three of these involved the conviction of Ministry of Defence employees for corruption and collusion.

The estimated amounts misappropriated against procurement fraud for the years in question were as follows:

1991–92: £150,000 fraud by a subcontractor—no eventual loss to MOD.

1992–93: £20,000 advance payment fraud involving no ultimate loss to MOD.

1993-94: £1,511,500 mainly corruption. Recovery action in hand.

1994-95: Actual values of loss to MOD to be identified when cases come to fruition.

French Nuclear Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received or he expects to receive from the French Government on the current nuclear tests at Muroroa atoll; and to what use he expects to put such information. [39823]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 24 October 1995, Official Report, column 587.

BMARC

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of his Department's police in the BMARC case. [40100]

Mr. Soames: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton on 4 July 1995, Official Report, column 178.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds the documents and diaries of Mr. Gerald James were taken by the Ministry of Defence police; if he will make a statement on he relevance of their contents to his Department's investigations; and when they will all be returned to Mr. James. [40101]

Mr. Soames: As part of a wide-ranging MOD police corruption investigation involving the Astra group of companies, a number of documents were seized. All documents seized during those inquiries were considered company documents and were relevant to the inquiry. All documents taken from the Astra group of companies, belonging to those companies, have now been returned to the company liquidators.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has had with BMARC since 1979. [40102]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Records covering the period since the financial year 1989-90 show that the Ministry of Defence placed the following contracts with BMARC:

1989-90: approximately 30 contracts valued £6.2 million.

1990-91: approximately 30 contracts valued £5.5 million.

1991-92 approximately 15 contracts valued £4.5 million.

1992-93 fewer than five contracts valued £1.7 million.

Information for the period before 1989-90 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Manufacturer and Research Co. Ltd. went into administrative receivership in April 1992, and since 1992-93 no contracts have been placed with it.

RB44 Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's RB44 light vehicles are roadworthy; and when they became so. [40396]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A modification programme to render the Reynolds Boughton RB44 heavy utility truck roadworthy was initiated on 2 October 1995, with approximately 50 vehicles being modified each week. To date, 136 vehicles have been modified and are thus considered roadworthy.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on servicing the RB44 light vehicles since purchasing them; and by whom the servicing of his Department's RB44 light vehicles is conducted. [40397]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Servicing of the RB44 heavy utility truck is conducted by military or civilian maintenance personnel or under contract by commercial companies.

Information on the cost of servicing the vehicles is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Greenham Common

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the circulation list of organisations notified by his Department in respect of the notice of the closure of Greenham Common air base. [39119]

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

Following the announcement on 30 January 1992 by the US Government of their intention to withdraw from Greenham Common air base, and subsequent correspondence and discussions with the then Member for Newbury, the then Minister for the Armed Forces, my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Sir A. Hamilton) notified the House on 9 February 1993, that the majority of the site was surpluse to requirments and would be disposed of. In accordance with normal practice, letters to this effect were concurrently sent to the chief executives of Berkshire county and Newbury district councils.

Defence-related Jobs

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of (a) defence and (b) defence-related jobs in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole; and if he will make a statement. [41973]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have been asked to reply.

For Scotland as a whole, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 October 1995, Official Report, columns 32-33. For Strathclyde, my Department currently has some 5,100 service and 6,200 civilan personnel based there. A breakdown by Scottish region of jobs in the defence industry is not available.

WALES

Primary Schools

11. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent per pupil in primary schools in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the figure for 1978-79, at constant prices. [37839]

Mr. Richards: The latest figures available are for 1992–93: the amount spent per pupil in primary and nursery schools in that year was £1,657, at 1993–94 prices. This compares to £1,086 in 1979–80, the earliest period for which figures are available. This is an increase of 52.5 per cent. in real terms—a fact that the Labour party seems incapable of recognising.

Planning Policy Guidance

12. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has held regarding incorporation of the Department of the Environment's PPG13 into Welsh planning law and practice; and if he will make a statement. [37840]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is incorporated in the new draft planning policy guidance for Wales which was issued for public consultation in July.

Polluted Land

13. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to update the 1988 register of polluted land in Wales. [37841]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None—the Environment Act 1995 requires local authorities to survey their areas for contaminated land.

Job Prospects

14. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to improve job prospects in (a) Blaenau Gwent and (b) Wales. [37843]

Mr. Richards: The Government have created the right conditions for the economy to grow. Output is up and unemployment continues to fall. This shows the success of our policies throughout Wales. In addition, we do not propose to establish an Assembly in Cardiff which would interfere with and damage the Welsh economy. I trust that the hon. Gentleman supports our policy-which is in the best interests of his constituents.

Unemployment

15. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current level of unemployment in (a) Wales and (b) the United Kingdom. [37844]

Mr. Hague: In September 1995, the seasonally adjusted number of persons on the claimant count in Wales was 106,300 or 8.2 per cent. of the work force. Corresponding figures for the United Kingdom were 2,265,100 and 8.1 per cent.

School Rolls

16. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current rolls of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools, including special schools; how many teachers there are in each sector; what were the equivalent figures in May 1979; and if he will make a statement. [37845]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available in respect of May 1979. The following table shows data for January in 1979 and 1995.

	At January 1979	1995 (provisional)
Primary schools
Full and part-time pupils on roll	303,396	289,206
Full-time equivalent teachers	13,581	12,404
Secondary schools
Full and part-time pupils on roll	241,661	197,897
Full-time equivalent teachers	14,413	12,288
Special schools
Full and part-time pupils on roll	4,739[1]	3,607[1]
Full-time equivalent teachers	634	546

[1] Full-time pupils and teachers only.

Schools Census.

Health Funding

17. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with representatives of the health authorities in Wales concerning funding for 1996–97. [37846]

Mr. Richards: NHS funding, including the prospects for 1996–97, were discussed at a meeting held by my right hon. Friend with health authority chairmen on 18 October.

Town and City Centres

18. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to strengthen development control requirements in order to protect the viability of town and city centres in Wales. [37847]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This issue is covered in the draft of the new comprehensive planning policy guidance for Wales, comments on which are now being considered.

European Funding

19. Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the transparent additionality of funds sought from the EC; and if he will make a statement. [37848]

Mr. Hague: Following my recent meeting with Commissioner Wulf-Mathies, the Commission has accepted that European structural funds are properly spent in Wales. As a result, £11.4 million of European regional aid to Wales has been released. The measures taken to improve the transparency of the presentation of grants to public bodies will make it very clear that European funds reach and will continue to reach those communities for which they are intended.

Valleys Initiative

20. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on establishing industrial villages as part of the valleys initiative programme. [37849]

Mr. Hague: On 14 September 1994, my predecessor announced that he was making available £410,000 via Neath borough council, to the Tonmawr 2000 project implementation group to develop the industrial village concept. The money has been used to provide 190 sq m of business units in Tonmawr to meet a growing demand for space from local employers. An extension to the community sports centre is also creating a further five part-time jobs. Progress is being monitored closely.

Wages

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to raise wage levels in Wales. [37850]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have achieved low interest rates, sound public finances and an enterprise culture. These are the foundations of a vigorous and long-lasting recovery and are conducive to higher quality, and therefore better paid, jobs.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what is his calculation of the median wage levels paid in each Welsh parliamentary constituency. [39827]

Mr Jones: The available information is based on sample surveys and cannot provide reliable estimates at this geographical level.

Inward Investment

22. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has formed as to the extent to which inward investment in Wales is related to its current constitutional position in the United Kingdom. [37851]

Mr. Hague: A wide range of factors are considered when inward investors make their investment decisions. Political and economic stability with low interest and inflation rates are major considerations, as are, labour availability and quality, good industrial relations, good communications and a good industrial infrastructure.

Assisted Places Scheme

23. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he intends to initiate with local authorities in Wales prior to any enlargement of the assisted places scheme. [37852]

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend will be giving details in due course on proposals to expand the assisted places scheme in Wales.

Village Shops

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that the proposed business rate relief scheme for village shops will be available for shops in Wales in the near future. [38477]

Mr. Hague: I am considering the case for a business rate relief scheme for village shops in Wales. I will announce my conclusion in my forthcoming rural White Paper.

Medieval Boat, Severn Estuary

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department has given to the archaeologists' attempts to raise a medieval boat hull from the Bedwin sands in the Severn estuary; and if he will make a statement. [39435]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office helped to fund the archaeological excavation of the Magor medieval boat as a joint venture with the National Museums and Galleries of Wales and Laing–GTM, the contractors for the second Severn crossing. The boat was raised from the mud of the Severn estuary in the early morning of Sunday 27 August this year. The Welsh Office contributed £19,428 towards the cost of excavation, with a further £20,239 being spent on recording and dismantling the boat ready for its conservation. A report of the work will also be funded by the Welsh Office.

Llantarnam Bypass

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Llantarnam bypass to be completed. [39586]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The contract completion date for the A4042 Llantarnam bypass in 9 January 1996.

Fire Service Reorganisation

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received regarding the reorganisation of the fire service in Wales. [39578]

Mr. Jones: In the past six months, 12 written representations have been received about the reorganisation of the fire brigades in Wales.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to safeguard the financing of voluntary organisations in Wales after 1 April 1996. [39582]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The White Paper "A Charter for the Future", Cm 2155, emphasised the important role of the voluntary sector. Transition committees were advised to consult voluntary organisations. In preparing their service delivery plans, shadow authorities have been asked to build on existing arrangements and to set out their proposed strategies for working with the voluntary sector. Sections 51 and 54 of the Local Government (Wales) Act 1994 contain safeguards for contracts or agreements which extend beyond 31 March 1996.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39866]

Mr. Hague: My predecessor met the chief executive of Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments twice this year, once in January and once in May. Neither I nor my predecessor has met the chief executives of the Planning Inspectorate and ADAS executive agencies this year.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their costs for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39496]

Mr. Hague: For Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments executive agency, responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executive, Mr. T. J. Cassidy. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

I also have shared responsibility for the Planning Inspectorate and ADAS agencies. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are arranging for replies to be given separately for these agencies.

Letter from T. J. Cassidy to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1995:

As Cadw is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Wales has asked me to write to you direct with respect to Cadw in response to your recent Parliamentary Question about staffing grades, numbers and costs.

The information is provided in the table below in which specialists grades have been assimilated into the equivalent administrative grade:

Grade	1994–95 Actual Number	Cost £	1995–96 Estimate Number	Cost £
Chief Executive	1	64,247	1	70,441
Grade 6	4	171,298	3	155,274
Grade 7	8	298,081	8	318,750

Custodial	39	755,685	46	882,328
Industrial	91	1,056,493	85	1,003,694
Total	244	4,138,757	238	4,150,129

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the second Severn crossing to be completed. [39585]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The administration of the second Severn crossing is a matter for the Department of Transport, which advises that the bridge is expected to be open to traffic in mid-1996.

Bridge Repairs

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what estimate he has made of the cost of the repair of bridges in Wales in the current financial year. [39575]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The estimate in respect of trunk roads is £6.8 million. Local authorities are responsible for bridges on non-trunk roads.

Gwent County Hall

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations the residuary body for Wales has received regarding the future use of the headquarters of Gwent county council. [39583]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To date, the residuary body for Wales has received written representations from Monmouthshire county council, Torfaen county borough council and Blaenau Gwent county borough council regarding the future use of Gwent county hall.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales are currently applying for grant-maintained status. [39593]

Mr. Richards: I am currently considering an application from St. Brigid's school, Denbigh.

Nursery Education

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the number and (b) percentage of (i) three-year-olds and (ii) four-year-olds attending nursery and primary schools in each of the local education authorities in Wales in each of the last five years. [40104]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is given in the following tables. Figures in the last two tables are revised estimates and not therefore entirely consistent with those given to the hon. Member in my reply of 23 October, Official Report, columns 473–74.

Cardiff Bay

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs have been created by the Cardiff Bay development corporation; and how much private sector money has been involved. [37827]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of £420 million of private sector investment has been attracted to Cardiff bay. This has generated around 10,500 jobs, of which nearly 5,500 are permanent.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the winding up date of the Cardiff Bay development corporation; and what consultations he has had with the relevant local authorities concerning the transfer of its assets and liabilities. [40551]

Mr. Hague: My predecessor informed the House on 7 July 1994, Official Report, column 465, expected to be possible to wind up the Cardiff Bay development corporation by the end of 1999. This remains the position. Consultations with the appropriate unitary local authorities will open after the reorganisation of local government.

Tourism Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his letter of 25 October, if he will list the projects offered grants by the Wales tourist board and the national lottery which could be expected to benefit financially from the terms of his letter. [40550]

Mr. Hague: I have asked the chief executive of the Wales tourist board to write to the hon. Member and I will arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list which areas in Wales have trusts which administer (a) ambulance services only, (b) acute services only, (c) community services only, (d) all three services, (e) ambulance and acute, (f) ambulance and community, (g) community and acute, (h) community and for part of the same area acute as well, (i) acute and for part of the same area community services and (j) other combinations; if he will set up an evaluation of the success or otherwise of those models; and if he will make a statement. [40549]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is as follows:

NHS trusts in Wales generally offer services in the following categories:

Ambulance

Mid Glamorgan Ambulance NHS Trust

North Wales Ambulance NHS Trust

South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust

West Wales Ambulance NHS Trust

Experience of the existing configurations endorses the value of local priorities and consensus determining the development of services.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average class size for primary schools in Wales in January in each local education authority; and what was the actual and percentage change from January 1994 in each Welsh local education authority. [40222]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Barnsley and Doncaster TEC

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many contracts were issued in each financial year since the inception of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC and this year to date, to provide training for people with special needs; [39032]

(2) how many contracts were issued by Barnsely and Doncaster TEC in each of the financial years since its inception to provide training for people with special needs. [39045]

Mr Paice: The information requested is operational information on the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council and the question would be best addressed to the TEC to answer.

Under the terms of the annual funding agreement between the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, the TEC is required to ensure that suitable training will be made available to trainees who have a disability or special training need.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, how much the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC has received from the European social fund in each year since its inception. [39047]

Mr. Paice: This is a matter for individual training and enterprise councils.

Carers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what policies she will pursue to enable carers to undertake employment. [38545]

Mr. Paice: The Government recognise that many carers wish to continue in employment, and we encourage this in a number of ways. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has published a booklet, "Employers and Carers", which has been distributed widely to employers. The booklet sets out a number of practical measures which employers may take to assist carers to remain in work. In addition, we promote generally an efficient and flexible labour market in which a wide range of working patterns are available. Flexibility and variety in working patterns help carers to find work that best suits their domestic responsibilities.

We are making specific provision in the conditions for jobseeker's allowance to enable carers to restrict their availability for employment in line with their caring responsibilities and remain entitled to an allowance. Caring responsibilities will also be taken into account in any consideration of whether a jobseeker has been seeking work actively. Carers who wish to return to the labour market are in most circumstances eligible to join the wide range of programmes available to help unemployment people back to work, from the first day of unemployment.

Hospital Education

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how teaching hours per pupil and teaching standards in hospitals are monitored. [38547]

Mr. Robin Squire: Local education authorities have a duty to make suitable educational provision for pupils who are out of school because of illness or injury. The initial responsibility for monitoring such provision is, therefore, that of the maintaining authority. The inspection of provision made in a hospital school is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked HMCI to write to the hon. Member about the specific points that he has raised.

School Borrowing Approvals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate has been made of the total borrowing approvals if all schools were permitted to borrow against their assets. [40152]

Mr. Robin Squire: No such estimate had been made. Capital expenditure financed by borrowing in respect of local authority property, including LEA–maintained schools, is subject to the provisions of part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and regulations made under that Act.

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will estimate the cost of providing 100 per cent. capital cost to voluntary-aided schools. [40151]

Mrs. Gillan: The central Government grant for approved governors' expenditure at voluntary-aided schools is at present paid at a rate of up to 85 per cent. If all work supported by grant in 1995–96 were to be funded at a rate of 100 per cent. the additional cost would be in excess of £17 million.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy to safeguard the role of local education authorities. [40149]

Mr. Robin Squire: With the introduction of local management of schools and the growth of the grant-maintained sector, the role of LEAs has evolved significantly. I look forward to their continuing to adapt to changing circumstances.

Fire Service

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) representations and (b) complaints she has received concerning the provisions contained in the conditions of employment 15.3.2*(a)* for fire service personnel. [39258]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has not received any such representations or complaints. However, the National Joint Council for Local Authorities Fire Brigades, which represents fire service employers' and employees' organisations, is the body responsible for matters concerning the conditions of service of members of fire brigades.

National Funding Formula

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to introduce a national funding formula. [40150]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is exploring the general implications of funding schools by means of a national formula. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that the introduction of such a formula is not an option for the near future.

Free School Meals

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the entitlement to free school meals in the United Kingdom from 1975 to the latest available date expressed (a) numerically and (b) in percentage terms, indicating the figures for (1) primary school pupils, (2) secondary school pupils and (3) total pupils. [40218]

Mrs. Gillan: Information on the number of pupils known to be eligible for free school meals was collected from maintained schools in England for the first time in January 1993. Information for years since then is shown in the table.

Information on pupils elsewhere in the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and, for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Water Sampling

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the results to date of the water samples that have been taken off the Ayrshire coast and analysed for contamination; and if he will make a statement. [38294]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: As part of its routine monitoring activities the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food undertook water sampling at a number of locations in the North channel earlier this year. The analysis of these samples show that water quality is not impaired.

Controlled Drugs

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers the police currently have to enter commercial premises and private dwellings without permission to further their investigations of drug dealing, including the suspected trading of Temazepam; and if he will make a statement. [39192]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In addition to the power to search premises by virtue of a common law warrant where an offence is suspected, constables have specific powers under section 23 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Section 23(1) confers on constables certain powers to enter premises of persons carrying on business as a producer or supplier of any controlled drug. Section 23(3) enables constables to obtain warrants to enter any premises where it is suspected that certain offences under the Act are being committed.

Gas Bills

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of Scottish Gas to discuss the abolition of standing charges on fuel bills; and if he will make a statement. [39202]

Mr. Kynoch: My right. hon. Friend has no present plans to meet representatives of Scottish Gas. Standing gas charges are a matter for British Gas and the industry regulator, the Office of Gas Supply.

Capital Charges

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was paid from the national health service revenue budget in Scotland to meet capital charges in each of the most recent five year. [38800]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Each year the revenue budget is increased by the total estimated capital charges for NHS bodies in Scotland.

The capital charges allocation for each of the most recent five years is as follows:

Year	Capital Charges Allocation (£000)
1991–92	355,535
1992–93	290,425
1993–94	321,068
1994–95	361,210
1995–96	357,446

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which capital projects in the national health service in Scotland are currently being considered under the private finance initiative; and what is the cost of each individual project. [38801]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All capital schemes are required to explore private finance options. The value of new schemes in progress totals approximately £700 million over the total project lives of these schemes. Major schemes—that is, those with a value of over £5 million—for which private finance options are currently being explored or are in the early stages of business case preparation are:

Hairmyres and Stonehouse NHS Trust (new District General Hospital)	70 million
Law Hospital NHS Trust (new Law Hospital)	120 million
Royal Infirmary, Edinburgh (new RIE)	140 million
Western General Hospital (major upgrade)	60 million
Edinburgh Sick Children's NHS Trust (new A and E/Outpatients)	9 million
Dumfries and Galloway Acute and Maternity NHS Trust (Maternity/Day Care Unit)	7 million
Glasgow Royal Infirmary (Maternity Unit)	24 million
Aberdeen Royal Hospitals (Children's Hospital)	6 million
Tayside Health Board (Forfar Community Hospital)	8 million
Renfrewshire Healthcare (Elderly/Disabled Unit)	8 million
Greater Glasgow Community and Mental Health NHS Trust (Mental Health facility)	7 million
Yorkhill NHS Trust (Theatres development)	7 million
Southern General Hospitals (Care of the Elderly Unit)	8 million
Ayrshire and Arran Community Healthcare (East Ayrshire Community Hospital)	9 million

In addition, there are several hundred other schemes with a value below £5 million which are being considered under the private finance initiative.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much it costs a national health service trust in Scotland to prepare a bid for a capital project under the private finance initiative. [38802]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The costs to each trust in preparing a bid for a capital project varies depending on the size and complexity of the scheme. Estimates indicate that the cost to a trust of bringing a scheme to fruition in terms of preparation and fees varies between 3 per cent. and 5 per cent. of the total capital cost. The majority of these costs would be incurred whether the scheme is publicly funded or funded under the private finance initiative.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the arrangements for reviewing levels of services included in long-term contracts for hospital services which form part of a private finance initiative contract. [38803]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All contracts include proper provision for ensuring that appropriate information and access are available for regular monitoring of the quality and quantity of services delivered under the contract.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the definition of the clinical services which will be exempted from contracts under the private finance initiative in the national health service in Scotland; and if he will list all of the hospital services which may be included in such contracts. [38804]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no centrally defined list of services which should be included in contracts under the private finance initiative.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the timetable for final approval of capital projects currently being considered under the private finance initiative in the national health service in Scotland. [38805]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Each scheme has its own timetable for completion. Final approval for each scheme will be given only after a full business case has been submitted to and approved by the management executive and, in certain cases, Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the State for Scotland which hospital services are included in each of the contracts for capital projects in the national health service in Scotland currently being considered under the private finance initiative; and how long is the duration of the contract in each case. [38806]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for NHS trusts to determine which hospital support services should be included in contracts. Contracts between trusts and the private sector will typically be for a duration of 20 to 25 years, with specified breaks and review periods built in.

Drugs

Mr. McMaster: To ask the State for Scotland how many people have been convicted of crimes related to their involvement in drug dealing at (a) Paisley sheriff court and (b) Renfrew district court in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [39194]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is given in the table. Information for 1994 will become available in November 1995.

Persons with a main charge proved for drugs trafficking offences in Paisley sheriff court and Renfrew district court, 1989–93

	Year
	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Paisley sheriff court	6	8	10	13	32
Renfrew district court	0	0	0	0	0

Carpet Manufacturing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to develop the opportunities for the Scottish carpet manufacturing industry on the international market; and if he will make a statement. [39206]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Office recently launched an export development strategy for Scotland, designed to assist companies based in Scotland achieve greater success in international markets. Within the strategy, textiles is included as one of eight priority sectors for which initiatives and projects are being developed.

School Buses

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further plans he has to review the legislation which governs the operation of school bus services, with particular reference to seat belts, supervision and bus capacity, and if he will make a statement. [39168]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Transport safety matters are primarily the responsibility of the Department of Transport. Following a public consultation earlier this year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport intends to lay this autumn the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations and the Public Service Vehicles (Carrying Capacity) Regulations. These regulations, which will extend to Scotland, will require lap belts to be fitted to all minibuses and coaches when they are being used specifically to transport children under the age of 16 and end the "three for two" concession to public service vehicles whereby three children under the age of 14 may share a double seat when seat belts are fitted. There are no plans to introduce legislation governing the supervision of school children. Arrangements for the supervision of children on school transport is entirely a matter for each education authority to determine.

National Library

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what procedures students have to undertake after 1 October to gain access to the collections in the National library for Scotland; [38889]

(2) what categories of students are to have restricted access to the National library of Scotland after 1 October; and if he will make a statement; [38883]

(3) what procedures students before 1 October had to undertake to gain access to the collections in the National library for Scotland; [38888]

(4) what categories of students were allowed access to the National library for Scotland before 1 October. [38884]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The arrangements for allowing access to the collections of the National library of Scotland are the responsibility of the board of trustees. However, my right hon. Friend is aware that the arrangements for access by students have been modified with effect from 1 October 1995 to take account of the increasing pressures on the accommodation for readers and on the condition of the collections. The reading services provided by the NLS are intended for those engaged in research or reference work using the collections. School pupils, college students and undergraduates at ordinary degree level are not normally admitted, but honours students in their third or later year of studies may apply for admission. These restrictions have been in place for a number of years and remain unchanged.

Before 1 October 1995, eligible honours students could apply for a one-year admission ticket to consult material relevant to a course of studies which was not available elsewhere. Applications had to be countersigned by a professor or lecturer in the appropriate university department. Since 1 October, eligible honours students have been able to apply for short-term admission tickets for access to specific items for a particular research project which are not available elsewhere. Applications have to be countersigned by a nominated senior librarian in the appropriate university library.

These revised arrangements were discussed with and endorsed by the Scottish Confederation of University and Research Libraries which represents all the Scottish university libraries.

Elections (Disabled Access)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much it costs to provide and install temporary ramps for disabled access at polling stations during the most recent (a) general, (b) European, (c) regional council, (d) district council and (e) unitary authority elections in Scotland; what assessment he has made of the costs and benefits over a period of five, 10, 15 and 20 years of providing such ramps on a permanent basis; and if he will make a statement. [39176]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Grants for election equipment are provided as and when required. Equipment is then used at all subsequent elections. The total grants paid for temporary ramps since my right hon. Friend assumed responsibility for returning officers' fees and expenses in August 1991 is £15,316. Details of the installation costs cannot be identified separately from the overall cost of adapting and fitting up buildings at an election. We are awaiting the passage of the Disability Discrimination Bill prior to considering the funding of permanent ramps.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to extend cost centre accounting in the operation of the new unitary authorities, and if he will make a statement. [39198]

Mr. Kynoch: As originally announced in 1992, authorities will be required to set up an internal accounting framework for the professional support services that are to be subject to compulsory competitive tendering: construction and property services, information technology, personnel, legal and finance. The framework will show the full cost of providing these services and will also require authorities to allocate these support costs to front-line services, such as housing, planning, education etcetera, to enable front-line managers to monitor their expenditure in these areas.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the (a) committee and (b) management structure of each new unitary authority and the existing island councils. [39162]

Mr. Kynoch: An interim report, as of September 1995, has been prepared by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. A copy has been placed in the Library.

PACE Youth Theatre Group

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he, or his representative, will visit the PACE youth theatre group based at Paisley arts centre to discuss funding of community arts in Renfrewshire; and if he will make a statement. [39160]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit the PACE youth theatre group. National funding for performing arts projects is the responsibility of the Scottish Arts Council and applications for funding should be addressed to that body.

NHS Hospitals

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each NHS hospital in Scotland which does not have trust status. [39204]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table lists NHS hospitals in Scotland which do not form part of an NHS trust and the health board areas in which they are situated.

Orkney Health Board:
Balfour Hospital, Kirkwall
Eastbank Hospital, Kirkwall
Shetland Health Board:
Gilbert Bain Hospital, Lerwick
Montfield Hospital, Lerwick
Western Isles Health Board:
Daliburgh Hospital, South Uist
Lochmaddy Hospital, North Uist
St. Brendan's Hospital, Barra
Western Isles Hospital, Stornoway
State Hospitals and Special Health Board:
State Hospital Carstairs

Public Bodies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the names of each member and former member of the House of Lords who, since 1979, has been appointed to any quango or other public body for which he has nomination or appointment rights, giving in each case the title of the post, the salary or honorarium payable and the duration of the appointment. [39166]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information covers those bodies sponsored by the Scottish Office and listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". It covers appointments currently held by present members of the House of Lords, excluding appointment as a justice of the peace or member of a children's panel. The following members of the House of Lords hold appointments on Scottish Office bodies:

The Earl of Crawford and Balcarres is chairman of the board of trustees National library of Scotland; he was appointed to the board on 1 January 1986 and his appointment is for life. Lord Cameron of Lochbroom is chairman of the Royal Fine Art Commission for Scotland, with an appointment running from 1 April 1995 to 31 March 2000, and a member of the Scottish Records Advisory Council, with an appointment running from 1 August 1993 to 31 July 1996. Lord Goold is a member of the Scottish Hospital Endowment Research trust; his appointment runs from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1996. Lord Macfarlane of Bearsden is a member of the board of trustees of the National Galleries of Scotland; his appointment runs from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1997.

None of the appointments is salaried or fee paid. Lord Ewing of Kirkford is a non-executive director of the Kirkcaldy Acute Hospitals NHS trust; his appointment runs from 7 January 1994 to 30 November 1997 and his salary is £5,000.

Information for earlier years is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of all former right hon. and hon. Members who since 1979 have been appointed to any non-departmental public body or other public body for which he has nomination or appointment rights, giving in each case the title of the post, the salary or honorarium payable and the duration of the appointment. [39201]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Of those former Members of Parliament who ceased to be Members of the House in 1987 and 1992, one currently holds appointment on a body for which my Department has responsibility. This is Lord Ewing of Kirkford who was appointed as a non-executive director of the Kirkcaldy Acute Hospitals NHS trust on 7 January 1994. He is appointed until 30 November 1997 and his salary is £5,000 per annum. I have also announced the appointment of Mr. Dick Douglas, as chairman designate of the Scottish Water and Sewerage Customers Council. His salary will be £15,000 per annum. The information held centrally by my Department does not show whether appointees were Members of this House during earlier Parliaments nor does it show appointments for earlier years; this could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Heart-lung Transplants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to allowing heart-lung transplants to be carried out in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [39074]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A needs assessment is currently being carried out. This, along with other factors, will help inform our consideration of the case for such a service.

Correspondence

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to reply to a letter dated 17 June from the hon. Member for East Lothian concerning Mrs. J. Mitchell's claim for hill livestock compensatory allowances. [38854]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I regret that the hon. Member has not yet received a substantive reply to his letter, but my noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for agriculture in Scotland intends to write to the hon. Member very soon.

Road Signs

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has for the replacement of existing road signs to include metric distances; [38887]

(2) what plans he has for the introduction of metric distances for all new road signs. [38886]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Fox Hunts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police hours were spent attending fox hunts in each of the past three years; what was the total cost to public funds within the area of each police authority; and if he will make a statement. [39219]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Students

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he received the Scottish Association of Citizen's Advice Bureau report entitled "Poverty by Degrees: Students—The Evidence of Citizens Advice Bureau clients in Scotland"; and what he intends to do to rectify the deficiencies identified in it. [39237]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I received a copy of the report shortly after its publication in September. I am always pleased to have information on the operation of the student support system, although the sample in this case was not necessarily typical.

As part of our commitment to monitor student finance we have recently commissioned a new, United Kingdom-wide student income and expenditure survey. It will provide up-to-date, comprehensive, and authoritative evidence on the picture throughout the UK. The survey will be carried out in spring 1966 and the results published later in the year.

Burns Bicentenary

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of preparations for the commemoration of the Burns bicentenary in 1996, with particular reference to the scale and scope of projects and involvement of the communities and schools in events. [39157]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The programme for the Burns international festival, including details of a number of community and schools events, is expected to be published by the organisers, Burns Festival Ltd., in November. The Scottish Office has no information about any plans which local authorities or other local organisations may have for commemorating the anniversary.

Absent Voting

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures will be put in place prior to the general election to ensure that those entitled to postal and proxy votes are made aware of their rights as soon as possible by means of public advertising; and if he will make a statement. [39169]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Arrangements have yet to be finalised for absent voting publicity, but it is proposed, following past practice, to advertise in all the Scottish national daily and Sunday newspapers, and to provide leaflets for the general public through various suitable outlets.

Scotland Europa

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the work of Scotland Europa Ltd; and what criteria he applies to measure the success of this body. [39223]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I met recently with the chief executive of Scotland Europa to hear of its work and plans for the future. The subscribers to Scotland Europa's services come from a wide range of interests, including business, educational bodies and local authorities, and the numbers are increasing every year. Thus, the body is successful by satisfying its paying customers and increasing their numbers.

Scottish Enterprise recently decided to continue to provide support to Scotland Europa in order to continue the service to Scottish business and organisations. The criteria against which it will judge the body include its success in providing for its customers information and advice on developments in the European Union, assistance in lobbying, help in seeking out other regional partners and participating in appropriate European programmes.

Women's conference

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to implement the commitments made in Beijing at the United Nations fourth world conference on women; and what resources have been allocated to action the platform agreed. [38882]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are committed to ensuring that all Government Departments take full account of the platform for action. Non-governmental organisations have been asked for their views by 1 January 1996. De-briefing meetings, including one in Scotland, will be held with key NGOs shortly and a further meeting to review progress early in 1996. Resources will be allocated from within departmental budgets as appropriate.

Caravan Storage Facilities

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the (a) need and (b) supply of caravan storage facilities in each Scottish district; and if he will make a statement. [39199]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. There is no statutory requirement upon either the Secretary of State or local authorities to ensure provision of caravan storage facilities.

Telephone Bills

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of British Telecom (Scotland) to discuss the abolition of standing charges on telephone bills; and if he will make a statement. [39205]

Mr. Kynoch: Control of British Telecom's prices is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications.

Local Councillors

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the (a) daily attendance allowance and (b) subsistence allowance for (i) more than four, but less than eight hours, (ii) more than eight, but less than 24 hours, (iii) 24 hours within the United Kingdom, but outside London, (iv) 24 hours in London and (v) approved overseas travel for elected members of Scottish local authorities would be had these kept pace with inflation since 1974 and expressed in real terms at current prices: what would be the annual attendance allowance, excluding subsistence, of an elected member of a Scottish local authority who was eligible to claim a daily attendance allowance for an average of (I) one, (II) two, (III) three, (IV) four, (V) five, (VI) six and (VII) seven official duties per week on different days assuming that the system of payment had remained unchanged since 1974 and based on current prices in real terms. [39167]

Mr. Kynoch: As the information requested is particularly lengthy and complex, I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a signed copy of the letter to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Floods

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds are available from European Community sources to undertake projects aimed at reducing the risk of floods to homes, businesses, including farms and public buildings; which organisations may apply for such funding; and if he will make a statement. [39175]

Mr. Kynoch: I am not aware of any European Community sources of funds specifically for flood prevention. Under the European structural funds support may be available where there is a clear and demonstrable economic benefit to be derived from the project.

Regional and islands councils have powers, under the Flood Prevention (Scotland) Act 1961, to take flood prevention measures to protect non-agricultural land. Works, other than those of maintenance or repair, have to be widely advertised and submitted to the Secretary of State for confirmation. Grants are available from the Scottish Office at a rate of 50 per cent. for confirmed schemes.

Planning Policy Guideline

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce statutory requirements for smaller unitary authorities to be able to employ appropriate archaeological officers in respect of NPPG5; and if he will make a statement. [39059]

Mr. Kynoch: No. My right hon. Friend published national planning policy guideline—NPPG5 "Archaeology and Planning" in January 1994. This, along with the associated planning advice note 42 "Archaeology—The Planning Process and Scheduled Monument Procedures", sets out the planning policy context and guidelines in respect of archaeological remains and discoveries for Scottish local authorities. It is for the authorities themselves to decide how best to meet their responsibilities within the resources available to them.

Further Education College Principals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current salaries of principals of further education colleges and the amount of any increments that have been awarded in each case, with the reasons for such increments (a) in the previous and (b) the current year. [38872]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: It is for individual boards of management to determine the remuneration of principals. Information on their current salaries will not be available centrally until the 1995–96 annual accounts are submitted next year. The remuneration of principals for 1994–95, as shown in the colleges' 1994–95 annual accounts, is as follows:

College	Salary excluding pension contribution 1994–95 £'000

Prescription Charges

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the financial cost of implementing in Scotland the European Court of Justice ruling on prescription charge exemption for men aged 60 years and over (a) in a full financial year and (b) in respect of reimbursement for the three months prior to the judgment; and if he will ensure that this cost is not met from existing NHS budgets. [38970]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The overall cost of equalising the qualifying age for exemption from prescription charges for men and women at 60 is estimated to be around £4.5 million in a full financial year.

Refunds of prescription charges paid in the three months prior to the judgment are unlikely to amount to more than £1.5 million.

Decisions on funding are being taken within the context of the public expenditure survey.

Royal Alexandra Hospital

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the floor space of the Royal Alexandra hospital, Paisley is not currently in use; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for this. [39163]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All floor space in the Royal Alexandra hospital is fully utilised at the present time.

Operation Eagle

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the results of Strathclyde police's Operation Eagle. [39193]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I welcome Operation Eagle, which has successfully targeted all tiers of the drug dealing and user network throughout Strathclyde. To date, the police have made over 4,000 arrests; seized significant quantities of illicit drugs with an estimated street value of around £4.2 million together with almost £400,000 in cash; and recovered 35 firearms and 169 rounds of ammunition during drug searches. The operation is continuing. I look forward to opening Strathclyde police's seminar on 8 December which will be reviewing the final outcome.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the State for Scotland how many farm conservation plans have been approved, since revision, in the Machair of the Uists, Barra and Vatersay environmentally sensitive area. [39838]

Mr Robertson: As at 24 October 1995, 42 crofters have accepted agreements offered under the revised Machair of the Usists, Barra and Vatersay environmentally sensitive area scheme.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the State for Scotland how many farm conservation plans have been approved in the Stewartry environmentally sensitive area, since its revision, involving payments in year one of the plan of (a) £0–£1,000, (b) £1,001–£2,000, (c) £2,001–£3,000, (d) £3,001–£4,000, (e) £4,001–£5,000 and (f) £5,001–£6,000. [39836]

Mr Raymond S. Robertson: As at 24 October 1995, there were 90 approved plans in the revised Stewarty environmentally sensitive area scheme, all of which involve payment in year one. The number of agreements involving tier two payments in year one of the plan is as follows:

	Number
(a) Up to £1,000	4
(b) £1,00—£2,000	5
(c) £2,001—£3,000	4
(d) £3,001—£4,000	0
(e) £4,001—5,000	73
(f) £5,001—£6,000	0

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farm conservation plans have been approved in the Machair of the Uists, Barra and Vatersay environmentally sensitive area, since its revision involving payments under tier two in year one of the plan of (a) £0-£500, (b) £500-£1,000, (c) £1,001-£1,500, and (d) £1,501-£2,000. [39839]

Mr. Robertson: The number of agreements in the revised Machair of the Uists, Barra and Vatersay environmentally sensitive area scheme involving tier two payments in year one of the plan is as follows:

	Number
(a) 0-£500	16
(b) £501-£1,000	10
(c) £1,001-£1,500	4
(d) £1,501-£2,000	16

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring and review arrangements he has established to ensure that the agri-environment programme in Scotland contributes to meeting the objectives of "Biodiversity: the United Kingdom Action Plan", Cm 2418. [39835]

Mr. Robertson: A 10-year contract has been let for monitoring the impact of the environmentally sensitive area scheme. This will cover ecological, archaeological and landscape effects. We intend to extend these arrangements, in due course, to cover the more recently launched elements of the agri-environment programme.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 March, Official Report, column 697, what was the final expenditure on environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland in 1994–95; and on what the remainder of the allocated budget we spent. [39844]

Mr. Robertson: Provisional outturn expenditure on environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland in 1994–95 was £1.044 million. It is not possible to say precisely how the remainder of the provision was used, but the first priority for the use of any savings of this nature would be to meet inescapable demands for additional unplanned agricultural expenditure or any of the other programme areas for which the Secretary of State is responsible.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the expected expenditure for (a) environmentally sensitive areas and (b) other agri-environment schemes in 1995–96. [39752]

Mr. Robertson: Financial provision for (a) environmentally sensitive areas and (b) other agri-environment schemes in 1995–96 is set out in the table.

	Financial provision 1995-96 (£ million)
Environmentally Sensitive Areas	5.5
Other Agri-Environment Schemes	1.697

It is too early to anticipate what expenditure will be incurred.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farm conservation plans have been approved, since designation, in the Cairngorms Straths environmentally sensitive area involving payments under tier two in year one of the plan of (a) up to £1,000, (b) £1,000-£2,000, (c) £2,001-£3,000 and (d) £3,001-£4,000. [39749]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The number of agreements in Cairngorms Straths environmentally sensitive area scheme involving tier two payments in year one of the plan is as follows:

	Number
(a) Up to £1,000	1
(b) £1,001-£2,000	1
(c) £2,001-£3,000	2
(d) £3,001-£4,000	35

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farm conservation plans have been approved, since designation, the Cairngorms Straths environmentally sensitive areas. [39748]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 26 October 1995]: As at 24 October 1995, 37 farmers and crofters have accepted agreements offered under the Cairngorms Straths environmentally sensitive areas scheme.

Prisoners (Closed Visits)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what arrangements are made for prisoners who are restricted to closed visits to have (a) visits from their legal advisers, and (b) consular visits; [38844]

(2) in which prisons there are prisoners restricted to closed visits and what are the numbers of prisoners involved. [39416]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 30 October 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Questions about closed visits for prisoners in Scotland. These concerned (a) the arrangements for prisoners on closed visits to have visits from their legal advisers and consular officials, and (b) in which prisons there are prisoners restricted to closed visits and what are the numbers of prisoners involved.

As for as (a) is concerned, regardless of whether a prisoner is on closed visits, visits from prisoners' legal advisers are held in rooms specifically designated for that purpose. Consular visits are also held in these rooms. Both types of visits, in accordance with Prison Rules, take place within sight, but outwith the hearing, of prison staff.

On the (b) the information as at 25 October is as follows:

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the recent employment of Alan Clark Associates by Greater Glasgow health board, and the procedure adopted by the health board in awarding this contract and the involvement of the board itself and the then chairman in the award of this contract. [39406]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Such information is not held centrally; this is a matter for Greater Glasgow health board.

School Transport

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was spent by his Department for each education authority in Scotland for each financial year since 1987–88 in supporting educational transport; and what were the number of pupils covered by this provision for each local authority, the total number of pupils within each education authority during this period, and the percentage covered by free school transport provision. [39408]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The detailed information requested cannot be provided in the time scale allowed. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as that information has been collated.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes his Department is considering to the guidance currently in force relating to the criteria for school pupils in Scotland to qualify for free transport and the manner in which he funds this transport provision. [39409]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Under current legislation, decisions regarding the provision of school transport are entirely a matter for each education authority. Under sections 50 and 51 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, education authorities have a duty to make such transport arrangements as they consider necessary for the provision of free transport, of transport facilities as may be arranged, and for paying all or part of reasonable travel expenses for school pupils belonging to their area. The Government have no plans to amend this legislation, or to change the manner in which this transport provision is funded.

On 24 May 1995, guidance was issued to the chief executives of the new unitary authorities about the current legislation relating to the provision of school transport as part of detailed guidance on their future education responsibilities from 1 April 1996. There are no plans to add to that guidance.

Ayrshire and Arran Health Board

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangements made by Ayrshire and Arran health board to administer its public relations and communications since 1987, the names of agencies employed by the health board to undertake these duties during this period, the tendering process involved in awarding these contracts and the monetary value of contracts awarded to these agencies. [39410]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Such information is not held centrally; this is a matter for Ayrshire and Arran health board.

Nursing Home Care

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people pay the cost of their nursing home care (a) in full and (b) in part; and how many have their costs entirely met through (i) income support or (ii) their local authority. [40185]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1995]: The total number of nursing home residents with preserved rights to the higher levels of income support was 7,940 at November 1994.

The number of persons admitted on a permanent basis to nursing homes between 1 April 1994 and 31 March 1995 supported in full or in part by local authorities was 4,256.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of (a) doubling and (b) trebling the present £8,000 capital disregard for nursing home fees. [40189]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on Friday 27 October 1995, Official Report, column 853.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people who have had to sell their homes to fund the cost of their long-term stay in (a) residential and (b) nursing homes in each of the last five years. [40177]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1995]: The necessary information on which to base an estimate is not available centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average length of time a person spends in full-time nursing care. [40181]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The information requested is not available. However, the average lengths of stay of inpatients in hospitals in Scotland in 1994–95 are shown in the following table:

	Days
Acute specialties	5.5
Obstetrics	3.3
Long stay specialities	63.8
Psychiatric specialties	104.8
Mental handicap	242.8

During their stay in hospital inpatients will receive full-time nursing care.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to advise the Western Isles health board of a settlement on nurses' pay. [39875]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: I expect to be able to advise all health boards in Scotland of a settlement on nurses pay in early November.

Health Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the status of the Scottish health boards' general managers' group in relation to the Scottish Office. [39397]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The Scottish health boards' general managers' group advises the Scottish Office Department of Health on matters affecting health boards. It provides a forum for two way communication between the Scottish Office and health boards on health service policy and the performance of the NHS in Scotland.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he applied in deciding to allocate additional funding to Grampian health board and to Highland health board from moneys available through an underspend in the previous year's NHS budget in Scotland. [38501]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The additional funding to Grampian health board and Highland health board is part of a £16.3 million allocation to be distributed to all health boards in Scotland on a weighted capitation basis. The boards were notified about the funds in August and formal allocations are expected to issue in November.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what work his Department has so far undertaken to implement the expansion of the assisted places scheme in Scotland; which bodies have been consulted about this, and when he expects to announce further movements on this issue. [39399]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Officials are currently considering possible options for expanding the assisted places scheme in Scotland, in line with our plans to double to around 6,000 the numbers of children whose parents would otherwise be unable to send them to a Scottish independent school.

We are consulting the Scottish Council of Independent Schools about how best to expand the scheme, taking account of the geographic spread. We will, however, seek to ensure that particular priority is given to extending choice and opportunity for the poorest families. We are aiming for the first additional places to be provided in the 1996–97 school session.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children on the assisted places scheme had parents whose relevant family income was (a) below £9,450, (b) between £10,000 and £15,000, (c) between £15,000 and £20,000 and (d) between £20,000 and £24,000 as defined by notes and definitions, section 1.3 of "The Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin, Education series", Ref. No. Edn/C5/1995/9, entitled "The Assisted Places Scheme 1983–84 to 1993–94", in the latest five years for which figures are available. [38878]

Mr. Robertson: The available information is as follows:

School Session	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95

Total	2,861	2,911	3,038	3,045	3,050

[1] Figures from 1992-93 are provisional pending receipt of final audited claims. The numbers of schools with outstanding claims for 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 are one, seven and 48 respectively.

[2] Annual adjustments are made to the income scales on which parental contributions are calculated, including the threshold level at which full fee remission is applicable. The threshold was £8,200 in 1990-91, £8,987 in 1991-92, £9,384 in 1992-93, £9,522 in 1993-94 and £9,616 in 1994-95.

[3] Figures are not collected centrally on the number of pupils whose parents' relevant incomes are between £20,000 and £24,000.

Public Relations and Press Officers

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance his Department has issued to NHS trusts and health boards relating to the employment of public relations and press officers by these bodies. [39405]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: No specific guidance has been issued to NHS trusts and health boards relating to the employment of public relations and press officers.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area in Scotland for each financial year since 1990–91 the numbers of patients registered with a dentist and the total number of patients registered with a dentist in Scotland for each year during this period. [39395]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answers which I gave him on 23 March 1995, Official Report, columns 956-57, and 23 May 1995, column 739.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area in Scotland for each financial year since 1990–91 the number of patients removed by dentists from their treatment and the number of dentists involved in this de-registration. [39396]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: Formal arrangements for patients to be registered with a dentist were introduced in October 1990. Information supplied by health boards about de-registrations since that date is contained in the table.

	October 1990-March 1991		April 1991-March 1992		April 1992-March 1993		April 1993-March 1994		April 1994-March 1995

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what progress has been made by the House of Commons Commission in selecting a candidate for the post of Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards.

Mr. Beith: A report recommending to the House Sir Gordon Downey KCB, formerly Comptroller and Auditor General, is being published at 3.30 pm today as HC789. Copies are available from the Vote Office.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 31 October 1995. [38647]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 31 October. [38467]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Office Costs

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the expenditure on his office broken down into (a) salaries and (b) other costs for each year since 1980–81, in 1994–95 prices. [38823]

The Prime Minister: Figures on a consistent basis are not available. In 1980–81, recorded spending on my office and Chequers on the votes of the Civil Service Department/Cabinet Office was £3.684 million in 1994–95 prices. In 1981–82, charges were introduced for the use of Ministry of Defence aircraft. Including those charges, spending was, at 1994–95 prices, £4,649 million in 1981–82 and £4.852 million in 1982–83. In 1983–84, charges were introduced by the Property Services Agency for buildings and services. Including those charges, spending was, at 1994–95 prices, £5.197 million in 1983–84. In 1984–85, charges were introduced for the use of the Government car service and for service personnel at Chequers. Including those charges, spending was, at 1994–95 prices, £6.193 million in 1984–85 and £6.830 million in 1985–86. In 1986–87, the cost of office services was included in the No. 10 budget. Including those costs, spending since then has been as follows:

£ million

	Total costs 1994–95 prices	Staff	Other
1986–87	7.469	2.513	4.956
1987–88	7.741	2.519	5.222
1988–89	8.777	2.550	6.227
1989–90	9.600	2.703	6.897
1990–91	9.533	2.385	7.148
1991–92	9.450	2.487	6.963
1992–93	10.866	3.043	7.298
1993–94	9.384	3.327	6.057
1994–95[1]	7.671	3.217	4.454

[1] In 1994–95 spending of £0.718 million on communications was transferred from No. 10 budget to the Cabinet Office budget.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Office of Public Service (Costs)

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals there are to change the 1995–96 cash limit and running costs limit for the Office of Public Service. [40940]

Mr. Freeman: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Office of Public Service—class XVIII, vote 1—will be increased by £1 million from £52,713,000 to £53,713,000 and the gross running cost limit will be decreased by £4,019,000 from £82,849,000 to £78,830,000. The changes are to reflect the machinery of government changes announced on 5 July 1995; the Office of Science and Technology being transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry; and the deregulation unit and competitiveness division being transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry—class IV, vote 1. The opportunity has also been taken to take up capital end year flexibility transferred from Her Majesty's Treasury—class XVII, vote 1—due to adjustment in the timing of completion of the pension administration system. Provision is also made for the privatisation expenses of executive agencies. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the overall level of sickness absence in the civil service. [40721]

Mr. Horam: The average number of working days' sickness absence per staff year in 1994 was 9.2, representing a reduction of 9 per cent. over 1993. This is equivalent to 8.4 working days per person, and is comparable with the level for the service sector generally set out in a recent Confederation of British Industry survey of other employers.

I have placed in the House Libraries copies of the report by the Civil Service Occupational Health and Safety Agency on sickness absence in the civil service during 1994, which contains a comprehensive analysis of the figures about the civil service.

Civil Service Statistics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when "Civil Service Statistics 1995" will be published. [40942]

Mr. Horam: "Civil Service Statistics 1995" was published today and copies have been placed in the Library. This publication updates and revises civil service staff numbers for 1 April 1995 and highlights key trends in civil service staffing statistics for the financial year 1994–95. Revised copies of the civil service staff in post summary for 1 April 1995 have also been placed in the Library.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Lord President of the Council for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38606]

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council is not responsible for making any grants.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Gill: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many statutory instruments were laid before Parliament between 16 July and 16 October. [38719]

Mr. Newton: During the period 16 July to 16 October 1995 inclusive, 274 statutory instruments were laid before the House of Commons.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applicants refused asylum have appealed against the refusal to a special adjudicator since 1993; how many such appeals have, to date, been lodged; how many appeals have been upheld; how many appeals have been dismissed; how many appeal hearings are pending; how many special adjudicators have, to date, been appointed; and how many appeal hearings on average are held each week. [40444]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the period July 1993 to September 1995, the immigration appellate authorities received 18,204 asylum appeals from the Home Office and disposed of 7,718. Hearings were pending in approximately 8,400 of the asylum appeals outstanding at the end of September 1995. On average, 260 appeals are listed for hearing each week and approximately 150 are determined or otherwise disposed of. The immigration appellate authorities do not keep statistics on the outcome of asylum appeals. Since July 1993, 25 full-time and 52 part-time special adjudicators have been appointed.

TRANSPORT

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running costs limits; and what proposals there are to change the cash limit and running costs limit of the Office of the Rail Regulator for 1995–96. [40881]

Sir George Young: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(i) The cash limit for class VI vote 1 (Highways Agency) will be increased by £12,295,000 from £1,863,279,000 to £1,875,574,000. The increase in the cash limit includes the take up of £11,831,000 capital end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995 (Official Report columns 776-82) and adjustments in funding relating to the consolidation of the Highways Agency's role between this vote and class VI vote 2 and class VI vote 5. Running costs provision on this vote will increase by £135,000 from £86,889,000 to £87,024,000 reflecting a transfer from class VI vote 2.

(ii) The cash limit for class VI vote 2 (Administration and Transport Services) will be increased by £12,351,000 from £165,054,000 to £177,405,000. The additional provision includes the take up of £776,000 running costs end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995 (Official Report columns 776-82); increases in administrative capital expenditure; the transfer of funds to class VI vote 1 for (£135,000) running costs and professional advisers fees; the transfer of funds to class VI vote 8 for various rail consultancies (£1,960,000; and, the transfer of funds from this vote to class VI vote 5 for road safety publicity expenditure.

(iii) The cash limit for class VI vote 5 (Roads and Local Transport) will be increased by £1,608,000 from £513,157,000 to £514,765,000. The increase includes take up of £1,787,000 end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995 (Official Report columns 776-82); the transfer of receipts currently paid to the consolidated fund for interest on subordinated debts arising from the Severn Bridge to class VI vote 1; and, various transfers of funds between this vote and class VI vote 1; and, class VI vote 2.

(iv) The cash limit for class VI vote 6 (Department of Transport: Other Transport Agencies) will be increased by £1,660,000 from £80,156,000 to £81,816.000. The increase includes the take up of £1,200,000 running costs end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995 (Official Report columns 776-82) for various items of running costs and an increase in administrative capital expenditure.

(v) The cash limit for class VI vote 8 (Office of the Rail Regulator) will be increased by £1,822,000 from £8,629,000 to £10,451,000. The increase includes the take up of capital end year flexibility entitlement of £162,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995 (Official Report column 776-82); a transfer of running costs provision (£1,960,000) from class VI vote 2 to cater for higher than expected expenditure on legal consultancies and the consequential increased levels of VAT receipts (£300,000) that have arisen.

(vi) The Department of Transport Local Authority Capital cash limit has been increased by £6,354,000 from £347,552,000 to £353,906,000. This reflects partial take up of capital end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995 (Official Report column 776-82).

(vii) The Department of Transport running costs limit has been increased by £16,000 from £413,448,000 to £413,464,000 and the Office of the Rail Regulator running costs limit has been increased by £1,660,000 from £8,220,000 to £9,880,000.

The overall increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated financial benefit of the A34 Newbury bypass; and if he will publish the full cost benefit analysis carried out in respect of this road. [38209]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked its chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Cynog Dafis, dated 31 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the financial benefits of the Newbury Bypass. The net present value of the benefits of the scheme, at current prices, range between £124.8 million on low traffic growth assumptions and £285.6 million high traffic growth.

The full cost benefit analysis used to take the scheme through the statutory procedures is a bulky document which is not readily copied. I have therefore enclosed copies of the traffic and economic evidence presented to the 1988 Inquiry which, effectively summaries the full cost benefit analysis. The full cost benefit analysis can of course be made available for inspection if you would like to see it.

I also enclose a copy of the report prepared by the Study Team who as part of the study commission by the then Secretary of State, looked again at the traffic forecasts and the scheme's economic evaluation.

European Rail Services

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his current target date for the start of direct through-rail services on the west coast main line to Brussels and Paris. [39989]

Mr. Watts: European Passenger Services Ltd., which will operate these services, expects them to start in the first half of 1996.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what is his current target date for the start of direct through-rail services on the east coast main line to Brussels and Paris. [39988]

Mr. Watts: European Passenger Services Ltd., which will operate these services, expects them to start in the first half of 1996.

Passenger Transport Executives

Sir Irvine Patrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of people employed by each of the passenger transport executives in the metropolitan counties. [40575]

Mr. Norris: This information is not held by my Department.

Rail Investment

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the capital investment in Britain's railways made annually over each of the past 10 years in real terms excluding capital investment in channel tunnel related infrastructure and rolling stock. [40241]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 6 June 1995, Official Report, column 49.

Unlicensed Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what timetable he has for introducing legislation on the impounding of unlicensed heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [40306]

Mr. Norris: The option of seeking powers for traffic commissioners to order the seizure and impounding and, where necessary, disposal of unlicensed illegally operated heavy goods and passenger vehicles is currently being examined by my Department as part of an assessment of the scale of illegal operations and effective measures for dealing with it.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many times the illegal operations working group has met; what its recommendations are; and if he will make a statement; [40307]

(2) if he will place a copy of the reports of the illegal operations working group in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [40308]

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport's illegal operations working group has met twice and sometimes three times each year since it was established in August 1989. The group monitors the current approach in directing enforcement against illegal operations working within the constraints of existing powers and resources. Its report for 1994–95 described the main aspects of enforcement action directed against illegal HGV operators in 1994. A copy of its report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Repeater Signs

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider that aspect of the Traffic

Signs Regulations and General Directions 1984 which prohibits repeater signs on a road where there is street lighting. [40276]

Mr. Norris: The Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1994 require repeater signs on unlit roads with a 30 mph limit but do not allow them where there are street lights because the presence of street lights is the indication of a built-up area. In the past, repeater signs were allowed in some 30 mph limits, but this caused enforcement difficulties. Some drivers prosecuted for speeding on roads without repeaters claimed that their absence led them to believe that a 30mph limit did not apply. Were we to permit repeaters on some lit 30 mph roads we would have to require them on all. The reality is that although drivers generally know what speed limit applies some choose to ignore it.

Motor Cycle Noise Act 1987

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what accounted for the delay in bringing into operation as from 1 August the Motor Cycle Noise Act 1987. [40482]

Mr. Norris: Regulations under the Motor Cycle Noise Act had initially to be postponed pending the outcome of negotiations on a new European Commission proposal on replacement silencers. The ensuing directive, 89/235/EEC, prompted the British Standards Institute to update BS 193 which was not completed until 1990. These requirements had to be transposed into domestic law before drafting of the regulations to control supply under the Motor Cycle Noise Act could begin. Regulations were laid before Parliament on 14 September 1995 but do not come into force until 1 August 1996 in order to allow stockists sufficient lead time to clear or mark their current stock.

Wing Bypass

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made, following the Wing bypass investigation last year, of the progress by the Highways Authority. [39887]

Mr. Watts: My hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) announced in January last year that progress on the A418 Wing bypass scheme will be subject to the outcome of the A5-M40 study. The 1994 roads programme review placed the scheme in the longer-term category. In the meantime, no further assessment has been made.

Road Improvements (Stonehenge)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation he has recently carried out with (a) the Secretary of State for National Heritage, (b) the chairman of English Heritage, (c) the National Trust and (d) other interested organisations in respect of (i) the A303 and (ii) the A344 and the effect that their upgrading would have on the World Heritage site at Stonehenge; what were the results of his discussions; and if he will make a statement. [40003]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 31 October 1995:

As you know the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question in which you sought information about the A303 Amesbury to Berwick Down improvement scheme.

The Highways Agency have consulted the Department of National Heritage, English Heritage and the National Trust throughout the preparation of this scheme. Recognising the unique sensitivity of the World Heritage Site at Stonehenge, the Agency have arranged a planning conference which will give all interested parties an opportunity to explore and debate possible ways of overcoming the traffic problems on this length of the trunk road. Conferences on other schemes have been successful in identifying a consensus on the major issues and possible ways forward. The Department of National Heritage, English Heritage and the National Trust will be sending delegates to the conference. All other organisations known to have interest in the scheme have been notified of the arrangements for the conference.

An assessment of the possible routes identified thus far is given in Preliminary Assessments Reports which are available to the public. Any of the possible solutions illustrated in the conference brochure would help to reduce the effect of traffic on Stonehenge.

Transport Surveys

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the opinion polling, including group work, currently being undertaken by his Department. [39894]

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport regularly carried out surveys in connection with various transport issues. Details are listed in "Transport Statistics Great Britain" and "Quarterly Transport Statistics," copies of which are held in the House of Commons Library. None of these surveys involve opinion polling, although some of them will include questions of opinion about specific transport matters.

The following current surveys include some group discussions: survey of attitudes and behaviour of adults to wearing rear restraints; survey in connection with child road safety creative development research; interactive survey to examine public attitudes to transport policy and environment.

Car Park Security (British Rail)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail on the security of their car parks; and if he will make a statement. [39898]

Mr. Watts: I have regular discussions with British Rail on many aspects of railway operation, including passenger security issues.

Research Funding

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the research projects currently funded or part funded by his Department. [39770]

Mr. Norris: The Department currently funds more than 500 research projects and I have arranged for a list of the projects, wholly funded or part funded by my Department, to be placed in the Library.

Passenger Rail Services (Sales)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of passenger rail services he expects to be sold off by 1 April 1996. [39793]

Mr. Watts: We expect that franchises for a significant proportion of passenger rail services will have been awarded by 1 April 1996. The sales process for the first three franchises—Great Western, South West Trains and LTS Rail—is now in its final stages. The franchising director aims to select franchisees for these franchises by the end of the year, with private sector operation commencing in the first few months of 1996. The sales process has started for a further four franchises: InterCity East Coast, Midland Main Line, Network SouthCentral and Gatwick Express. These seven franchises represent 40 per cent. of passenger services by revenue. Preparation of sales documentation is under way for the next stages of the programme.

Stratford Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department is taking to protect the safety of passengers, and the local community, in respect of the proposed increase of rail traffic at Stratford station, East London due to the (a) completion of the London Transport Jubilee line and (b) Eurotunnel traffic, and the transportation of trains carrying radioactive spent fuel rods through the station; and if he will make a statement. [39555]

Mr. Norris: The construction of new or altered railway stations or lines requires approval under the Transport Systems (Approval of Works, Plant and Equipment) Regulations 1994. In addition, the Railway (Safety Case) Regulations 1994 are designed to ensure that the safety implications of all railway operations are taken into consideration, and that effective arrangements are put in place to control risk, especially at the interfaces between operations. Any significant changes to the operation of the railway would require corresponding change to the railway safety case of the operator concerned. These and other health and safety requirements are monitored and enforced by the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate.

The National Radiological Protection Board, on behalf of the Department of Transport, carries out periodic surveys of the radiological impact of the rail transport of irradiated nuclear fuel flasks and other radioactive materials. The radiation levels give no cause for radiological concern with current traffic levels.

M4 (Repairs)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the estimated costs for the current repairs to the M4 between junctions 8 and 9 and 6; [39590]

(2) what plans he has to reduce congestion on the M4 between junctions 8 and 9 and 6, caused by roadworks; [39588]

(3) what representations he has received concerning the disruption caused by roadworks on the M4 between junctions 8 and 9 and 6; [39592]

(4) what are the estimated costs to business of the roadworks on the M4 between junctions 8 and 9 and 6; [39589]

(5) when he expects the roadworks on the M4 between junctions 8 and 9 and 6 to be completed; [39587]

(6) if he will list the contractors who bid for the current roadworks on the M4 between junctions 8 and 9 and 6 on the M4; [39591]

Mr. Watts: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Murphy, dated 31 October 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the current roadworks on the M4 between Junctions 8/9 and 6.

This essential maintenance work includes overlaying the existing worn out surface with new hot rolled asphalt, upgrading the existing safety fencing, hardening of the central reserve and bridge rehabilitation and reconstruction works. The scheme is programmed for about 21 weeks and is expected to be completed in mid March 1996. The estimated cost of these works is about £10.1m. The agency has made no estimate of the costs to business arising from these works.

We have sought to reduce congestion arising from the scheme by giving wide publicity before the works started on both local and national radio and in the press. Warning signs were also erected on the M4 and M25 giving advance warning of the impending works. In addition, leaflets giving information and advice about the works have been distributed to local libraries, garages, service stations and Heathrow Airport. Many organisations, including the AA and RAC, were also notified in advance of the works starting. To minimise disruption during the course of the works, a minimum of two lanes will be kept open in each direction and slip road closure at Junction 7 will be restricted to night-times. As an incentive for the contractor to complete the works as quickly as possible, the contract has been let on a lane rental basis. This provides a bonus of £20,000 a day to be paid to the contractor for early completion but imposes a similar charge on the contractor if he overruns.

During the first week of the scheme, 36 telephone calls about the disruption caused by the works were received on the information line and about a dozen were received direct at the Agency's regional office.

The contract has been let to Camas Associated Asphalt. However, without the agreement of each of them, the Agency would not wish to publish the names of the other contractors who submitted unsuccessful bids as this is considered to be commercially confidential.

European Directives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action remains outstanding in order to implement European directives under United Kingdom law. [39764]

Mr. Watts: There are currently 16 EC directives relating to transport that need further action to implement them in the UK. Steps are being taken to draw up the secondary legislation required for 12 of these. Of the remainder, one requires further legislation at the European level before steps can be taken to implement it in the United Kingdom; discussions are under way with industry on how to implement two others and the remaining one affects the channel tunnel and discussions are taking place with the French authorities on how to implement that aspect of it.

Ministers' Appointments (European Institutions)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what appointments he and his Ministers have with colleagues from European institutions in the next month. [39765]

Sir George Young: My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibilities for local transport and road safety plans to meet the Transport Commissioner, Mr. Kinnock, on 13 November to discuss the draft EC bus and coach directive and bull bars.

Opposition Spokesmen (Civil Service Contacts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when members of Her Majesty's Opposition will be able to meet officially with civil servants in his Department to discuss implementation of policies after the next general election; and if he will make a statement. [39616]

Sir George Young: My right hon. friend the Prime Minister agreed with the then Leader of the Opposition in 1992 that such contacts should be permitted from early 1996.

Rolling Stock Manufacturing (Job Losses)

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many job losses have taken place in the railway rolling stock manufacturing industry in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [40243]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

Information on job losses is collected only for the manufacturing sector as a whole.

Available information showing the net change in people employed in the manufacture of transport equipment other than motor vehicles and trailers is provided in the table.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

India, Pakistan and Bangladesh

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase British aid to India, Pakistan and Bangladesh. [40027]

Mr. Hanley: India, Pakistan and Bangladesh contain a large proportion of the world's poorest people, and have made effective use of British aid. We expect to maintain substantial aid programmes to each country.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the United Kingdom's aid to (a) Pakistan, (b) India and (c) Bangladesh in (i) 1994 and (ii) the current year; and what are the projected figures for 1996. [40010]

Mr. Hanley: Figures are collated by financial year. Gross UK bilateral aid disbursements in 1993–94 and 1994–95 were as follows—disbursements by the Commonwealth Development Corporation are shown in brackets:

£ million

	Pakistan	India	Bangladesh
1993–94	48.1 (24.4)	102.2 (22.9)	55.4 (5.4)
1994–95 (provisional)	81.4 (46.9)	100.2 (17.5)	56.3 (9.0)

We expect to maintain substantial aid to all three countries in the current year and beyond. We also assist through our share of aid provided by multilateral agencies.

AIDS

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 437, if he will list the bilateral projects supported and the financial commitment to each. [39975]

Mr. Hanley: The table gives a breakdown by country and region of the projects that the ODA supports to combat the spread of HIV/AIDS in developing countries:

Country	Number of projects	Total expenditure £
Africa Regional	5	657,784
Ethiopia	2	244,122
Ghana	2	1,259,000
Kenya	4	13,231,733

Cash Limit (1995–96)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made in the 1995–96 cash limit for expenditure by the Overseas Development Administration. [41142]

Mr. Hanley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on the external assistance vote, class II, vote 5, will be increased by £4,919,000 from £1,759,074,000 to £1,763,993,000. The increase is in respect of rollover of underspending against the 1994–95 external assistance vote. The increase will be offset by a claim on the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what external finance limit has been set for the current financial year for the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [41143]

Mr. Hanley: The external finance limit for CDC for 1995–96 is being increased by £4,000,000, from £15,000,000 to £19,000,000. The limit takes account of an increase in the provision for CDC in class II, vote 5, provision for which is made in the winter supplementary estimate. This increase is being met by transfer of resources within the vote and does not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Hackney Downs School

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement about Hackney Downs school. [41093]

Mr. Robin Squire: Hackney Downs school was inspected and found to be failing to provide an acceptable standard of education in August 1994. A further monitoring visit by the Office of Standards in Education in March 1995 found that the school continued to fail its pupils. Consequently, after consultation, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State transferred control of the school to an education association with effect from 1 September 1995.

The education association has now made recommendations to the Secretary of State about the future of the school. Its main recommendation is that it should close on 31 December 1995 and that all pupils should transfer to Homerton House boys school in Hackney.

The education association also recommends that Homerton House boys school should make special provision for year 11 boys taking GCSEs, and that Ministers should consider making available capital funding for its refurbishment.

My right hon. Friend is minded to agree with the recommendation that Hackney Downs school should close, in which case she is also minded to make available the necessary additional funds for the year 11 boys as well as funds for the refurbishment of Homerton House boys school.

My right hon. Friend has today written to the director of education of Hackney local education authority and the chairman of governors of Homerton House boys school inviting comments on all the education association's recommendations. She also welcomes views from any other interested party by Friday 10 November. My right hon. Friend will announce her decision shortly after that.

A copy of the north-east London education association's report has been placed in the Library.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what she is doing to encourage the private finance initiative in local authority schools. [41094]

Mrs. Gillan: The Department has been working closely with other Government Departments on possible rule changes to encourage the private finance initiative—PFI—on the basis of our contacts with individual local authorities. My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration is today announcing proposals from the Department of the Environment to increase the scope for upgrading local authority services through increased private sector investment and management expertise.

The proposals to generate more resources for PFI projects, by freeing up the requirement for authorities to set aside capital receipts for debt redemption, open up exciting opportunities to upgrade local authority schools. Disposal of education assets surplus to requirements will be encouraged by a reduction from 50 per cent. to 25 per cent. in the rate of set aside, for a limited period of two years from April 1996. Replacement of operational educational assets will also be made easier.

The proposals should allow both the public and the private sector to benefit from innovative programmes to upgrade the school building stock. They should also encourage local education authorities to rationalise school provision and thus remove expensive surplus places where it seems sensible to do so.

Overtime Working

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimates she has of the amount of overtime that is being worked nationally in (a) the last year for which data are available and (b) 10 years ago. [39374]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

According to the labour force survey in spring, March to May 1995, 91 million hours overtime were worked per week in Great Britain. The current estimate for spring 1985 is 68 million hours overtime per week.

Part-time Posts

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the number of part-time employment posts in each of the past five years. [39974]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is provided in the table:

Part-time employment in Great Britain: June (thousands)[1]

Building Services Engineering Courses

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals exist to ensure that the Higher Education Funding Council for England is able to provide additional margin funding to institutions providing building services engineering degree courses in respect of the special laboratory and equipment needs of this course. [40146]

Mr. Forth: The Higher Education Funding Council for England's allocations of capital funding for equipment are weighted to reflect the institution's historical patterns of spending in different subject areas. Its allocations of recurrent grant for teaching also reflect the institution's own internal distribution of funding between subjects. Students on laboratory or workshop-based courses also attract a higher tuition fee from their local education authorities.

It is for institutions themselves to determine funding priorities for building services engineering and other courses out of their overall income from grant and tuition fees.

Appointments (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the public appointments for which her Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due and the salary. [39425]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State for Education and Employment makes the following public appointments in the county of South Yorkshire:

(a) The Committee for the Employment of People with Disabilities (CEPD) (Sheffield and Rotherham).

14 appointments of three years' duration, all due for renewal on 1 April 1997. All are unpaid.

(b) The Committee for the Employment of People with Disabilities (CEPD) (Wakefield, Barnsley and Doncaster).

14 appointments of three years' duration, all due for renewal on 1 April 1997. All are unpaid.

(c) The Further Education Funding Council (FEFC) Regional Committee (Yorkshire and Humberside).

12 appointments of three years' duration. The Chairman will be due for reappointment on 1 April 1996 and the 11 members on 1 October 1996. All are unpaid.

Employment Service (Resources)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 18 October, Official Report, column 295–96, how many additional staff will be employed to support additional places on jobplan, workshop and jobclub/job interview guarantee schemes in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98. [38996]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of additional staff that will be employed to support extra places on the Jobplan Workshop and Jobclub/Job Interview Guarantee schemes to help people leaving Incapacity Benefit (IB).

We have allocated the following additional staff for the Job Interview Guarantee Programme:

Year	Additional staff
1995–96	100
1996–97	84
1997–98	20

Jobplan Workshops and most Jobclubs are delivered by external contractors. For these programmes we have negotiated with existing contractors to provide additional places for the ex-IB clients, and therefore Employment Service staffing has not changed. Full details of the additional places were included in my letter dated 18th October.

I hope this is helpful.

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what date her Department last sent a financial appraisal and monitoring team for a review of the monitoring and sample checking systems of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC in relation to operating agreement compliance, if the non-vocational qualification claims under output-related funding of training provided by all companies providing training at the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC are verified, and if she will make a statement. [38992]

Mr. Paice: The Government office for Yorkshire and Humberside carried out the first phase of an annual audit of Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council's financial control systems in July 1995, and is returning to complete the audit during November 1995.

In the course of annual audits of this kind, including that at Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, a large sample of claims for every type of output from companies providing training and other training providers is verified.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list by year since its inception how much (a) profit and (b) loss Barnsley and Doncaster TEC has made. [39012]

Mr. Paice: Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council's first published accounts were for the year ended 31 March 1991 and covered the period 1 January 1991 to 31 March 1991.

Annual results since inception are as follows:

£000

Year ended	Surplus/(Deficit) before tax	Surplus (Deficit) after tax
31 March 1991	505	293
31 March 1992	2,797	2,688
31 March 1993	1,017	1,012
31 March 1994	(882)	(821)
31 March 1995	162	172

Source:
Barnsley and Doncaster TEC Annual Audited Accounts.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list by year since its inception for Barnsley and Doncaster TEC how many out-of-school child care places were delivered, and how many are planned to be delivered in future years; and at what cost. [39049]

Mr. Paice: The first year of child care funding for Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council was 1994–95.

In 1994–95 the TEC provided 252 child care places at a cost of £127,440. For 1995–96 the TEC has been allocated a target of a further 250 additional places at a contract value of £188,941. There is no funding available for new places in 1996–97 and future years.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will publish a table showing the identifiable (a) capital and (b) revenue or current expenditure by Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, by district council electoral division or on any other geographical basis on which the data are collated or accounted, in each year since its inception; how much in both expenditure categories is (i) legally committed and (ii) planned for fiscal years 1995–96 and 1996–97; what is the pro-rata expenditure in each category for each district council electoral division, expressed as a percentage of the total capital and revenue budgets measured against their respective populations; if she will rank the district council electoral division in descending order by level of expenditure in both categories, and if she will make a statement. [38980]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is operational information on the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council and the question would be best addressed to the TEC to answer.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the financial reserves held by the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC for each year since its inception. [39248]

Mr. Paice: Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council first published accounts for the year-ended 31 March 1991, covering the period 1 January 1991 to 31 March 1991.

Financial reserves held since inception are as follows:

£000

Year ended	Land and development fund reserve	General fund reserve	Total reserves
31st March 1991	293	—	293
31st March 1992	2,481	500	2,981
31st March 1993	3,288	705	3,993

Computers in Schools

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statistics she has on the change in the number of computers available to schools in England in the last decade. [38821]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Estimated computers available in maintained schools in England

Year	Primary Average per school	Primary Total available	Secondary Average per school	Secondary Total available
1984–85	1.7	33,500	13.4	58,700
1987–88	2.5	48,300	23.2	96,300
1989–90	4.3	82,400	41.1	163,400
1991–92	7.0	132,500	58.0	233,100

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many people in receipt of unemployment benefit sign on by post in each travel-to-work area in England; [38572]

(2) how many unemployed people in England in receipt of benefit in each travel-to-work area in England live more than six miles from their nearest Employment Service office; [38567]

(3) which categories of unemployed claimant are given the option of signing on by post. [38571]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 31 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about signing procedures and travel-to-work areas.

The statistics you requested on the number of people claiming benefit and living more than six miles from their nearest Employment Service Jobcentre (ESJ) are not available for travel to work areas. Similarly, no statistics are kept on the number of these people who are postal claimants. We do, however, record figures for the numbers of people claiming by post for each of the ES's seven English regions.

In September, the latest month for which figures are available, there were:

Employment service region	Number of postal claimants
Northern	4,466
Yorkshire and Humberside	12,282
East Midlands and Eastern	15,624
London and South East	31,819
South West	15,804
West Midlands	4,330
North West	4,468

The concession for claiming benefit by post is that someone must live more than six miles by ordinary road from their nearest ESJ. This rule can, at the local office manager's discretion, be waived in cases which would involve hardship. Clients who are disabled and those with such inadequate transport facilities that they would be absent from home for more than four hours, are therefore also offered the postal signing facility.

I hope this is helpful.

Special Education

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the growth in demand for special education requirements in each year since 1990, giving the number of pupils in each year. [38788]

Mr. Forth: The most readily available measure of the demand for special education provision is the number of pupils with statements of special educational needs. The full figures for pupils in England with statements since 1990 are provided in the table.

Year	Number of statements
1990	139,779
1991	154,743
1992	165,095
1993	176,698
1994	192,308
1995[1]	198,329

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to market NVQs. [38799]

Mr. Forth: The Department for Education and Employment has asked the National Council for Vocational Qualifications to provide leadership and co-ordination of NVQ marketing. The Department also supports marketing through the "Free Your Potential" campaign, which promotes the role of NVQs in vocational training for individuals and employers.

Civil Servants (Sheffield)

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the impact of the merger of the Education and Employment Departments on the employment of civil servants in Sheffield. [40033]

Mr. Robin Squire: The merger may offer some scope for the rationalisation of activities on the various sites occupied by the new Department for Education and Employment, but it is too early to be precise about details. However, the merger is unlikely to result in any significant loss of posts in Sheffield.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the relative costs of employing civil servants within her Department in (a) London and (b) Sheffield. [40034]

Mr. Squire: The average annual salary and accommodation costs for staff of the Department for Education and Employment in London and Sheffield are £37,100 and £24,800 respectively. Accommodation costs account for £9,600 of the difference.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy to relocate further civil servants from London, including those in the education part of her Department, to join those currently based in Sheffield. [40035]

Mr. Squire: There are no plans to change the current policy of the Department, which is that staff should be located wherever they are best able to support the efficient and effective conduct of the Department's activities. The merger may offer some scope for rationalisation of activities on the various sites occupied by the new Department for Education and Employment, but it is too soon to be precise about details.

Derwent System Schools

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what credit approvals have been given to date for the repair and replacement of Derwent system schools; [40289]

(2) if she will make a statement on the future of Derwent system schools; [40290]

(3) what representations she has received on the need to replace Derwent system schools; and what bids for credit approval have been received; [40291]

(4) if she will make a statement on the current condition of Derwent system schools; [40292]

(5) how many Derwent system schools there are; and in which local authorities they are located; [40293]

(6) if she will make a statement about the replacement of Derwent system schools. [40294]

Mrs. Gillan: Information about the number, location and condition of Derwent system schools is not held centrally. A small number of applications for credit approval have been made specifically referring to systems buildings, but the type of construction is not always identified.

In 1987, the Department advised all local education authorities of problems which had been found with certain Derwent system buildings, and in 1988 recommended that certain timber-framed and prefabricated buildings, including Derwent system buildings, should be checked.

Local education authorities and governing bodies are responsible for the maintenance of the fabric of their school buildings.

TREASURY

Government Expenditure

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total expenditure on (i) health, (ii) education, (iii) social security, (iv) transport, (v) defence and (vi) housing in 1979, 1984, 1989 and 1994 expressed as (a) the percentage of total Government expenditure and (b) the percentage of total Government tax revenue. Wine Import Duty

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 535, when the EU agreement was approved to require wine import duty to be levied in terms of ecu per hectolitre; when this agreement was approved by Parliament; when Customs and Excise commenced the new import tariffs; and on which day, in relation to the day of import, the value of the ecu is assessed to determine the amount of duty payable. [40219]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 30 October 1995]: EC legislation existing prior to our accession set out the legal basis for Customs duties. The treaty of accession of the United Kingdom to the European Community and the European Communities Act 1972—specifically section 5—both of which were approved by Parliament, give the legal basis for the adoption, by the United Kingdom, of the EC common customs tariff. Accordingly, since 1 January 1974 the UK tariff has incorporated the EC common customs tariff, including specific duty rates expressed in European units of account, now termed European currency units. There are a number of other items throughout the tariff which also attract specific duties expressed in ecus. The ecu rate for wine is governed by a monthly industrial ecu conversion rate published in the EC Official Journal C series at the end of the month and applicable for the whole of the following month.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend the ecu basis for import tariffs to items other than wine. [40220]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 30 October 1995]: We have no knowledge of any proposals to extend the ecu basis for import tariff items. However, it should be noted that there are currently a number of other items throughout the tariff which also attract specific duties expressed in ecus.

National Loans Fund

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the impact on (a) public expenditure and (b) the public sector borrowing requirement of selling outstanding debt to the national loans fund held by (i) the Housing Corporation, (ii) the Civil Aviation Authority, (iii) British Rail, (iv) Scottish Homes and (v) new towns development corporations and commission; [40772]

(2) if he will list and give the face value of outstanding loans to the national loans fund which if sold would have an effect on (a) public expenditure and (b) the public sector borrowing requirement. [40771]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The table shows the total value of loans from the national loans fund outstanding on 30 October 1995. NLF loans are not marketable.

If a nationalised industry or other public corporation repays an NLF loan, the effect is to reduce general Government expenditure. There will be a similar effect on the PSBR except in so far as the corporation offsets this by taking out other loans or running down its deposits.

If a private sector body repays an NLF loan, that will reduce general Government expenditure and the PSBR.

If a local authority or central Government body repays a loan to the NLF there is no effect on the general Government expenditure or the PSBR because the transaction is internal to the Government sector.

Sanitary Products

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer per year of reducing VAT on sanitary protection to 5 per cent. [40582]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Approximately £25 million per year.

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish revenue costs of reducing the rate of advance corporation tax and tax on dividends to (a) 17.5 per cent., (b) 15 per cent., (c) 12.5 per cent. and (d) 10 per cent. in a full year and of reducing the lower rate of tax to the same rates on the first (i) £1,000, (ii) £2,000 and (iii) £3,000 of rateable income, retaining any balance of £3,200 at the 20 per cent. rate. [39101]

Mr. Jack: The direct revenue effects of reducing the rate of advance corporation tax from 20 per cent. and the income tax charge on dividends from the lower rate of 20 per cent. to the specified levels are shown in the table. Estimates of the variation in revenue effects over the specified range of income tax rates and bands of taxable income are also given. Further information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. The estimates take no account of possible behavioural effects which could be significant.

Direct revenue effects (£ billion, cost (–)/yield (+)) at 1996–97 forecast income levels[1]

ACT rate and tax rate on dividends (Per cent.)	Net revenue effect[2]
17.5	+0.7
15	+1.4

Direct revenue effects (£ billion, cost (–)/yield (+)) at 1996–97 forecast income levels[1]

ACT rate and tax rate on dividends (Per cent.)	Net revenue effect[2]
12.5	+2.1
10	+2.7

Notes:

[1] Based on the 1995 summer economic forecast.

[2] Assuming that the fall in ACT yield would be offset by higher payments of mainstream corporation tax.

Income tax lower rate (Per cent.)[1]	Band of taxable income £1,000	£3,000
17.5	–0.6	–1.8
10	–2.5	–7.0

[1] Costs include consequential effects on capital gains tax and exclude the effects of corresponding changes in the rate of ACT and the basic tax rate on individuals.

Tax Rates

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many additional people will pay tax at the higher rate if the basic rate upper limit is not raised in line with indexation in 1996–97; and what will be the average loss per taxpayer. [38997]

Mr. Jack: About 200,000 taxpayers would be brought into higher rate tax. The average additional income tax liability compared with indexation for the 2.4 million taxpayers affected would be about £145.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the revenue cost or yield in 1995–96 and in a full year of the introduction of a minimum tax rate of (a) 15 per cent., (b) 20 per cent., (c) 25 per cent., (d) 30 per cent., (e) 35 per cent., (f) 40 per cent., (g) 45 per cent., (h) 50 per cent. and (i) 55 per cent. on gross incomes of over (i) £50,000, (ii) £70,000, (iii) £80,000, (iv) £90,000, (v) £100,000, (vi) £110,000, (vii) £120,000 (viii) £130,000, (ix) £140,000 and (x) £150,000. [39104]

Mr. Jack: The table gives available estimates showing the variation in revenue yields over the specified ranges of tax rates and thresholds of gross incomes up to £100,000. Reliable estimates are not available for higher thresholds of gross income.

Full year revenue yield at 1995–96 levels. Rate of minimum tax

£ million

Gross income	15 per cent.	35 per cent.	55 per cent.
Over £50,000	10	1,860	11,800
Over £70,000	5	710	7,230
Over £100,000	5	280	4,610

The estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of the new arrangements.

Income Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the numbers of people in the United Kingdom in 1995–96 with gross and taxable incomes of (a) more than £100,000, (b) more than £150,000, (c) more than £200,000, (d) more than £300,000, (e) more than £400,000 and (f) more than £500,000. [39114]

(2) if he will list the total gross income and total income tax liability of taxpayers falling in the bands (a) £20,000–£30,000, (b) £30,000–£40,000 and so on in £10,000 bands up to £130,000, specifying in each case the number of taxpayers falling in each band. [39089]

Mr. Jack: Available estimates are given in the table. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for the specified bands of income above £100,000, nor is its possible to incorporate the detailed effect of mortgage interest relief which, in total, reduces income tax liability by £1.1 billion for taxpayers included in the table.

1995–96 £	Gross income[1] £ millions	Income tax liability[2] £ millions	Number of taxpayers (thousands)
20,000 to 30,000	89,600	16,800	3,700
30,000 to 40,000	38,200	8,500	1,100
40,000 to 50,000	18,700	4,770	420
50,000 to 60,000	10,600	2,950	200
60,000 to 70,000	6,650	1,950	100
70,000 to 80,000	4,950	1,500	70
80,000 to 90,000	3,470	1,090	40
90,000 to 100,000	2,470	790	30
100,000+	23,200	8,130	120

[1] Gross income is defined as total income for income tax purposes. It excludes income from certain social security benefits and some investment income such as National Savings Certificates.

[2] Not taking account of mortgage interest relief.

Taxpayers' Liability

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his projections for the total income and total income tax and national insurance liability of the top 1 per cent. of taxpayers and all taxpayers in 1996–97, based on the indexed 1995–96 regime, giving the amount by which tax and national insurance have changed when compared with the indexed regimes of (a) 1987–88, (b) 1992–93 and (c) 1995–96. [39112]

Mr. Jack: Available projections about total tax liabilities were published in table 2.2 of the 1995 summer economic forecast. The liabilities of the top 1 per cent. of taxpayers will depend on the income levels of this group.

Vehicle Taxes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which EC countries use a vehicle tax or licence fee related to engine size and which do not. [39903]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Most EU countries graduate their vehicle tax or licence fee according to engine characteristics.

Ministerial Transport Costs

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40744]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The total cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years is as follows:

1990–91	216,127
1991–92	294,341
1992–93	277,559
1993–94	284,610
1994–95	283,518
1995 to date	171,913

No allowance has been paid to ministers for the use of their own vehicles in the past five years.

Annual Meetings (World Bank and International Monetary Fund)

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the recent annual meetings of the World bank and the International Monetary Fund. [40971]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I attended meetings of the International Monetary Fund and World bank in Washington on 8 and 9 October, where progress was made on several issues of importance for the world economy and for developing countries. I also attended the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting in Kingston, Jamaica on 4-5 October.

In Kingston, Ministers endorsed a report on measures against money laundering, following my proposals at last year's meeting in Valletta. This matter will now be considered by Commonwealth Heads of Government in Auckland in November.

I emphasised the desirability of an effective UN, and the need for reform of UN economic and social bodies. I hoped that the Commonwealth would give further impetus to the many UN reform activities under way.

I gained further support for my initiative to relieve the burden of multilateral debt on a small group of the poorest countries, as well as reiterating the need for full implementation of the Naples and Trinidad terms for official bilateral debt.

There was further discussion of multilateral debt at the interim and development committees of the World bank and IMF. The bank and fund will continue their work and report with proposals to the spring meetings in Washington next April. I am pleased to report that, one year on from the launch of my initiative, there is now an emerging consensus that this issue must be solved.

As usual, the IMF and World bank meetings were preceded by meetings of G7 and G10 Finance Ministers and central bank governors.

In the G7, we reviewed global economic and financial conditions, concluding that in most countries the conditions for continued growth and employment gains are in place and inflation well under control. We agreed that policies should continue to aim at sustaining non-inflationary growth.

I joined other Ministers in urging the IMF and World bank to carry out an early, thorough assessment of needs for the reconstruction of Bosnia following a peace settlement. We had a useful discussion of the Russian economy with representatives of the Russian Government, led by First Deputy Prime Minister Chubais.

The G10 endorsed the conclusions of a study on savings, investment and real interest rates, commissioned at my suggestion last year. These are that reducing fiscal deficits would be the swiftest and surest way to reverse the decline in national saving rates and the increase in average interest rates over the last 35 years.

We agreed that it would be desirable to develop new parallel financing arrangements complementary to the general arrangements to borrow. Discussions will take place with potential participants, with the objective of agreement by next April.

At the IMF interim committee I emphasised the need for flexible labour markets and a favourable business environment at a time of increasing technological change and international competition.

Further progress was made in responding to the lessons of the Mexican crisis, as envisaged at the Halifax summit in June. This includes exceptional procedures for the IMF to respond promptly and prudently in the event of serious financial crises. I strongly supported conclusions on the need for regular and timely provision of comprehensive and good quality data to the fund and the establishment of standards for data publication. I welcomed fund efforts to make the surveillance of members' economies franker and more selective. I also urged the fund to develop effective ways of evaluating its own performance. Work is continuing on the 11th review of quotas, although the fund's liquidity is currently adequate.

I took the opportunity of the development committee meeting to welcome the new president of the World bank, Mr. Jim Wolfensohn, and expressed my support for his leadership. In a discussion of ways to reduce poverty, I emphasised the need for sound economic policies. The committee agreed on the importance of a significant replenishment of IDA. I stressed that donor countries should each shoulder a fair share of the burden.

Copies of my speeches to the Commonwealth Finance Ministers meeting, the interim committee and the development committee, and of the communiques of those meetings and the G7 and G10 Finance Ministers' meetings have been placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Weapons (France)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the dates when United Kingdom officials or employees of the atomic weapons establishments have visited the (a) Centre d'Etudes de Limil-Valenton in Villeneuve-Saint-Georges, (b) Centre d'Etudes de Valduc, (c) Centre d'Etudes du Ripoult, (d) Centre d'Etudes Scientifique et Techniques d'Aquitane, Le Barp, (e) Centre d'Etudes de Bruyeres-le Chatel and (f) Centre d'Etudes de Vaujours, Moronvilliers, France, over the past five years, indicating the purpose of each visit; [40162]

(2) if he will make a statement on how far technical discussions between the United Kingdom and France relating to possible arrangements for peer review, as set out in the eighth report of the Defence Select Committee, "Progress of the Trident programme" (HC 350 of Session 1994–195), have progressed; what data or technical information have been sent from France to the United Kingdom for peer review as a result of these technical discussions; and if he will make a statement on progress on computer simulation discussions; [40195]

(3) if he will list the dates when United Kingdom officials or employees of the atomic weapons establishments have visited French nuclear weapons research facilities over the past five years; and if he will indicate details of the purpose of each visit; [40157]

(4) what technical assistance is being provided to the French Government to aid them in their development of alternatives to underground nuclear weapons testing; [40155]

(5) if he will list the dates when French officials or scientists visited the atomic weapons establishments in the last five years; and if he will indicate the purpose of each visit. [40156]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to my answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 16 October 1995, Official Report, column 37.

French Naval Vessels

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of all French naval vessels that have visited the United Kingdom over the last 10 years, indicating their port of call and the dates of their visits. [40163]

Mr. Soames: The information is available only from mid-1991 onwards. Research of records prior to that date could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Military Information Sharing (France and Britain)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all committees established for the purposes of co-ordinating and sharing information and ideas between French and British armed forces on military matters. [40158]

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Franco-British Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of the Franco-British Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine, indicating how often on average the body meets each year. [40161]

Mr. Soames: The joint commission provides a forum for discussion of matters of mutual interest to the United Kingdom and France in the area of nuclear policy and doctrine. It has met two or three times a year. The details of its discussions are confidential between the two Governments.

Armed Services (Recruitment Costs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost in real terms of recruitment to the armed services in each of the past six years. [39990]

Mr. Soames: The information is not held in the form requested for all years and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Outturn figures for the past three years are as follows:

1992–93: £89.053 million

1993–94: £97.310 million

1994–95: £93.277 million

Western European Union Medal

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the response of the United Kingdom and other western European Governments to the proposal by United Kingdom delegates for a Western European Union medal for service in Western European Union operations agreed by the Western European Union parliamentary assembly in December 1994. [40032]

Mr. Soames: On 20 December 1994 the Western European Union Council gave its agreement in principle to the draft proposal by the former Netherlands presidency for a Western European Union mission service medal.

Since then, the Government, as a Council member of the Western European Union, have agreed in principle that this medal would be compatible with the British honours system for specific, agreed cases. However, to date, no proposal has been received from the Western European Union for the award of the medal, with appropriate clasp, for issue to any UK citizens.

RAF Machrihanish

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year since 1990 the types and marks of (a) NATO and (b) other nationals' aircraft that have used RAF Machrihanish. [39046]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is contained in the table.

Defence Exports, Singapore

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 11 July, Official Report, column 527, what evidence of illegal activity has come to light in relation to defence exports to Singapore and has been brought to the attention of Customs and Excise. [40497]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 11 July, Official Report, column 527, except to confirm that research into aspects of defence exports to Singapore continues.

Potential Compensation Claims

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money his Department allocated as provision for the payments of potential compensation claims in each of the last five years. [37776]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 19 October 1995]: This information is not readily available for 1990–91, but financial provision for payment of compensation claims from 1991–92 onwards was as follows:

Financial Year	Allocation
1991–92	£10 million (estimated)
1992–93	£11 million
1993–94	£26 million (of which £15 million was provision made for compensation payments made to Servicewomen dismissed on grounds of pregnancy)
1994–95	£43 million (of which £26 million was provision made for compensation payments made to Servicewomen dismissed on grounds of pregnancy)

Married Quarters (Disposals)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding disposal of married quarters. [40387]

Mr. Soames: We are continuing to consider possibilities for transferring ownership of the married quarters estate to the private sector. We expect to be in a position to clarify the way ahead before the end of the year.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of married quarters in each local housing authority area; and what is the percentage vacant. [40386]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Unit Closures

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what degree his Department accepts financial responsibility for contingent liabilities arising from closures of establishments or disbandment of units. [40394]

Mr. Soames: It is the policy of the Ministry of Defence to avoid incurring contingent liabilities wherever possible. Very exceptionally, an indemnity might be given on or in relation to the disposal of a site, as for instance on the disposal of Gruinard island against claims arising from its decontamination.

Solent Buoyage

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what powers he has to offer the Solent Buoyage to competent harbour authorities other than Trinity House. [40371]

Mr. Soames: The Queen's Harbour Master exercises responsibility on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence for the maintenance of all buoyage within the Dockyard port of Portsmouth; to ensure safe mooring and navigation. There are no powers within the Dockyard Port of Portsmouth Order 1978 to allow for the transfer of specific responsibilities to other harbour authorities.

Mr. Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Navy to relinquish their responsibility for Solent buoyage. [40370]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no plans to relinquish any of its responsibilities within the area of the dockyard part of Portsmouth.

No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what basic provision is made for capital costs, storage, maintenance and similar expenditure in assessing costs appropriate to the royal usage of No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron. [40391]

Mr. Soames: Costs of royal usage on official business are based on a proportionate cash assessment of total operating costs comprising personnel, aviation fuel, equipment and engineering support and other operating costs. By convention, capital costs are not included in the calculation.

Service Personnel (Loans)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Governments to which service personnel have been loaned during the period from April 1992. [40493]

Mr. Soames: The countries to which service personnel have been loaned since 1992 are Angola, Antigua, Australia, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Brunei, Dominica, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Hong Kong, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lesotho, Malaysia, Mauritius, Namibia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Oman, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, South Africa, St Lucia, St Vincent, Swaziland, Turks and Caicos Islands, United Arab Emirates and Zimbabwe.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stage Hynotism

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what monitoring is undertaken by his Department of the adverse health effects of stage hypnotism. [38223]

Mr. Kirkhope: We expect shortly to publish the report of a review of the effects of participation in stage hypnotism and the workings of the Hypnotism Act 1952. The report will include an assessment of clinical evidence submitted to the review's panel of psychiatrists and psychologists.

DNA Samples

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if persons asked to give DNA samples during the investigation of crimes are notified that the samples will be retained for future reference, whether or not they are charged with or convicted of the crimes under investigation. [39960]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 October 1995]: When members of the public volunteer to give samples as part of a mass screening, the samples taken are compared only with the sample found at the scene of the crime under investigation. The samples are destroyed at the end of the investigation and the profiles derived from them are not retained on the DNA database.

When a sample is taken from a person suspected of involvement in a recordable offence, the police are required to inform the person that the sample may be the subject of a speculative search. Whether and for how long the samples will be retained is dependent upon the outcome of the investigation.

Samples taken from persons convicted of or cautioned for a recordable offence will be retained for the same period as the offender's criminal record on Phoenix. Samples taken from people who are acquitted or not proceeded against will be retained if another person from whom a sample has been taken in the same investigation is convicted of an offence. These samples may be needed for further comparative analysis if it is subsequently suggested that there has been a miscarriage of justice.

DNA profiles will be retained in a searchable form on the DNA database only if the suspect is convicted of or cautioned for a recordable offence or if action against that individual is ongoing.

Mohammed Riaz and Abdul Quayyum Raja

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to inform Mohammed Riaz and Abdul Quayyum Raja of his decision concerning their tariffs; on what date he received the case papers; and if he will make a statement. [40446]

Miss Widdecombe: The case papers were submitted to Ministers on 4 October. The decisions on tariff will be taken and disclosed to the prisoners as soon as reasonably practicable.

Patrick Kelly and Michael O'Brien

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reason Patrick Kelly and Michael O'Brien, prisoners, are (a) detained in the special security unit at Whitemoor prison, (b) refused reading material and (c) kept in cells which have no heating; if, the hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) talked to either prisoner when she visited Whitemoor prison; what complaints she received about their detention; and if he will make a statement; [40449]

(2) if he will release Patrick Kelly, currently detained in the special security unit at Whitemoor prison, and arrange for his early transfer either to Northern Ireland or to the Irish Republic; and if he will make a statement. [40447]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 30 October 1995]: Patrick Kelly is serving a sentence of imprisonment of 25 years for the attempted murder of a police officer and conspiring to cause explosions. Under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, consideration cannot be given, save in exceptional circumstances, to Mr. Kelly's discretionary release until May 2005.

Mr. Kelly's recent request for transfer to Northern Ireland was refused on the grounds that he does not meet the criteria for transfer. He has no known links with Northern Ireland and he was not previously resident there before his present conviction. There were considered to be insufficient compelling compassionate factors to justify, exceptionally, granting him a transfer. This decision is currently under review.

Mr. Kelly has indicated his wish to be repatriated to the Republic of Ireland. This will be considered on its merits, in consultation with the Irish Government, when arrangements for the repatriation of prisoners between the two jurisdictions come into force on 1 November.

Mr. Kelly and Mr. O'Brien are both category A prisoners with exceptional escape risk classifications. As such, it is necessary for them to be held in conditions suitable for prisoners of the highest security category. It is normal policy, subject to operational constraints which may affect the availability of such accommodation, to hold such prisoners in special secure units—SSUs.

Mr. Kelly and Mr. O'Brien have not been refused reading material although, because they are on a dirty protest, they are not, for reasons of hygiene, allowed to have books from the prison library. On 17 October, as part of a disciplinary award for failing to comply with the regime requirements of the SSU, they were not permitted to receive publications from outside sources for seven days. They did, however, continue to be provided with daily newspapers. Publications sent to them during that period were stored and given to the prisoners after 24 October.

The cells in the SSU are heated. There were some technical problems when the heating was first required after the summer, but since the middle of October there have been no reported problems. The heating is now operated automatically by a temperature control located within the unit.

I recently visited the Whitemoor SSU, but did not see either prisoner.

Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for each year from 1991–92 to 1994–95; and for each of these years, what was the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated in such frauds and (2) subsequently recovered. [39127]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The number of cases of fraud committed by staff of the Home Office, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies is tabulated for the years 1991–92 to 1994–95. The monetary value of the fraud and how much was recovered is shown.

Year	Department	Agency	NDPB
1991–92

Irish Prisoners

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures are in place to invite applications from Irish nationals serving sentences in prisons in the United Kingdom to be transferred to prisons in the Irish Republic; how many Irish nationals are detained in United Kingdom prisons; how many have indicated their intention of applying to be transferred; how many have applied; what are the arrangements for recording and processing such applications; and if he will make a statement. [40451]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 30 October 1995]: The Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons comes into effect for the Republic of Ireland from 1 November. The convention requires that all eligible prisoners who may wish to seek repatriation are informed by the sentencing jurisdiction of the availability of these procedures. With the agreement of the Irish Government, Irish prisoners in England and Wales will be advised of these arrangements through instructions given to prison governors. I am placing a copy of the relevant instruction—"Instruction to Governors 101/95"—in the Library.

As at 30 September 1995, 644 prisoners held in England and Wales gave their nationality on reception into prison as Irish. Under the convention, prisoners may not themselves apply for repatriation but may indicate an interest in this. To date, 35 Irish prisoners have done so. It will be open to either jurisdiction to make a formal request for repatriation on a prisoner's behalf.

All requests for repatriation involving prisoners held in England and Wales are recorded and processed by Prion Service headquarters.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum by persons applying (a) on entry to the United Kingdom and (b) after entry were decided in 1994 and in January to September 1995; and how many of each category were granted asylum and exceptional leave to remain. [40605]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is given in the table.

Decisions on asylum applications made at ports of entry and after entry into the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, 1994 and January to September 1995

	1994			1995 (January to September)
	Port applications	In country applications	Total	Port applications	In country applications	Total
Decisions[1][2][3]
Total decisions	7,150	13,840	20,990	7,325	12,585	19,910

Refused under para.340 of Immigration Rules[4]	—	2,985	2,985	—	1,755	1,755

[1] Provisional and estimated figures rounded to the nearest 5.

[2] Information is of initial determination decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions.

[3] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same period.

[4] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken or intends to take to ensure that refugees arriving from abroad are aware that they must apply for asylum on arrival in order to protect their potential entitlement to social security benefits. [40607]

Mr. Kirkhope: None. The immigration rules make it clear that matters which may damage an asylum applicant's credibility include failure to apply forthwith upon arrival—paragraph 341 of HC 395. Genuine asylum claims ought not to be affected by considerations of benefit entitlement. People who gain admission on the basis that they will support themselves should be held to that requirement whether or not they subsequently claim asylum.

British Betting Office Association

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on the British Betting Office Association's request to join the bookmakers committee to the Levy Board and the reconstitutions of the committee; and if he will make a statement. [40589]

Mr. Kirkhope: The review of the committee's composition is still in progress; the outcome will be announced as soon as possible.

Phillip Agee

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the grounds upon which the decision was taken in respect of granting permission to Phillip Agee to enter the United Kingdom. [40204]

Mr. Howard: I have revoked the deportation order made against Mr. Agee in 1977 because I consider that he no longer represents a threat to national security.

West Midlands Fire Service

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the pension deficit of the West Midlands fire service with particular reference to its impact on (a) effectiveness of the service and (b) the future of the scheme. [40247]

Mr. Kirkhope: The West Midlands fire and civil defence authority is required to set a budget that enables it to meet its obligations under the Fire Services Act 1947, including the provision of an effective fire service and payment of pensions. As far as I am aware, the authority is meeting these statutory obligations. As my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 3 March 1994, the fire service pension scheme is under review, but in determining levels of local government revenue funding, the Government are already taking into account, among other relevant factors, what they know to be the increasing pension liabilities of a number of fire authorities.

National Lottery Charities Board

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the disbursements made by the National Lottery Charities Board to organisations in Brigg and Cleethorpes. [39956]

Mr. Kirkhope: No grants have so far been announced by the National Lottery Charities Board in respect of organisations in the Brigg and Cleethorpes constituency.

Blue Police Boxes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss with the Secretary of State for National Heritage collecting centrally information on the locations of the remaining in-situ blue boxes in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [40007]

Mr. Maclean: No.

Fingerprints

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action police forces in the United Kingdom are taking to ensure they have a system for identifying fingerprints taken at the scene of crime; and if he will make a statement. [39730]

Mr. Maclean: All police forces in England and Wales have systems for the identification of fingerprints taken at scenes of crimes and, in the great majority of cases, they involve computer support. A national automated fingerprint identification system will be introduced in eight pilot schemes involving eight forces in 1997 and will be implemented in all forces in England and Wales by 2001, replacing existing automated fingerprint recognition systems.

Constabularies Amalgamations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to promote the amalgamation of any of the Humberside, Lincolnshire or individual Yorkshire constabularies; and if he will make a statement. [39512]

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to amalgamate any of the Humberside, Lincolnshire or Yorkshire police forces.

Sirens and High Speed (Emergency Services)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the regulations for the police, ambulance, and fire services, relating to the use of sirens and high speed. [39782]

Mr. Maclean: Control on the use of sirens is provided by the published Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 which state that sirens may be used by vehicles belonging to the recognised emergency services at any time when > it is necessary or desirable to do so either to indicate to other road users the urgency of the purposes for which the vehicle is being used, or to warn other road users of the presence of the vehicle on the road".

In addition, there is a statutory exemption from compliance with speed limits in section 87 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. The exemption applies to police, fire and ambulance service vehicles when observance of speed limits would be likely to > "hinder the use of the vehicle for the purpose for which the vehicle was being used" at the time concerned. Any further controls are operational matters for individual police forces, fire brigades and ambulance services.

Prisoners

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the largest group of offenders currently serving sentences in British prisons. [39742]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mrs. Anne Campbell, dated 31 October 1995:

> The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what is the largest group of offenders currently serving sentences in British prisons.
> The latest provisional information is for 30 September 1995. On that date the offence group with the largest number of sentenced offenders in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales was for violence against the person. 8,700 people were held after sentence for offences of violence against the person. This figure excludes all prisoners for whom an offence is not recorded (five per cent of the total prison population). Information on the prison population, broken down by offence is published annually in "Prison statistics, England and Wales" (table 1.7 of the 1993 edition, Cm 2893), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Automatic Fingerprinting

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current situation in respect of the use by police forces of IBM's automatic fingerprinting recognition system; and if he will make a statement. [39729]

Mr. Maclean: The contract between the automated fingerprint recognition—AFR—consortium, representing 36 police forces in England and Wales, and IBM for the provision of automated fingerprint recognition facilities was terminated earlier this year. The forces concerned have made other arrangements: the 32 which have remained members of the AFR consortium are receiving an interim service provided by the Lockheed Martin Corporation.

Remission and Sentencing

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of implementing (a) the Woodcock report, (b) the Learmont report and (c) the proposed changes to remission and sentencing. [39597]

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated costs of implementing the recommendations of the Woodcock report are being reconsidered in the light of Sir John Learmont's report.

Sir John Learmont's own assessment of the costs of his recommendations appears at appendix Q to his report.

Details of the proposed changes in sentencing policy will be set out in a White Paper due to be published early next year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Orthopaedic Services (Waiting Times)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the current waiting time for an appointment with a consultant at each hospital in Northern Ireland which provides orthopaedic services; [39247]

(2) how many patients are on current waiting lists at each hospital for an appointment with an orthopaedic consultant. [39249]

Mr. Moss: The table shows the number of patients and time waiting for a first outpatient appointment in the trauma and orthopaedic speciality at the end of June 1995.

Unit of Management/Trust	Hospital	0–2 months	3–5 months	6–8 months	9–11 months	12–14 months	15–17 months	18–20 months	21–23 months	24+ months	Total

[1] Information held centrally relates to the total number of patients waiting in each Unit of Management or Trust, for a first outpatient appointment. Therefore it is not possible to provide individual totals for the Royal Victoria and the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children.

Health Services (Market Testing)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the health services that have been market tested by or notified to his Department and won by the private sector indicating (a) the location and (b) the organisation winning the tender. [40618]

Mr. Moss: Health services, in terms of clinical and clinical support services, have not been market tested in Northern Ireland. The table gives the information requested in respect of non-clinical support services.

Details of services market tested and won by the private sector up to 31 March 1995.

District Health Authorities (Surpluses and Deficits)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) surpluses and (b) deficits were recorded by each district health authority in 1994–95. [40662]

Mr. Moss: The surpluses and deficits recorded by each health and social services board for Northern Ireland for 1994–95 are set out in the table.

The accounts of the health and social services boards report separately on revenue income and expenditure and capital income and expenditure. The table analyses the net surplus or deficit over each.

These accounts have not yet been certified by the appointed auditor and so may be subject to change.

	NHSSB £	SHSSB £	EHSSB £	WHSSB £
Revenue	22,407	653,940	(1,985,796)	(1,138,784)
Capital	201,324	1,251,754	(278,302)	1,559,937
Total	223,731	1,905,694	(2,264,098)	421,153

Note:

Figures in brackets represent deficits i.e. excess of expenditure over income.

Pay Bargaining

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide in respect of his plan for pay delegation submitted to the Treasury (a) a description of the staff in each bargaining unit covered by the plan, distinguishing staff in HQ functions, agencies and agency candidates, and in other identifiable business units and the negotiating machinery to be put in place in each bargaining unit. [38277]

Sir John Wheeler: The pay delegation plan submitted by the Northern Ireland Office to the Treasury covers staff in grades 6 and below in the following bodies, which will in 1996 constitute a single bargaining unit:

THE NORTHERN IRELAND OFFICE

Legal Offices

Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland

Crown Solicitor's Office

Agencies

Northern Ireland Prison Service (except prison officers and prison governors)

Compensation Agency

Forensic Science Agency of Northern Ireland

Other Bodies

Police Authority for Northern Ireland (except industrial staff)
Office of the Chief Electoral Officer
Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights
Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland
Independent Assessor of Military Complaints Procedures
Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres

Proposals for discussion about pay bargaining procedures have been sent to the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance, the First Division Association, the National Union of Civil and Public Servants and the Civil and Public Services Association.

ENVIRONMENT

Air Monitoring Stations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the location of all air monitoring stations in the United Kingdom and what pollutants each station measures. [39363]

Mr. Clappison: The Department of the Environment monitors air pollutants at 50 automatic monitoring sites in its urban, rural and hydrocarbon networks. A list of the stations and the pollutants they measure is given in the table.

Details of the non-automatic smoke and sulphur dioxide sites (approximately 225 sites) are available in "UK Smoke and Sulphur Dioxide Monitoring Networks Summary Tables for April 1993–March 1994".

Details of non-automatic nitrogen dioxide sites (approximately 1,100 sites) are available in "UK Nitrogen Dioxide Survey results for the first year—1993".

Details of the Department's other non-automatic networks (metals, acid deposition, rural sulphur dioxide and toxic organic micro pollutants; 86 sites) are available in "Air Pollution in the UK: 1993/94".

Copies of all three reports are available from the National Environmental Technology Centre, Culham, Abingdon, Oxfordshire, OX14 3DB.

Restoration Orders

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made on proposals to introduce restoration orders for sites of special scientific interest. [39362]

Mr. Clappison: We shall consult interested parties shortly.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39521]

Sir Paul Beresford: Estimated outturn for 1994–95 and plans for 1995–96 for civil service manpower and pay bill are set out in my Department's annual report, Cm 2807, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. A breakdown by grade and individual agency could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nirex (Cumbria)

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the RM Consultants report for Her Majesty's Inspector of Pollution on the movement of groundwater in the area of the proposed Nirex nuclear waste repository in Cumbria; [39732]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the WS Atkins report for Her Majesty's inspector of pollution on the movement of groundwater in the area of the proposed Nirex nuclear waste repository in Cumbria. [39733]

Mr. Gummer: A set of reports arising from the work undertaken by HMIP will be placed in the Library. This will include the reports by RM Consultants and W S Atkins.

Asylum Seekers (Housing Application)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of housing applicants, for each local authority, refused permanent housing due to being asylum seekers since the introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993. [39882]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 27 October 1995]: Under the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993, asylum seekers found to be statutorily homeless by a local housing authority are entitled only to temporary accommodation for as long as they remain an asylum seeker. Data are collected from local authorities in England on their activities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 on a quarterly basis.

I have today placed in the Library a table of the reported data on applicants registered with the Home Office as an asylum seeker and found to be statutorily homeless between January 1994 and June 1995. Such data were not collected prior to January 1994.

Information about the number of asylum seekers who have applied to register on a housing waiting list is not held centrally.

Mineral Extraction (Yorkshire Dales National Park)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the quarries in the Yorkshire Dales national park with the dates on which the permissions for mineral extraction expire. [40469]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not held centrally, but may be available from the minerals planning authorities for the area—North Yorkshire county council and Cumbria county council.

Thames Path

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take compulsory purchase powers to allow the river frontage in Hurlingham park to be used for the Thames path. [40470]

Mr. Clappison: Since the Countryside Commission's proposals for the Thames path where it runs through Hurlingham park—and the subsequent approved route in this area—did not include the river frontage, the question did not arise.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Countryside Commission concerning difficulties of securing access to the river frontage where the new Thames path could run across open land next to the water's edge. [40472]

Mr. Clappison: In approving the route proposed by the Countryside Commission after consultation with the interested parties, the Secretary of State acknowledged the special issues arising out of implementation of the path where it goes through London. [40471]

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at how many places along its route in London the Thames path leaves the river frontage other than because of a building or other similar obstruction.

Mr. Clappison: The Thames path in London leaves the river where access would otherwise be physically possible at four places—the Hurlingham club, the Houses of Parliament, Syon park, a site of special scientific interest, and the Nazareth house convent.

Water Consumption

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has issued in respect of the preparation of contingency plans prepared to meet water consumption requirements in each region next summer in the event of below average winter rainfall; and if he will make a statement. [40685]

Mr. Clappison: It is the responsibility of water companies to safeguard supplies to their customers, and prepare any contingency plans they consider to be necessary to maintain supplies next summer in the event of below average winter rainfall. The Government have requested the National Rivers Authority to continue monitoring the water resources situation and report whenever it considers further action is needed. The Government announced a review in consultation with the National Rivers Authority, water companies and other interested parties, of the lessons to be learnt from this year's drought and what action needs to be taken.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the A34 Newbury bypass river crossings have been assessed to estimate their impact on otters. [38210]

Mr. Clappison: At the time of the environment assessment for the A34 Newbury bypass there was no evidence that the rivers in question were populated by otters.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if licences have been issued permitting the removal of badgers from land affected by the construction of the A34 Newbury bypass. [38211]

Mr. Clappison: No. However, licences have been issued to allow surveys of badger populations to be carried out.

Mesothelioma (Hillingdon)

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is available about the incidence of mesothelioma in the London borough of Hillingdon during the past 25 years; and if he will publish details of the number of cases. [40651]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive maintains a register of deaths in Great Britain for which mesothelioma is mentioned on the death certificate. The numbers of deaths from mesothelioma in the London borough of Hillingdon are shown for each year for 1976 to 1991 in the table:

Year	Male	Female
1977	0	1
1978	2	0
1979	2	0
1980	1	0
1981	0	0
1982	0	1
1983	4	1
1985	3	2
1986	5	1
1987	5	0
1988	10	0
1989	2	1

The register records only a geographical code for area of usual residence at death from 1976 onwards. The latest year for which complete data is available is 1991. The incidence of mesothelioma is closely linked to the number of deaths as mesothelioma is almost always fatal within one year of diagnosis.

Private Finance Initiatives

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he is taking to encourage private finance initiatives in local government, and if he will make a statement. [41095]

Mr. Curry: A year ago we announced a first package of measures under the private finance initiative, whose aim was to encourage joint ventures between local authorities and the private sector, and the disposal of surplus assets. We are continuing to implement and develop those proposals. Today, I can announce another set of changes to the capital finance rules to encourage further private sector involvement in the upgrading and, when necessary, replacement of local authority facilities. I am also announcing new research into the operation of joint public and private sector ventures.

The rule changes I am announcing will increase from 50 per cent. to 90 per cent. the usable proportion of receipts from the sales of county farms for two years from 1 April 1996, as announced in the rural White Paper; increase from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. the usable proportion of receipts from the sale of educational assets for two years from 1 April 1996; increase from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. from 1 April 1996 the usable proportion of receipts from the sale of shares in education companies; reduce the capital cost for authorities when they enter into "design, build, finance and operate" type contracts for the replacement or upgrading by the private sector of facilities such as schools, leisure centres and theatres; give authorities greater scope for financing the replacement of these facilities out of the proceeds of their sale, by a number of rule changes whereby authorities can take account of the cost of replacement assets in calculating set-aside, including relaxations in respect of the treatment of leased assets; remove disincentives to the dual use of such facilities by an authority and the private sector; reduce the capital cost of equipment replacement contracts, making it easier, for example, for authorities to use energy services packages which improve energy efficiency and reduce energy costs.

I hope to publish draft regulations embodying these changes within the next few weeks, and to lay them before the House, following consultation with interested parties, so that they can come into effect by 1 April 1996. In parallel with this consultation, I hope that further changes can be developed to extend the "design, build, finance and operate" concept to virtually the full range of local authority capital expenditure.

The new research into the working of the private finance initiative, commissioned by my Department and to be carried out by Coopers and Lybrand, will establish the nature and extent of authorities' involvement in joint companies through a questionnaire sent to all English local authorities. This will be followed by an investigation in detail of the role of companies in a number of case-study local authorities.

In addition to a report on the research findings, it is intended that the study will lead to the publication of a good practice guide, designed to help local authorities in developing private sector partnerships through the medium of companies.

Authorities' responses to the private finance initiative have been very encouraging. There is now much greater consciousness of what private finance can achieve, improving local authority facilities and services. The Treasury's private finance panel has worked with the local authority associations to prepare a consultation paper drawing authorities attention to the scope for such action. The setting up of the local government public private partnerships programme, with its own staff to help authorities find the most effective opportunities, is a welcome further step.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment is making a separate announcement about the specific implications for private finance in education. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is also making an announcement.

Nitrate Vulnerable Zones

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State what progress has been made by the independent review panel commissioned to consider further written representations from consultees dissatisfied with the Government's response, published in May, to the consultation on proposed nitrate vulnerable zones. [41096]

Mr. Gummer: The independent review panel, chaired by Mr. Terence Etherton QC, has completed its work. Today my right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Wales and I have published the panel's report. It is being sent to all those who submitted further written representations to the panel.

We are impressed by the quality of the report and, subject to resolution of the issues which it recommends us to consider further, including with the National Rivers Authority, we intend to be guided by its recommendations.

The panel received 87 submissions relating to 29 of the 72 proposed nitrate vulnerable zones. It has considered these submissions to assess whether the Government's published methodology has been correctly and consistently applied in drawing up the boundaries of the proposed zones. The report presents the panel's views on the case made by each objector, in relation to a specific proposed zone, and makes recommendations for Government to consider. It also presents the arguments for and against the proposed surface water zone at Nayland, and the panel's conclusions on the proposed designation. Furthermore, the report also discusses various issues of principle raised in the submissions received by the panel.

The panel has had a difficult task in dealing with a great deal of information in a relatively short period of time and we are grateful for its endeavours.

I am placing copies of the panel's report in the Library.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Heritage Green Paper

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to publish the Green Paper on heritage announced by her predecessor, the right hon. Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell), at the annual dinner of the Architects Association. [38749]

Mr. Sproat: I hope to publish the Green Paper around the end of the year.

Buildings of Historical Importance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many buildings listed as of historical importance were cleared of such listing and demolished in each of the past five years in Humberside and the three counties of Yorkshire; if she will list locations; and if she will make a statement. [39573]

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for controls over the demolition of listed buildings rests with the local planning authorities and the Department of the Environment. The Department has provided the following details of the number of listed building consents granted for the total demolition of a listed building in Humberside and the three counties of Yorkshire:

1991: 8

1992: 2

1993: 6

1994: 1

1995: 3 (up to 31 February 1995)

It is not possible to say how many of these consents have been implemented and information on the location of the buildings is not readily available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many buildings of historical importance were renovated, and at what cost, in each of the past five years in Humberside and each of the three counties of Yorkshire; how many of these were industrial buildings; if she will list the locations of each; and if she will make a statement. [39481]

Mr. Sproat: Information on the total number of historic buildings renovated during a given period is not available. Government funding for the repair of historic buildings in England is channelled through English Heritage. All repair grants offered by English Heritage to buildings and monuments of outstanding national importance are listed in its publications, "Grants 1984–92", "Grants 1992–93 and "Grant 1993–94", copies of which are available in the Library. I will arrange for a copy of "Grants 1994–95" to be placed in the Libraries of the House when it is published.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many buildings listed as being of special architectural or historical importance are currently located in Humberside and each of the three counties of Yorkshire; how many of these (a) have been and (b) are currently subject to grant aid; if she will list the locations of each; and if she will make a statement. [39482]

Mr. Sproat: Until the statutory lists of buildings of special architectural or historic interest are computerised next year, details of the number of listed buildings in specific areas are not readily available. Government funding for the repair of historic buildings in England is channelled through English Heritage. All repair grants offered by English Heritage in respect of buildings and monuments of outstanding national importance are listed in its publications, "Grants 1984–92, "Grants 1992–93" and "Grants 1993–94", copies of which are available in the Library. I will arrange for a copy of "Grants 1994–95 to be placed in the Library when it is published.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much of the expenditure on the occupied royal palaces in each year since 1986 has been in respect of (a) the exceptional work started in 1987–88 and (b) the Windsor fire. [38858]

Mr. Sproat: The costs of the exceptional work associated with the rewiring of Windsor castle are:

	£ million
1986–87 to 1990–91	13.87
1991–92	4.29
1992–93	6.41
1993–94	3.18
1994–95	0.46

Figures for each year between 1986–87 and 1990–91 are not available.

Since the Windsor castle fire in November 1992, the following amount has been spent from grant in aid on restoration work:

	£ million
1992–93	1.16
1993–94	1.86

Mr. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was expenditure on the occupied royal palaces in 1994–95 and in 1984–85; and what principal elements of cost account for the difference. [38859]

Mr. Sproat: Expenditure on the occupied royal palaces as shown in the 1990 report of the Royal Trustees was £11.2 million—equivalent to £18.3 million at 1994–95 prices. In 1994–95 it was £20.5 million. Grant in aid in 1994–95 included £2.7 million for exceptional costs associated with the restoration of Windsor castle, £2 million for the installation of automatic fire detection equipment in the occupied palaces, and £2.1 million for items such as rates and VAT which were not included in the 1984–85 allocation.

Defence of Britain Project

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list by location (a) the world war II pill-boxes that will be saved under her defence of Britain project and (b) those that are deemed not worth saving; and if she will make a statement. [39058]

Mr. Sproat: The primary aim of the defence of Britain project, which is being part funded by my Department, is to compile a database of 20th century military defences in the United Kingdom. Completion of the database will take several years and, when completed, will be used as a planning and research tool. English Heritage is represented on the project management panel and is also carrying out a thematic survey of defence structures in tandem with the defence of Britain project. Any structures considered to be of national architectural or historic importance will be recommended for listing when English Heritage's survey is complete.

Elizabethan Dove-cote (Barnburgh)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will ask English Heritage to consider the preservation of the Elizabethan dove-cote on British Coal land in the parish of Barnburgh, Doncaster, in the county of South Yorkshire; and if she will make a statement. [39516]

Mr. Sproat: This dove-cote is, in fact, already listed at grade II. As such, any proposals which would affect its architectural or historic interest would require listed building consent. I understand that the development proposals for the adjoining land will not, in any case, affect the dove-cote and that the local planning authority is anxious to preserve its historic setting.

National Lottery Funds

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what is the interest accruing to the Exchequer from those parts of awards from national lottery funds which have been allocated but not yet disbursed for each of the last 12 months; [39744]

(2) what extra projects have been funded by the interest accruing to the Exchequer from those parts of awards from national lottery funds which have been allocated but not yet disbursed for each of the last 12 months. [39745]

Mr. Sproat: The national lottery distribution fund is maintained under the control of the Secretary of State for National Heritage. All money paid into the fund not immediately required for distribution is paid over to the national debt commissioners and invested by them in accordance with Treasury directions. All interest accruing on the fund as a whole is added back and reinvested. It is not possible to identify separately projects which have been supported from this interest. I have set out the interest which accrued on the fund as a whole for the 10 full months since the start of the lottery.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage for what grant-giving funds her Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38604]

Mr. Sproat: National lottery funds can partner funds from any source, including other public sector sources, provided other grant schemes do not preclude sector funding in partnership. Lottery money may partner private sector contributions, but cannot count as such.

Proceeds from the national lottery are classified as general Government expenditure, because, under the terms of section 21 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the national lottery distribution fund is under the control and management of the Secretary of State. However, the Government do not seek to control the spending of this fund since it does not affect the burden of taxation on the economy. National lottery proceeds are not, therefore, brought within the public expenditure control total.

Information on schemes which seek exclusively non-public sector funding in partnership is not held centrally. Officials are collating this information and I will ensure that details are placed in the Official Report in due course.

SCOTLAND

Barnacle Geese

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department has taken to monitor the one-year voluntary pilot management to protect barnacle geese in the Solway area; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the scheme. [37243]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The one-year pilot for the Solway barnacle goose management scheme was undertaken by Scottish Natural Heritage to address conflicts between farmers and barnacle geese in the Solway area.

SNH has reported that the operation and monitoring of the scheme have shown that the approach adopted has been successful and has had the general support and participation of most local farmers.

Approval has now been given to the continuation of the project as a three-year demonstration scheme to build on the work already undertaken; SNH will continue to monitor and report on the development of the scheme.

NHS Budget

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on underspending in the NHS budget in Scotland for each year since 1989–90, indicating the extent to which such underspend was re-invested in the NHS in the following year; [38500]

(2) what was the total underspend or overspend in the NHS budget in Scotland in 1994–95; and if he will provide a breakdown of where the underspend or overspend occurred. [38502]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 October 1995]: The figures showing the underspends in the NHS hospital and community health and family health service budgets in Scotland since 1989–90, and the end year flexibility entitlement for each year, are set out in the table. Family health services overspent in 1993–94. The appropriation accounts for 1994–95 have still to be finalised and the figures for that year are provisional.

£000s

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	(Provisional) 1994–95
Family Health Services	10,392	22,983	2,916	8,039	–20,661	7,836
Hospital and Community Health Services	6,797	20,130	8,175	9,072	56,736	48,236
End year flexibility entitlement	8,409	10,068	—	8,401	29,709	48,492

Family health services are demand led and funded from non-cash limited provision. Underdrawings against this provision are not available for redistribution in subsequent years. Most underdrawings on the cash-limited provision for hospital and community health services are available for redistribution though in earlier years the eligibility criteria were more restrictive.

Underdrawings on the cash-limited hospital and community health services comprise mainly health board and NHS trust carry-forward balances. In the interests of sensible financial management, boards may carry-forward an element of their underdrawings. Once boards' annual accounts have been audited, the carry-forward balances, after parliamentary approval, will be formally allocated back to individual health boards, together with any additional resources secured from central underdrawings which in 1995–96 amounts to £16.3 million.

A similar procedure is applied to NHS trusts.

Health boards and NHS trusts can utilise their carry-forward funds to purchase patient care and for capital projects. The funds distributed from central underdrawings are to be used for local initiatives with the emphasis on pump-priming initiatives in priority areas particularly mental health, cardio and cerebro vascular disease, and cancer.

Scabies (Dykebar Hospital)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action has been taken by the chief executive for the NHS in Scotland to ensure that the risk of a further epidemic of scabies is minimised at Dykebar hospital, Paisley. [39164]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust has taken appropriate action to confine an outbreak that affected a handful of people at Dykebar hospital, Paisley.

Public Bodies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each non-departmental public body, research council, executive agency, board, trust, public body and other organisation to which he has a right to make (a) appointments and (b) nominations; and if he will make a statement on the equivalent figures for 1980. [39222]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The list of non-departmental public bodies, NHS bodies and nationalised industries to which I make appointments is contained in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies". The total number of appointments made to those bodies sponsored by the Scottish Office at 1 September 1994—the latest date for which figures are available—was 3,567, of which 3,253 were made by Ministers. This compares with 5,013 in 1983, the earliest date for which comparable figures are available, of which 3,818 were made by Ministers. In respect of executive agencies, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 9 February 1995, Official Report, columns 235-36. In addition I make a number of appointments jointly with other Ministers to some executive agencies and to some non-departmental public bodies of other Departments. This information is not held centrally by my Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to visit Scottish universities over the coming year. [38885]

Mr. Raymond S. Roberton: My right hon. Friend intends to visit universities, and other higher education institutions, throughout the year. I also plan to visit higher education institutions on appropriate occasions in the coming year.

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the chairman or chief executive of Scottish Homes to discuss their accountability to him, his Ministers, Parliament, elected parliamentarians and the public; and if he will make a statement. [39190]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend and I meet the board of Scottish Homes from time to time to discuss a range of issues. I next plan to meet the board early next year. Scottish Homes is accountable to my right hon. Friend and, through him, to the House.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the arrangements for reporting possible cases of misuse of funds, maladministration and negligence involving Scottish Homes to (a) an independent ombudsman, (b) their internal auditors and (c) their external auditors; and if he will make a statement. [39174]

Mr. Robertson: Scottish Homes has a published complaints procedure. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names, previous occupations, payments or allowances and next date for reappointment of the (a) chairman, (b) vice-chairman, and (c) members of the board of Scottish Homes. [39186]

Mr. Robertson: The information requested is set out in the table.

John D. Spencely	Chairman, Reiach and Hall Architects	£6,830	1 April 1995–31 March 1999
Peter McKinlay (Ex-officio)	Chief Executive, Scottish Homes	£83,490	7 October 1991–31 December 1999

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the procedures for dismissing the chairman and chief executive of Scottish Homes. [39187]

Mr. Robertson: Schedule 1, paragraph 5(3) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 sets out the circumstances in which my right hon. Friend may remove a member of the Scottish Homes board—other than the chief executive—from office. A decision to terminate the appointment of the chief executive would be a matter for the Scottish Homes board.

Paisley Group

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the discussion he had with representatives of the Paisley group during his visit to the town during September; what is his assessment of the scope to progress the initiatives discussed; what is his assessment of the potential to develop a partnership approach aimed at enhancing a positive perception of the town and the surrounding area; and when he next plans to meet representatives of the group and its parliamentary representatives to discuss possible actions and initiatives. [39182]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I had a useful discussion with representatives of the Paisley group on 12 September and I encouraged them to develop their ideas and consult other agencies which have a potentially valuable role to play in improving perceptions of Paisley. There is clearly scope for enhancing Paisley's image by promoting the town's many strengths and a partnership approach is the most effective way of doing this. For that reason, I have written to the group encouraging it to build on other initiatives already under way in Paisley and to co-ordinate its activities to achieve the maximum impact. I have asked Renfrewshire Enterprise to meet the group and consider how it may assist them.

Higher Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each higher education institution in Scotland the library budget for 1995–96 together with the numbers of current undergraduate and postgraduate students and staff. [38879]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Information on budgets for the new 1995–96 academic session is not collected or available centrally. Higher education institutions are free to determine the allocations they make for support services from the various resources—including Scottish Higher Education Funding Council grants and tuition fees—they receive for teaching and research.

Student numbers and staffing for the new academic session are also not yet known. Our expenditure plans for 1995–96—as set out in the departmental report "Serving Scotland's Needs" (Cm 2814)—assumed 118,000 full-time equivalent students at HEIs funded by SHEFC.

Information on actual expenditure and numbers of students and staff will be published in due course.

Asthma

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met members of the National Asthma Campaign to discuss air quality reporting and other concerns of the group. [38890]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has had no such meeting with members of the National Asthma Campaign.

Tree Preservation Order System

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the effectiveness of the tree preservation order system in Scotland with particular reference to the prosecution of those who fell or pollard trees prior to submitting planning applications to develop on such sites, or when such applications are under consideration; and if he will make a statement. [39161]

Mr. Kynoch: I propose to initiate a review of the tree preservation order system in Scotland in 1996. The review will be wide ranging and will consider all aspects of the operation of the present system.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what methods Scottish Natural Heritage uses to calculate the number of sites of special scientific interest damaged in Scotland each year. [39239]

Mr. Kynoch: The definition used in categorising damage to sites in Scotland are set out in the annual report of Scottish Natural Heritage, a copy of which is in the Library.

Scottish Natural Heritage is adopting the principles laid down in the "Common Standards for Monitoring" report—Joint Nature Conservation Committee, 1993.

Paisley Pattern Goods

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to develop the manufacture of paisley pattern goods within the town of Paisley as a potential attraction for inward investment and a potential source of international marketing; and if he will make a statement. [39179]

Mr. Kynoch: Local economic initiatives generally fall to be pursued by the local enterprise companies. My right hon. Friend fully supports the current range of activities being taken by Renfrewshire Enterprise and its partners to build on the strategy established by the paisley pattern initiative and to identify and develop commercial opportunities arising from the link between Paisley and the paisley pattern.

Joint Learning Disability Strategy Conference

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which companies and organisations attended the joint learning disability strategy for provider agencies conference, organised by Greater Glasgow health board and Strathclyde regional council, and held at the Garfield hotel, Cumbernauld road, Stepps, in September. [39758]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The conference held on 20 September was attended as follows:

Grass (Hay and Silage)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total area of grass for hay and silage recorded in the June agricultural census within the boundary of the Machair of the Uists, Barra and Vatersay environmentally sensitive area. [39837]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: In 1994, the total area of grass for moving for hay and silage production was 654.2 hectares. This figures includes an estimate for minor holdings.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS trusts in Scotland have their board meetings (a) fully open to the public, (b) partially open to the public and (c) closed to the public. [39398]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The information is as follows:

(a) Open to the public: 6

(b) Partially open to the public: 16

(c) Closed to the public: 25

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much (a) NHS trusts and (b) health boards spent on public relations in the previous financial year. [39404]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1995]: This information is not held centrally.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources he has made available to promote the encouragement of liaison between parents and voluntary organisations and named persons' involvement as in accordance with the university of Edinburgh report to the Scottish Education Department on children with special educational needs. [40171]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Scottish Office has committed considerable resources to the production of guidance for all those involved in the processes connected with records of needs to encourage the full involvement of parents and where appropriate voluntary organisations.

The Scottish Office publication, "A Parent's Guide to Special Educational Needs", provides relevant information and guidance for parents, including an extensive list of appropriate contacts in the voluntary sector. Further, more detailed, guidance will be published shortly.

The Scottish Office has also helped the national voluntary organisation, Children in Scotland, to establish the special needs forum, which provides information and training about special educational needs for parents and voluntary organisations. In 1994, with financial assistance from the Scottish Office, Children In Scotland published "A Special Partnership", a guidebook for named persons and parents to help them to participate more effectively in the recording processes.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish children with specific speech or language disorders are having their special educational needs met in residential establishments in England as a result of the lack of appropriate provision in Scotland. [40172]

Mr. Robertson: The information requested is not held centrally.

Private Patients

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by trust in each region, details of income from private patients for 1993–94 and 1994–95 (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of total trust income. [39949]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information, grouped by health board area, is set out in the table. The figures have been taken from NHS trust annual accounts. The figures for 1994–95 are provisional. Figures for Central Scotland Healthcare NHS trust include those for Royal Scottish National Hospital NHS trust, which dissolved on formation of the new trust on 1 October 1994. Figures for West Lothian NHS trust include charges to overseas visitors.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 July, Official Report, columns 1119–20, if he will now confirm and update the figures on private patient income. [39954]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures on private patient income for the period up to 1993–94 were provided in the previous answer of 24 November 1994, Official Report, columns 333–34. These figures were confirmed as final in the answer of 18 July, Official Report, columns 1119–20. Income figures for private patients for 1994–95 are provisional, and are set out in the table. The figure for Lothian in 1994–95 includes overseas patients, and can therefore not be compared directly with those for earlier years.

Health Boards (Audited Accounts)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the underspend for the year 1994–95, (b) the initial reallocation for the year 1995–96 and (c) the revised reallocation for 1995–96 for each health board. [40313]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The audited accounts for health boards for 1994–95 have recently been received and are currently being analysed. Provisional figures for the underspend for each health board based on these accounts are set out in the table. There is only one reallocation which derives from these underspends, subject to parliamentary approval. For the year 1995–96 the reallocation is likely to be the major part of the underspend for 1994–95, but the precise figures have yet to be finalised.

Barlinnie Prison

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress of the procurator fiscal's investigation into the report on prisoners who were allegedly beaten by prison officers in Her Majesty's prison, Barlinnie. [40314]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The procurators fiscal at Glasgow and Hamilton were responsible for the investigation of complaints by prisoners of assaults at, and on the way to, Barlinnie prison, Glasgow, which were the subject of a BBC Scotland television programme "Frontline Scotland" on 12 October 1995. The programme looked at the complaints of three prisoners. The evidence in each of these cases has been considered by Crown counsel in the normal way.

In the case of William McKay, who alleged that he had been assaulted in January 1994, there was insufficient evidence to justify criminal proceedings against any person, and in October 1994 Crown counsel instructed that no criminal proceedings should be taken. The governor and Mr. McKay were told of that decision.

In the case of James McGhee, who complained of assault, it has not as yet been possible to establish who was responsible for his injuries and Crown counsel has given the procurator fiscal instructions to pursue further lines of inquiry. Crown counsel has also given the procurator fiscal instructions concerning the complaint of Thomas Monaghan. It would not be appropriate for any further details to be given at this time in relation to the complaints of Mr. McGhee and Mr. Monaghan.

HEALTH

National Blood Service

15. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce his final decision on the reorganisation of the National Blood Service; and if he will make a statement. [38226]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce the decision as soon as possible. We need to be fully satisfied that any proposals that are adopted set the right direction for the future development of the National Blood Service.

London Initiative Zone

17. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on implementing London initiative zone projects in the north Thames region. [38228]

Mr. Malone: Since the London initiative zone was set up in 1993, an additional £124 million has been invested in developing primary care services through LIZ projects in north London. A substantial six-year programme is now under way to improve general practitioner surgeries and health centres, to increase the number of staff, and to provide better services for local people.

Trust Chief Executives (Income)

18. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average income of the top 10 highest paid chief executives. [38229]

Mr. Malone: Information on national health service chief executives' remuneration is published locally in all NHS employing authorities' annual accounts, but is not collated centrally.

Total Purchasing Initiative

19. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what interest GPs have shown in the Government's total purchasing initiative. [38230]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities and fundholding general practitioners have shown considerable interest in this initiative. That is why we announced that we would extend the number of pilot projects in England from 51 to around 70 in total. We have also decided to extend the formal evaluation programme from two years to three.

Doctors and Dentists

20. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors and dentists undertook national health service work at the most recent count; and what was the comparable figure in 1979. [38231]

Mr. Malone: The number of doctors and dentists undertaking national health service work has risen by 31 per cent., from 72,270 in 1979 to 94,730 in 1994, the most recent year for which figures are available.

Tameside Hospital (Secure Accommodation)

21. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about provision of secure accommodation for disturbed patients in Tameside hospital. [38232]

Mr. Bowis: The Tameside development is one of seven high dependency units in the north-west region which, with medium secure units, will provide levels of care according to the security needs of the individual patient.

Frozen Human Embryos

22. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to safeguard surplus frozen human embryos from destruction. [38233]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 23 February 1995 Official Report, column 325. A report by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority about the statutory storage period for embryos is under consideration by Ministers.

Nursing Profession

23. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to improve morale within the nursing profession. [38234]

Mr. Sackville: Well managed trusts and other national health service employers in the United Kingdom are fully aware of the importance of nurse morale in the delivery of high-quality patient care. NHS trusts now have greater freedoms than ever before to develop local pay and working arrangements which reflect more properly the valuable contribution of highly motivated and skilled nurses.

Evidence of the present high nursing morale is reflected in the host of nursing-led initiatives currently in progress. These range from nurse-led clinics and nurse-led out-patient services, nursing beds for the chronically ill, pre-admission clinics, eight nurse prescribing schemes and the expanding range of nurse specialist posts including those of nurse practitioners.

GP Fundholding

24. Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about GP fundholding. [38235]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health gave earlier.

Breast Cancer Services

25. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's response to the third report of the Health Select Committee on breast cancer services (HC324). [38236]

Mr. Sackville: The Government's response to the Health Select Committee's third report on breast cancer services was laid before Parliament on 18 October 1995, Cm 3007. Copies of the response are also available in the Library.

Berkshire Health Commission

26. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the decision of Berkshire health commission to deny treatments previously made available on the national health service. [38237]

Mr. Malone: Berkshire health commission has issued a public discussion document setting out its proposed health care purchasing priorities for 1996–97. There are no blanket bans on treatments; each case will be considered on the basis of clinical need. Any significant changes in local services arising from the proposals will be the subject of further public consultation.

NHS (Research and Development)

27. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is now being spent annually on research and development in the NHS; and what were the comparable figures for the years 1975 to 1979. [38238]

Mr. Malone: In 1994–95, national health service research and research related expenditure, including that of the Department of Health, was estimated to be £385 million.

No comparable figures are available for the years 1975–79.

Waiting Times (City of Leicester)

28. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current waiting time in the city of Leicester for minor surgery. [38239]

Mr. Malone: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. Available data about waiting times for hospitals in Leicester can be found in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest published figures are for March 1995.

Private Finance Initiative

29. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the boards of hospital trusts about the costs incurred preparing and presenting bids under the private finance initiative. [38240]

Mr. Sackville: None. It is for the private sector bidders to prepare and present their bids, and they bear their own costs in doing so. The national health service benefits from more cost-effective projects.

Glaucoma

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are currently receiving treatment for glaucoma. [38157]

Mr. Sackville: More than 25,500 glaucoma patients received hospital in-patient or day care treatment last year, an increase of 48 per cent. since 1989–90. The number of out-patients or patients being treated for glaucoma by their general practitioners is not available centrally.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ill-health retirement pensions were awarded to NHS staff incapacitated by chronic fatigue syndrome in each of the last five years; and how many of these awards were made within two years of the disease being diagnosed for each of the last five years. [38575]

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Jon Owen Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions it falls within my area of responsibility.

The information is not available in the format requested, because the Agency did not maintain separate records about CFS applications before 15 August 1994. Since then the Agency has approved 19 cases as meeting our criteria for permanent incapacity. Of these, 11 awards were made within 2 years of the first diagnosis of CFS.

Departmental Staff Travel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many return trips during the last 12 months have been taken by his Department's staff between London and Leeds (a) per week, (b) per month and (c) annually; and at what cost. [39004]

Mr. Sackville: The total number of return trips by Department of Health staff between London and Leeds in the 12 months to September 1995 is estimated to be 4,730. The estimated travel costs of these journeys is £665,000. Relocation is expected to produce net savings of around £10 million per year after taking account of travel and other additional expenses.

Angioplasty

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority for the latest available year the number of patients who received balloon angioplasty, the initial success rate percentage and the percentage of patients returned to their doctors during the following six months with angina. [39489]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

The estimated number of finished consultant episodes for transluminal balloon angioplasty of the coronary artery in National Health Service hospitals in England for 1993–94:

Region of treatment	1993–94

National Blood Authority

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the National Blood Authority will be expected to demonstrate a 6 per cent. return on capital under the same arrangements as NHS trusts. [39792]

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority is expected to achieve a 6 per cent. return on capital on the same basis as other health authorities.

Dental Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide the figures for the number of patients who are registered with dental practices in the Doncaster family health services area on (a) 30 June 1992, (b) 30 June 1993, (c) 30 June 1994 and (d) 30 June 1995. [39446]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

General Dental Services: Number of patients registered in Doncaster-Family Health Services Authority

Year	All patients
30 June 1992	173,328
30 June 1993	191,241
30 June 1994	193,062
30 June 1995	187,940

Private Patients

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 July, Official Report, columns 1119–20, if he will now confirm and update the figures on private patient income. [39953]

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1994–95 are not yet available.

Osteopaths Act 1993

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to give effect to the provisions of the Osteopaths Act 1993. [39908]

Mr. Sackville: Work on establishing the General Osteopathic Council is proceeding well and we expect to be able to announce its membership shortly.

Information Technology Systems

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many different information technology systems are currently in use within the NHS for data storage and retrieval; if standardised software and hardware exist for such information storage and retrieval; and what guidance his Department has issued in relation to common information technology systems. [40696]

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of information technology systems in use in the national health service is not available centrally. The NHS Executive has developed a standards enforcement in procurement, STEP, process to ensure that information technology systems within the NHS in England conform to agreed IT standards. "NHS IT Standards in Procurement", issued on 1 April 1995 to all chief executives of NHS trusts in England contains statements of policy on standards in different areas of IT. This is the definitive statement of the nationally agreed standards and recommendations relevant to all aspects of IT in the NHS. Within these guidelines, NHS trusts are free to implement systems which best meet their individual needs.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits of his Department in 1995–96. [41092]

Mr. Dorrell: The cash limit for class XII vote 1—hospital, community health, family health services and related services, England—will be increased by £3,129,000 from £26,536,835,000 to £26,539,964,000. This allows for an increase of £4,465,000 in respect of a transfer from class XII, vote 2—Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England— for work on publicity campaigns, £2,986,000; for work of the Public Health Laboratory Service relating to immunoglobulin products, £810,000; and for the work of the Medical Devices Agency, £669,000. The overall increase is partially offset by £1,336,000 made up of transfers to class XIV, vote 12—hospital, community health, family health, part, and other health services, Scotland—for the work of the Prescription Pricing Authority, £840,000; and the London post-graduate teaching hospitals services, £246,000; and to class VII, vote 2—regeneration and countryside, England—for the urban programme, £250,000.

The cash limit for class XII, vote 2—Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England—will be reduced by £4,570,000, from £1,283,948,000 to £1,279,378,000. This reduction allows for transfer of £4,465,000 to class XII, vote 1 as mentioned above and £105,000, running costs to class XIX, vote 3—Privy Council Office—for the central drug co-ordinating unit.

The non-voted cash limit for supplementary credit approvals for personal social services—DoH/LACAP—in England is to be increased by £1,305,000 from £26,700,000 to £28,005,000 in respect of the take-up of entitlement to carry forward of underspends from 1994–95 financial year under the end-year flexibility arrangements as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82.

The Department's gross running cost limit will be reduced by £105,000 from £239,455,000 to £239,350,000 as mentioned above.

All increases will either be offset by savings, increased receipts or transfers to or from other votes or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many GPs currently operate a fundholding budget; how many patients and how much money is involved; and if he will make a statement. [38646]

Mr. Malone: More than 10,400 general practitioners in England are currently fundholders. They serve more than 20 million patients—41 per cent. of the population—and control £3.4 billion of national health service resources.

National Breast Cancer Campaign

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet a delegation from the National Breast Cancer Campaign to discuss increasing funding for research into the disease. [38592]

Mr. Sackville: If the hon. Member writes setting out his proposals, we would be happy to consider such a request.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the policy of the Medicines Control Agency in respect of consultation with consumers of dietary supplements prior to the finalisation and publication of the proposed Medicines Act leaflet, MAL 8; and what consultation has so far been undertaken with such consumers and practitioners organisations, with particular reference to the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy; [40105]

(2) if he will make it his policy to protect the diversity and availability of vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements currently available to consumers by ensuring that the proposed Medicines Act leaflet, MAL 8, does not impose new regulatory burdens or systems of compulsory pharmaceutical licensing on manufacturers of such products; and what is the extent to which the provisions of MAL 8 will be consistent with the Government's policy of deregulation; [40106]

(3) if he will make a statement indicating the extent to which the provisions of the proposed Medicines Act leaflet, MAL 8, will limit or otherwise affect the sale of dietary supplements currently sold legally; [40107]

(4) if he will make it his policy that in interpreting article 1 of directive 65/65/EEC (a) foods, (b) vitamins, (c) minerals and (d) other products currently lawfully sold as a foodstuff or dietary supplement will not be reclassified as medicinal product by virtue solely of their capacity to restore normality to physiological functions; [40108]

(5) in what circumstances vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements currently lawfully sold as foodstuffs or dietary supplements will be reclassified as medicinal products requiring pharmaceutical product licences under the provisions of article 1 of directive 65/65/EEC. [40109]

Mr. Sackville: Medicines Act leaflet, MAL 8, provides guidance for industry on what is a medicinal product. It has no status in law. The Medicines Control Agency has discussed its proposals for updating it with the Proprietary Association of Great Britain, the British Herbal Manufacturers' Association, the Natural Medicines Manufacturers Association, the Health Foods Manufacturers' Association and the Cosmetic Toiletry and Perfumery Association. The proposals impose no new regulatory burdens on manufacturers of vitamins, minerals, and other dietary supplements currently sold legally.

Products which are food, or which are foods for particular nutritional purposes, are considered under food safety legislation. Products sold as foodstuffs or dietary supplements are not necessarily considered as products to which the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Etc) Regulations 1994 apply solely because they have the capacity to restore normality to physiological functions. A product currently sold as a foodstuff or dietary supplement would be considered licensable only if, after careful assembly of all the facts of the individual case, it was considered to be a medicinal product to which the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Etc) Regulations 1994 applied.

Paracetamol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to promote comethiamol to doctors and pharmacists as a safe alternative to paracetamol; [40402]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of deaths which could be avoided each year if comethiamol were to be sold and prescribed instead of paracetamol; [40401]

(3) what research his Department has done on increasing the safety of paracetamol by adding methionine. [40403]

Mr. Sackville: Paracetamol is an effective pain killer which is safe at the dosage recommended on the labelling. Comethiamol is a combination of paracetamol and methionine and is currently available from pharmacists as Pameton.

It is not appropriate for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health to promote the use of a particular medicine. It is not correct to describe comethiamol as a safe alternative to paracetamol. The methionine component is likely to be of value only if an overdose is taken. People who use paracetamol as recommended would therefore unnecessarily be exposed to any side-effects the methionine might have, without deriving any benefit.

Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the incidence of Creutzfeldt Jakob disease in farmers; [40381]

(2) what recent information he has received from the spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee on the subject of Creutzfeldt Jakob disease in dairy farmers. [40380]

Mr. Sackville: The spongiform encephalopathy advisory committees, SEAC, reviewed the reported suspect case of Creutzfeldt Jakob disease, CJD, in a farmer who has had a case of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, BSE, in his beef suckler herd. Three previous CJD cases have been confirmed in dairy farmers whose herds had had cases of BSE.

The committee concluded that it was difficult to explain this as simply a chance phenomenon. There is a statistical excess of cases in cattle farmers compared with the general population but the absolute risk, even for cattle farmers, is extremely low at about two cases per million per year. There may be other explanations for such an association besides infection with BSE, and the committee noted that there are no reported cases in other occupational groups such as veterinarians who might be expected to be similarly exposed. They also noted that surveillance of CJD elsewhere in Europe has shown a similar incidence of CJD in farmers, including dairy farmers, in countries with no or very few cases of BSE. They therefore felt that it was important to undertake further epidemiological studies to detect any particular risk factors which might be involved, and reiterated their advice that the UK cases of CJD in cattle farmers and the strain of the agent recovered from them should be studied in detail.

The committee has asked for further work to be done, but has not altered its advice to Government on the precautions necessary to protect either the public health, including farmers, or animal health.

NHS Finance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) surpluses and (b) deficits were recorded by each district health authority in 1994–95. [40660]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not yet available.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 28 March to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) Official Report, column 568, what were the results of the market tests in the clinical and clinical support services listed; and if he will list the market testing plans. [40624]

Mr. Sackville: The previous plans, as placed in the Library, listed 58 proposals for market testing of 20 separate clinical support services, involving 15 trusts. The National Health Service Executive has been notified that eight of these trusts have completed market testing of a total of 11 such services, the outcome of which is shown in the table.

NHS Trust	Service	Contractor

Transplant Surgery

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients received transplant surgery for each organ in each health region for the year ended (a) 31 December 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994 and for the latest months for which data are available. [40620]

Mr. Sackville: The number of transplants carried out by organ and health region will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 17 July, Official Report, column 432, on transplant surgery, if he will provide comparable figures for 1992, 1993 and the latest month for which data are available. [40653]

Mr. Sackville: Information will be placed in the Library for the years ending 31 December 1992, 1993 and to 30 September 1995. Heart, lung and liver transplantation are funded supra-regionally. Therefore, many patients appear on waiting lists in regions other than the one in which they are resident. This gives rise to variation between the numbers shown waiting in each region.

Bed Blocking

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to collect data on bed blocking. [40729]

Mr. Sackville: Proposals to collect information routinely about delays in hospital discharge are currently being considered.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 432, on market testing, if he will update the list of contracts awarded to the private sector. [40623]

Mr. Sackville: The following further contracts have been awarded to the private sector.

	Company
NHS Pensions Agency: Information Systems Development	Capita
Storage and distribution of Printed Material	Two-Ten Communications
Security Guarding in Richmond House	Burns International Security Services
Various Minor Accommodation Matters	Ferguson Bucknall Austin

Aggregate information on tender values for the Department's programme to September 1994 were published in a Special Report of the "Market Testing Bulletin" on 9 January 1995.

Residential Care

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost in a full year of raising the threshold for contribution to the cost of residential care for the elderly from £8,000 to (a) £10,000, (b) £12,000, (c) £14,000 and (d) £16,000. [40769]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 27 October, Official Report, column 853.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39855]

The Attorney-General: The one agency for which I am responsible is Government Property Lawyers. This agency is supervised by the Treasury Solicitor, who meets the chief executive to discuss the work of the agency on a regular basis. I have not myself met the chief executive this year, but I regularly meet the Treasury Solicitor to discuss the work of his Department and, as necessary, the work of Government Property Lawyers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United Kingdom Accreditation Service

Mr. Mans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements have been made with respect to transferring pre-paid fees liabilities from the National Measurement Accreditation Service to the United Kingdom Accreditation Service. [40975]

Mr. Ian Taylor: An initial payment was made on 2 August 1995. Under the terms of the business transfer agreement, a second payment will be made on completion of the closing accounts.

Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for the Department of Trade and Industry's programmes and administration vote—class IV, vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £1,030,000 is being met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Mr. Mans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the establishment of the United Kingdom Accreditation Service. [40974]

Mr. Taylor: The United Kingdom Accreditation Service became operational on 1 August. UKAS has taken over the work of the National Measurement Accreditation Service— formerly part of an executive agency within the Department of Trade and Industry—and the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies, a council of the British Standards Institution. It provides a unified national accreditation service for laboratories performing tests and calibrations as well as bodies undertaking the certification of products, personnel or systems, including environmental management and audit systems.

UKAS has been established as a private sector company limited by guarantee. Its membership comprises bodies which, when taken together, provide a balance of accreditation interests—direct customers, business customers for testing and certification, end-users of products and services and Government. A memorandum of understanding with the Department recognises its unique national role in specified areas of accreditation. UKAS will issue accreditation certificates using the familiar NAMAS and NACCB logos incorporating the Crown, provided that it complies with the terms of a licensing agreement requiring it to operate with integrity and impartiality, and in strict compliance with national and international regulations and standards.

This development follows a public consultation during 1994 on the future provision of accreditation services in the United Kingdom, and the Government's decision in December 1994 to merge NAMAS and NACCB to form a company limited by guarantee in the course of 1995.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will announce the results of the review of the local offices of the Radiocommunications Agency. [40976]

Mr. Ian Taylor: My predecessor accepted the recommendations of an internal review by Coopers and Lybrand not to contract out the enforcement and monitoring work of the agency's local offices. I have recently received, and accepted the findings of, a related efficiency study by PA Consulting Group, which will result in savings of about 2.5 per cent. of the agency's running costs. The PA report proposes a reduction in the number of the agency's representative offices. PA believes that greater concentration of managerial and support staff in fewer locations should improve customers' service levels. The field force of technical staff was found to operate with efficiency comparable to private sector best practice and remain in place throughout the UK and Northern Ireland.

Lloyd's (Resignations)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will regulate, under the Insurance Companies Act 1982, the insurance affairs of those resigning from membership of Lloyd's. [40977]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In view of the changes proposed in Lloyd's reconstruction and renewal plan to the reinsurance arrangements that names must enter into before resigning their membership of Lloyd's, I have reviewed the way in which the Insurance Companies Act should apply to those who resign their membership.

Former members of Lloyd's are technically still carrying on insurance business, in that they are potentially liable to meet claims on policies taken out while they were active underwriting members of the society, until all liabilities on those policies have been extinguished. This remains the case even though policies are being handled by agents. In consequence, former names' insurance activities fall to be regulated by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of part II of the Act, in order to protect the interest of policyholders.

Where names resign having reinsured all their remaining liabilities with Equitas, provided it is authorised and/or with successor syndicates in Lloyd's, the interests of policyholders are fully protected for as long as Equitas and/or Lloyd's, as the case may be, remain solvent and continue to pay policyholders' claims without funds passing through the former names. In the light of the contingent nature of the insurance business being conducted, I should be prepared to make an order under section 68 of the Act which, for as long as these conditions are satisfied, would set the minimum regulatory arrangements consistent with the law. Effectively, these will require only the return of an annual notification of the address of names for communications purposes. Names are, in any case, likely to want to keep in touch with Lloyd's in order to obtain any repayment from surplus funds which might arise in Equitas. I intend to appoint Lloyd's as my agent for the receipt of these returns. In the hypothetical situation of Equitas or Lloyd's ceasing to be solvent, these arrangements will facilitate introduction of such regulation of the former names' insurance activities as I consider will best protect the interests of policyholders at the time.

These arrangements will apply to all those whose resignation from membership of Lloyd's takes effect after today, whether or not they have already given Lloyd's notice of their intention to resign. It would, however, be disproportionate to introduce such arrangements for those who have already effected resignation from Lloyd's, and the requirement to provide annual confirmation of their address will therefore not apply to them. This distinction relates to regulatory requirements only. It does not change the residual contingent responsibilities for insurance of any names, whether or not they have already resigned from Lloyd's.

Natural Engineering Laboratory

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the sale of the National Engineering Laboratory. [39781]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The intention to privatise NEL was announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) on 14 April 1994. An invitation to tender was issued early this year, following which three bids were received.

On 7 August 1995, ASL was selected as the preferred bidder, following extensive evaluation against the Department's objectives for the sale and a wide range of quantitative, technical and financial criteria which demonstrated that its bid represented the best value for money option for the Department. The consideration will be a negative £1.95 million, to be adjusted subsequently in the light of the level of net current assets at completion. All the staff in the undertaking at completion will transfer to ASL.

This represents a highly satisfactory outcome for the Government and for NEL. ASL's strengths complement those of NEL and it proposes to build on all of its activities to enable it to compete successfully in world markets, as well as ensuring that the Department's need for flow measurement under the national measurement system continue to be met.

Employee Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total number of cases of all forms of fraud committed by employees of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies for each year from 1991-92 to 1994-95; and for each these years, what was the total monetary sum (1) misappropriated in such frauds and (2) subsequently recovered. [39129]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The answer is set out in the table:

	Department	Agencies	NDPBs
1991–92
Cases	1	—	—
Value	£100	—	—
Recovered	£100	—	—
1992–93

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people used citizens advice bureaux during (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95.

[40246]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The number of people who visited citizens advice bureaux for each year since 1992–93 is:

Year	Million
1992–93	7.748
1993–94	5.689
1994–94	5.388

Source:
National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux (NACAB) annual reports 1992–93 and 1994–95.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of his Department's total annual budget is spent currently on funding the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux; and what were the figures for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95. [40244]

Mr. Evans: The percentage of the Department of Trade and Industry's total annual budget spent on funding the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, based on the cash plans table published in Cm 2804, in each year since 1992–93 was:

Year	Per cent.
1992–93	0.9
1993–94	1.0
1994–95	0.9
1995–96	0.9

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to increase his Department's annual funding of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux. [40245]

Mr. Evans: It is too early to predict the outcome of the current public expenditure survey so no decisions have yet been taken on the future level of funding of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Illegal European Subsidies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current situation in respect of the repayment of illegal subsidies to Belgium by Beaulieu and its subsidiary Fabelta since the ruling of the European Court of Justice in February 1990; what level of repayment has been made to date; and if he will make a statement. [39441]

Mr. Page: My Department has been informed by the Commission that, in accordance with the Court of Justice's judgment of 21 February 1990, the Belgian Government took action to recover the state aid awarded to the company, which the Commission had decided was incompatible with the common market. By judgment dated 25 February 1994, the commercial court of Ghent required the company to repay the aid with interest, and to pay the costs of the proceedings. The company has appealed but, pending the outcome of the appeal and as required by the judgment of the commercial court, it has paid the relevant amount—Bfr 1,088,898,853—into a ring-fenced account. The Commission and my Department continue to monitor developments closely.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veterinary Agencies

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Central Veterinary Laboratory and the Veterinary Investigation Service. [40973]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 4 May, Official Report, columns 314-16, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) announced the planned merger of the Central Veterinary Laboratory with the Veterinary Investigation Service in England and Wales to create an enlarged and strengthened executive agency. The new agency was launched on 1 October. It will be known as the Veterinary Laboratories Agency.

The VLA is well equipped to provide my Department with a comprehensive range of high-quality veterinary and scientific support and advice, and to meet both strategy and policy objectives in the fields of animal health and welfare, food safety and the environment. The merger will enable the agency to provide a more efficient and integrated service by reducing overheads, providing greater flexibility and exploiting synergies to further research and development, diagnostic services, surveillance and the investigation of new and emerging diseases.

Copies of the agency's framework document have been placed in the Library of the House.

Performance targets for the VLA will be announced at the start of the 1996–97 financial year. The 1995–96 targets announced in April this year for the CVL will continue to apply to the relevant parts of the enlarged agency.

European Fisheries Council

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the European Fisheries Council held on 26 October. [40972]

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 26 October.

The Council agreed new measures to monitor and control fishing effort in western waters from 1 January 1996. Our objectives were to secure arrangements which will be effective in ensuring that fishing activities by all member states in western waters are managed satisfactorily and that fishing effort in these waters is not increased to the detriment of our industry. At the same time, we were concerned to ensure that the arrangements should not impose an excessive burden on the fishing industry. The agreement unanimously approved by the Council of Ministers reflected our concerns and strikes the right balance between the objectives of control and avoidance of excessive regulation. It is the package which I commended to the House on 23 October.

The Council also agreed by qualified majority, with Germany voting against, to continue the provision of Community financial assistance to member states for fisheries enforcement for a further five years when the current arrangements expire at the end of the year. The measures include special assistance for Ireland, as agreed at last December's Fisheries Council, in recognition of the exceptional demands and costs involved in undertaking enforcement in the waters of the Republic of Ireland. These waters include the majority of the Irish box.

Minister welcomed the agreement on straddling and high migratory fish stocks achieved in New York in August. This agreement usefully lays down rules for the effective conservation and management of stocks and I am gratified that the Council endorsed the importance of its early ratification when it opens for signature in December.

The Council discussed the continuing negotiations with Morocco to enable Community fishermen to return to Moroccan waters. Nearly 700 Spanish and Portuguese vessels which formerly fished off Morocco have been confined to port since May. The Council agreed unanimously that payments should be made to the fishermen concerned to offset their losses. This is an exceptional measure applying for a limited period. As it will be funded from within the existing budget, it does not involve new financial provision.

The Council also welcomed a Commission report on progress in implementing the multi-annual guidance programmes and in particular the reductions in fishing capacity that have been achieved. The Commission will now be carrying out wide consultations in preparation for the establishment of the next round of programmes to start in January 1997.

Civil Servants (Travel Allowances)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by civil servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36373]

Mr. Boswell: The following standard rates of motor mileage allowance are payable to staff in core MAFF and PSD who use their own vehicles on official business in 1995–96:

	Up to 1,500 cc	1,501–2,000 cc	Over 2,000 cc
Up to 5,000 miles	36p/mile	45p/mile	48p/mile
Over 5,000 miles	24p/mile	28p/mile	37p/mile

Alternatively, a rate of 24.2p/mile is payable in respect of cars for which only third party insurance is held or where use of the car is not essential for official business. Separate rates are payable to the very small number of staff who ride their own motor cycles on official business.

Agencies have responsibility for these matters and will be replying direct where their position is not covered above.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 August 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on rates of travel allowance which may be claimed by staff in the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (previously the Central Veterinary Laboratory). [36373]

The following standard rates of motor mileage allowance are payable in 1995/96 to staff in the Veterinary Laboratories Agency who use their own vehicles on official business:

Pence per mile	Up to 1500 cc	1501–2000cc	Over 2000 cc
Up to 5000 miles	36	45	48
Over 5000 miles	24	28	37

Alternatively, a rate of 24.2 pence per mile is payable in respect of cars for which only third party insurance is held or where use of the car is not essential for official business. Separate rates are payable to any staff who ride their own motorcycles on official business.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your questions regarding travel and subsistence costs for civil servants have been passed to me to respond to with regard to this Executive Agency. As you may know, the MHS was established on 1 April this year. Therefore, we have no figures to give you for previous financial years. Any such costs that were incurred in setting up this Agency prior to 1 April will be included in core-MAFF's reply. [36373]

The MHS transferred the majority of its circa 1000 staff from local authorities. These staff brought with them under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (TUPE) varying conditions of service, including vastly different mileage rates. These are now being standardised into the amounts quoted below.

The rates of allowance for MHS staff are being set for 'casual' users at 35p per mile for the first 5000 miles in a year, and 23p per mile thereafter. We also operate an 'essential' users scheme which we inherited from local authorities for 170 of the staff who transferred to the MHS. These rates for the current financial year are up to 34.7p per mile for the first 11,000 miles, 12.7p thereafter, in England and Wales, less for smaller sized vehicles. In Scotland, the rates are 35.1p per mile in the first instance, 13.2p thereafter. Again there are lower rates for smaller vehicles. Additionally, these employees are at this time paid a lump sum of between £645 and £1158 per annum dependent on the size of vehicle and whether they are in England, Wales or Scotland, to use their cars under this scheme. These amounts will reduce at 1 April 1996 to between £513 and £750.

Letter from Phillip Needham to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture has asked me to reply direct to you in answer to your question number 1762. In this you asked me what rates of travel allowance may be claimed by Civil Servants in his Department when using their own vehicles for official business. [36373]

ADAS was formed as a Next Steps Agency in April 1992. The Agency employs approximately 1,600 consultants who provide a commercial service to all parts of the land related industries, as well as government customers. Wherever possible, staff are encouraged to use the hire car facilities that the Agency has negotiated.

When staff use their own vehicles they are paid at the rate of 44p for the first 5,000 miles travelled on official business. Thereafter they are paid at the rat of 29p per mile. These payments are taxable.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about the rates of travel allowance which may be claimed by staff in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate when using their own vehicles on official business as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible. [36373]

In 1995/96, the following rates of motor mileage allowance are payable:

	Up to 1,500 cc	1,501–2,000 cc	Over 2,000 cc
Up to 15,000 miles (p/mile)	36	45	48
Over 5,000 miles (p/mile)	24	28	37

Where only third party insurance is held or where travel by car is not essential for official business, a rate of 24.2p/mile is payable.

Although no VMD staff have used motorcycles on official business in the past, separate motorcycle rates are payable as follows:

	Engine size up to 125cc	Engine size over 125 cc
Up to 4,000 miles
(a) third party insurance (p/mile)	15.1	23.6
(b) Comprehensive insurance (p/mile)	16.8	27.0
Over 4,000 miles (p/mile)	5,4	9.3

The third party rate also applies when travel by motorcycle is not essential for official business.

Finally, a pedal cycle allowance of 6.3 p/mile is also payable when used for official business, although no VMD staff have claimed such an allowance to date.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by civil servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years in his Department; and what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. [36374]

Mr. Boswell: The total cost of paying motor mileage allowances to those staff who used their own cars on official business in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Amount (£000)
1990–91 (i)[1]	6,698.0
1991–92 (i)[1]	6,596.0
1992–93 (ii)[2]	3,426.0
1993–94 (ii)[2]	3,771.0
1994–95 (iii)[3]	3,798.0

[1] Figures include all MAFF Agencies.

[2] Agencies included are the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and Pesticides Safety Directorate (the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, Veterinary Laboratories Agency and Central Science Laboratory are not included).

[3] Figures are for core-Department and PSD only.

For purposes of comparison, the costs of paying the maximum rates—standard rate mileage allowances for cars of over 2,000 cc—have been compared with the costs that would have been incurred had the standard rates applying to cars of up to 1,500 cc and 1,501 to 2,000 cc been paid instead. On this basis, the savings that would have resulted in 1994–95 are estimated at £106,000 and £47,000 respectively in core MAFF, PSD and VMD. Public transport rate has not been used as a basis for comparison as the conditions attaching to its payment are different from those for standard rates.

Agencies now have responsibility for these matters and where their position is not covered above will be replying direct.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on travel expenses claimed by staff in the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (previously the Central Veterinary Laboratory until 30 September 1995), using their own vehicles. [36374]

The total cost of paying motor mileage allowances to those staff in what was then the Central Veterinary Laboratory who used their own cars on official business in each of the last three years is as follows:

Year	Cost £
1992–93	10,710.37
1993–94	14,494.13
1994–95	14,461.62

Previous years included in the reply from core-MAFF. For purposes of comparison, the costs of paying maximum rates (standard rate mileage allowances for cars over 2000 cc) have been compared with the costs that would have been incurred had the standard rates applying to cars of up to 1500 cc and 1501–2000 cc been paid instead. On this basis the savings that would have resulted in 1994–95 are estimated at £688 and £340 respectively for CVL. Public transport rate has not been used as a basis for comparison since the conditions attached to its payment are different from those for standard rates.

Letter from Phillip Needham to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture has asked me to reply direct to your question number 1768. In this you asked him to list the total cost of travel expenses claimed by Civil Servants using their own vehicles for official business in each of the last five years. You also wished to know the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed were set at the lowest rate. [36374]

ADAS was formed as a Next Steps Agency in 1992. Details of claims prior to this period will be contained in the answer from the Core Department. Travel by car is undertaken by staff as part of their work providing commercial consultancy services to a broad range of clients including Government departments. The expenditure on official mileage since that date is as follows:

1992–93: £3,087,973

1994–95: £3,265,352

During the last year, if we had paid the highest rate at the lowest rate (i.e. paying all mileage at the lowest rate currently 29p) there would have been a saving of £113,814. This figure is a total for each of the three bands of vehicle engine size.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 31 October 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about the total cost of travel expenses claimed by staff in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate in each of the last five years when using their own vehicles on official business, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible. [36374]

I am afraid information for 1990/91 is not separately identifiable, but the details requested for the four subsequent years is set out below:

1991–92: £5,309.49

1992–93: £8,009.35

1993–94: £6,617.15

1994–95: £9,723,48

You also asked what would have been the saving in the last year if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at the lowest rate. Unfortunately this cannot be separately identified for the Directorate other than at disproportionate cost, but VMD has been covered in the reply to this part of your question by the Parliamentary Secretary, along with core MAFF and the Pesticides Safety Directorate.

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Dr. Lynne Jones dated 31 October 1995:

TRAVEL EXPENSES OF CIVIL SERVANTS USING THEIR OWN VEHICLES FOR OFFICIAL BUSINESS

You asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food two questions in relation to Civil Servants using their own cars for official business. The Minister has asked me to reply to you as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible. [36373 and 36374]

The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) was first launched as an executive agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) in April 1992. As a result I can only provide annual costs of travel expenses for CSL staff using their own vehicles for official business from 1992–93. Earlier figures are included in the Departmental total. Further, CSL was re-launched as an enlarged agency in April 1994 following its merger with the MAFF Food Science Laboratories. This partly explains the marked increase in the total cost of such travel expenses for 1994–95 over the two earlier years. At the same time CSL's National Bee Unit took on additional responsibility for regional bee work and this significantly increased the number of travel claims.

Total are as follows:

1992–93: £57.88K

1994–95: £156.53K

The saving in the last year, if the maximum rate that could be claimed was set at either of the lower rates applying to cars of up to 1,500cc and 1,501–2,000cc, would have been £1,167 or £291 respectively. These figures may appear low, but a relatively low mileage was claimed on vehicles over 2,000cc. Public transport rate has not been used as a basis for comparison as the conditions attaching to its payment are different to those for standard rates.

The current standard mileage allowances for cars, which came into effect on 1 April 1995, is:

	Up to 5,000 miles	Over 5,000 miles
Up to 1,500 cc	36 p/mile	24 p/mile
1,501–2,000 cc	45 p/mile	28 p/mile
Over 2,000 cc	48 p/mile	37 p/mile

The public transport rate for all cars is 24.2 pence per mile.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what factors led to the issuing of an export certificate for a consignment of sheep exported on 17 May from Shoreham to Dieppe containing a heavily pregnant ewe; and what action he proposes to take against those involved in allowing the export of the ewe to take place; [38711]

(2) what action his Department proposes to take in respect of those occasions when the Northern Cruiser sailed from Dover in excessively rough conditions with lorries containing livestock; [38710]

(3) what action he proposes to take over the deaths of two sheep that occurred during their export to France from Shoreham on 17 May. [38694]

Mrs Browning: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham North-West (Mr. Banks) on 25 October 1995, Official Report, columns 697–98.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance is issued to veterinarians in cases where illness and death in animals could result from infection by a transmissible spongiform encephalopathy. [38550]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 30 October 1995]: Health and safety guidelines drawn up by the British Veterinary Association and MAFF in consultation with the Health and Safety Executive were distributed to all large animal veterinary practices early in 1990. The advisory note for farmers on BSE, issued by this Department in June 1990, was also made available to all large and mixed animal veterinary practices. Copies of MAFF's booklets "BSE and the protection of human health" and "BSE and the protection of animal health" were also distributed to all local veterinary inspectors involved with animal disease work in late 1994. I have placed copies of all of these in the Library of the House. In addition, the State Veterinary Service's own instructions on BSE are available to the general public from MAFFs Whitehall library.

Veterinary practitioners are also encouraged to seek advice from their local divisional veterinary manager in any unusual or difficult circumstances or on matters outwith their experience.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 15 February, Official Report, column 715–16, if he will make a statement on the nature of treatment of specified bovine offal at rendering plants and their subsequent fate. [38560]

Mr. Browning: The Specified Bovine Offal Order 1995 requires all rendering plants handling specified bovine offal to meet clearly defined structural and hygiene standards and to be capable of processing SBO using one of the time-temperature combination methods described in that order before being approved by the appropriate Minister. The processing methods are defined in Commission decision 94/382 which sets standards for rendering ruminant material.

The operator of an approved rendering plant is required to keep a record of the weight of SBO delivered, the date of delivery and the place from which it was consigned for two years from the date of arrival. The operator of an approved rendering plant is required to ensure that all SBO in the rendering plant is kept and stored separately from all other material, and handled and rendered separately from all other material. Those rendering plants which have indicated their intention to continue to process SBO after 15 February 1996 will have to install dedicated processing lines for SBOs by that date to comply with the Order. These lines must also meet the standards for rendering ruminant material defined in Commission Decision 94/382.

After the SBO has been rendered, the plant operator is required to ensure that the resulting protein and tallow are placed in separate containers labelled as holding SBO. Protein must be disposed of as specified in the renderer's approval or by burial at a land-fill site holding a current waste management licence or by sending to an approved incinerator. Tallow must be sent for purposes not connected with the preparation of food or feedingstuffs, for burial to a registered landfill site holding a current waste management licence or for treatment by thermal hydrolysis.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 31 January, Official Report, column 645–46 what is the scientific evidence to show that the great majority of feed cases born after the ban have probably been exposed to ruminant protein in feed; and if he will make a statement. [38561]

Mrs. Browning: The number of animals affected with BSE that were born after the feed ban is relatively small compared with the number born prior to the ban. As at 24 October 1995, there have been 22,946 cases confirmed in animals born after the ban or—BABs—10,689 cases born in July to December 1988, 9,364 born in 1989, 2,425 born in 1990, 461 born in 1991, six in 1992 and one in 1993—compared with the total number of BSE cases confirmed to 24 October 1995 of 154,150. Of cases born after the ban, 87 per cent. are in animals born in 1988 and 1989 when feed manufactured before the ban was still in the animal feed chain.

A number of pieces of evidence together indicate the role of feed in transmitting infection to animals born after the ban. First, the infectivity of cattle brain from animals with BSE has been demonstrated in a pathogenesis study when it is fed to calves. Secondly, the infectivity of rendered ruminant waste which included brain from clinically affected cattle has been demonstrated in experiments looking at various rendering mechanisms and conditions. Thirdly, the case control study of BABs born after 31 October 1988 found no evidence that any methods of transmission, other than feed, which was not included in the study, was occurring at a frequency capable of maintaining the epidemic. In particular, the study found no statistically significant evidence that maternal transmission occurred. Fourthly, analysis of the geographical incidence of BSE in home-bred animals shows that the proportion of cases of BSE in the northern and eastern regions of England, where the ratio of pigs and poultry to cattle is greatest, has increased relative to the rest of Britain. This change is consistent with the contamination of cattle feed stuffs by pig or poultry feed stuffs, or ingredients used to prepare them, having occurred in premises which produce both ruminant and monogastric rations. It was permissible to feed protein derived from specified bovine offals to non-ruminant species until 25 September 1990.

Finally, there is evidence that there have been failings in the handling of SBOs after removal from the carcase which could have resulted in these offals entering the animal feed chain. Details were given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) in reply to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) on 19 July 1995, Official Report, column 1467.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of (a) confirmed BSE cases and (b) BSE cases placed on restriction and slaughtered for the periods (i) 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990, (ii) 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991, (iii) 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992, (iv) 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993, (v) 1 april 1993 to 31 March 1994 and (vi) 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995; and what compensation was claimed. [38562]

Mrs. Browning: The following table shows the number of BSE suspects placed under restriction and subsequently slaughtered, the number of confirmed cases of BSE and the total BSE compensation paid:

	Number of BSE suspects placed under restriction and subsequently slaughtered	Of these, number of confirmed BSE cases	Total BSE compensation paid £
1 April 1989–31 March 1990	10,275	9,192	4,027,644
1 April 1990–31 March 1991	18,479	15,805	10,663,129

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many BSE cases born in each month since July 1988 were subsequently confirmed. [38613]

Mrs. Browning: The following table shows the number of confirmed cases of BSE born in each month since July 1988:

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
January	—	878	333	67	2	—
February	—	377	173	26	2	—
March	—	477	154	36	1	—
April	—	312	108	27	—	—
May	—	234	89	27	—	—
June	—	506	140	34	—	1
July	466	868	272	68	—	—
August	2,536	1,710	385	76	1	—
September	3,258	1,765	350	56	—	—
October	2,209	1,115	207	20	—	—
November	1,270	659	112	17	—	—
December	950	463	102	7	—	—

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) confirmed and (b) suspected but not confirmed BSE cases in each year were born of dams which has subsequently also been confirmed as suffering from BSE. [38563]

Mrs. Browning: The following table shows the number of animals restricted as BSE suspects in each year from 1989 and subsequently slaughtered, which were born of dams which have been confirmed as suffering from BSE:

Year	BSE confirmed	BSE not confirmed
1989	4	2
1990	30	8
1991	91	20
1992	184	20
1993	281	49
1994	382	41

Data are not available for years before 1989. The 1995 data are complete to 24 October.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many suspected BSE cases were placed under restrictions in the periods (a) 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990, (b) 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991, (c) 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992, (d) 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993, (e) 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 and (f) 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995; what compensation was claimed; in how many suspect cases in each period the restriction order was subsequently withdrawn following further veterinary inspection; and what compensation was claimed. [38565]

Mrs. Browning: The following table shows the number of suspected BSE cases placed under restriction and the number of restriction orders withdrawn:

	Number of cattle placed under restriction	Number of restriction orders withdrawn
1 April 1989–31 March 1990	10,855	461
1 April 1990–31 March 1991	19,418	743
1 April 1991–31 March 1992	35,306	1,142
1 April 1992–31 March 1993	45,569	1,754
1 April 1993–31 March 1994	40,500	1,907
1 April 1994–31 March 1995	25,639	1,244

The total amount of BSE compensation paid in each of the periods is set out in my earlier reply to the hon. Gentleman. No compensation is payable on animals restricted as BSE suspects but subsequently released from that restriction following further veterinary inspection.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of animals infected with BSE which have found their way into the human food chain. [40379]

Mrs. Browning: The Department is aware of 1,104 cases of BSE which occurred prior to 7 August 1988 when the compulsory slaughter and destruction of suspects was instituted. Before that date it was permissible for these cattle—with the exception of the brain, which was used to confirm the clinical diagnosis—to be used for human consumption but we do not know what proportion of that total was used for human consumption. Many of these animals were sent to veterinary investigation centres, and the carcases incinerated; others would have been in such poor condition that they would not have produced meat fit for human consumption. It is not possible to make anything other than extremely speculative estimates of the number of animals which would at some stage in their lives have succumbed to BSE if they had not died for some other reason, or been slaughtered.

From 13 November 1989, in England and Wales and 30 January 1990 in Scotland, specified bovine offals, the tissues considered most likely to contain the infective agent, have been removed from all cattle over six months of age at slaughter.

Farmers (Suicides)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many suicides there have been in each of the three counties of Yorkshire and the Humberside farming community in each of the past four years. [39043]

Mr. Boswell: Deaths from suicide in the Yorkshire and Humberside farming community in each of the past four years for which firm data are available are shown in the table.

	North Yorkshire	South Yorkshire	West Yorkshire	Humberside
1989	1	—	2	3
1990	9	1	—	6
1991	5	2	2	2
1992	2	1	—	—

Suicide codes are ICD9[1] E950-E959 and E980-E989 excluding E988.8

---

[1] International Classification of Diseases, 9th revision

Members of the farming community are defined as classification of occupation (1980) codes 107 (farm owners and managers), 166, 169 and 172 (farm workers, agricultural machinery drivers and operatives and all other occupations in farming) for the period 1989–90, and standard occupational classification codes 160 (farm owners and managers), 900, 901 and 902 (farm workers, agricultural machinery drivers and operatives and all other occupations in farming) for the period 1991–1992.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many environmentally sensitive area management agreements have been approved in the lake district environmentally sensitive area involving payments in year 1 of the plan of (a) £0–£1,000, (b) £1,001–£2,000, (c) £2001–£3,000, (d) £3,001–£4,000, (e) £4,001–£5,000, (f) £5,001–£6,000 and (g) £6,001 or over. [39834]

Mr. Boswell: The number of payments made in each band is as follows:

Payment band	Number of first year payments
£0–£1,000	219
£1,001–£2,000	183
£2,001–£3,000	152
£3,001–£4,000	79
£4,001–£5,000	42
£5,001–£6,000	34
£6,001 and over	114
Total	823

These payments details relate to the first two schemes years of the lake district ESA—1993 and 1994.

Chernobyl

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the present effects on farming in the United Kingdom of the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement. [39757]

Mrs. Browning: Following the Chernobyl accident, affected areas of the United Kingdom—parts of Northern Ireland, Scotland, North Wales and Cumbria—were subjected to statutory restrictions so as to prevent the sale of sheepmeat containing levels of radiocaesium in excess of 1,000 bq/kg. These restrictions were designed to protect the food chain and ensure that normal sheep marketing practices within restricted ares could continue with minimum disruption to farm businesses. They have since been reviewed on a regular basis, and have been progressively removed wherever the monitoring of sheep has revealed residual radioactivity to have declined to within acceptable levels. Further intensive monitoring in the affected areas is nearing completion and an announcement of the results and possible lifting of some restrictions can be expected early in the new year.

Emergency arrangements are in place to ensure that swift action can be taken to protect the food chain, should any accident of this nature occur in future.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the use of set-aside land for the growing of coriander for conservation into bio-diesel fuel. [39534]

Mr. Baldry: It is possible to grow coriander for industrial purposes as well as other oilseed plants on set-aside land under the area arable payment scheme.

However, because of its properties it may be preferable to use coriander oil in the production of specialist industrial oils—for nylons and cosmetics—rather than for biodiesel.

Arable Area Payment Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was expenditure, in ecus, by each EU member state on (a) set-aside and (b) total arable area payments, for each year in which the arable area payment scheme has been in operation. [40153]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from working papers of the European Commission that the situation was as follows: figures for 1995 are not yet available.

000 ecu

Intervention Stocks

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the level of intervention stocks in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the EU, at the latest available date. [40154]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Tables showing levels of all produce held in intervention within the EU, with levels for the UK separately identified, are placed in the House at regular intervals, most recently on 5 October. The information currently held in the House Library goes back to January 1985.

Frogs' Legs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food what was the volume of frogs' legs imported by the United Kingdom in 1993 and 1994; and what were the countries of origin of those imports. [40265]

Mrs. Browning: Imports into the United Kingdom of frogs legs for 1993 and 1994 were as follows:

Imports of frogs' legs (kgs)	1993	1994[1]
Total	21,702	20,124

Spanish Fishermen (Compensation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is Britain's contribution to the £200 million compensation to be paid by the European Union to Spanish fishermen for loss of fishing opportunities in Moroccan waters. [40603]

Mr. Baldry: On 26 October, the Council of Ministers unanimously agreed that payments should be made to Spanish and Portuguese fishermen who had been unable to fish following the early termination of the EU/Morocco fisheries agreement at the end of April 1995. This was an exceptional measure applying for a limited period. The maximum cost to the Community budget will be 24 mecu, £19.9 million. The cost will be less if the fishermen concerned are able to resume fishing before the end of December. In either event, the cost will be funded from within the existing Community budget for 1995. The United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget for this item will be around 5 per cent. after taking account of the Fontainebleau abatement.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much compensation has been paid by the European Union to British fishermen for damage to vessels or nets by Spanish fishing vessels. [40602]

Mr. Baldry: Payments are not available from the Community budget to compensate the fishermen of one member state for damage done to their vessels or nets by the fishermen of another member state.

Hypothermia

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths from hypothermia took place among (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over in each year since 1990, by region. [34168]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 13 July 1995]: The numbers of deaths of men aged 65 and over and women aged 60 and over registered by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys with a mention of hypothermia, ICD 991.6, on the death certificate are given in the table.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library copies of the Welsh Development Agency's urban development programmes approved by his Department for 1992–93 and 1993–94; and if he will place in the Library copies of the relevant approval letters for these programmes. [39271]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 24 October 1995]: No. The programme documents contain information that remains commercially sensitive; letters of approval relate back to those documents.

General Election (Voting)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what procedures will be put in place prior to the general election to ensure that those entitled to postal and proxy votes are made aware of their rights as soon as possible by means of public advertising; and if he will make a statement. [39170]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 26 October 1995 by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department Official Report, column 761.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 6 June, Official Report, column 76, to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones), which schools in Wales or elsewhere were involved in the assisted places scheme in the last ten years. [40031]

Mr. Richards: Participating schools in Wales over the last 10 years have been:

Christ College, Brecon
Howells School, Cardiff
Howells School, Denbigh
Llandovery College
Monmouth School (Boys)
Monmouth School for Girls
Rydal Penrhos Senior School (Girls), Colwyn Bay
Rydal Penrhos Senior School (Co-educational), Colwyn Bay

Schools outside Wales are a matter for the respective Secretaries of State.

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 573, relating to payments for capital works at grant-maintained schools, if he will list for each capital scheme the length of time between the presentation of contractors' bills, the issue of architects' certificates and the payments of the bills. [40656]

Mr. Richards: No central record is kept of when contractors' bills are paid on capital works carried out at grant-maintained schools, as responsibility for this rests with the individual school governing body concerned.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the dates on which architects' certificates have been issued in respect of capital works carried out at Brynmawr grant-maintained school and the dates on which payments have been made in respect of these architects' certificates. [40652]

Mr. Richards: Responsibility for payments on architects' certificates in respect of capital works at Brynmawr grant-maintained school rests with the school's governing body. No record is kept centrally. The dates on which architects' certificates, known to the Department, were issued for each of the four named capital projects carried out at Brynmawr school since it became grant-maintained are as follows:

School Canteen and Toilets Project

Certificate No. 1: 26 February 1993
Certificate No. 2: 12 March 1993

Science Block Project

Certificate No. 1: 18 August 1993
Certificate No. 2: 15 September 1993
Certificate No. 3: 18 October 1993
Certificate No. 4: 13 December 1993
Certificate No. 5: 10 March 1994

Certificate No. 5: 6 February 1995

Certificate No. 6: 7 March 1995

Certificate No. 7: 4 April 1995

Certificate No. 8: 2 May 1995

Certificate No. 9: 7 June 1995

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 573, relating to payments for capital works at grant-maintained schools, if he will make a statement in the case of T. Costelow and Sons Ltd. and payment for their work at Brynmawr grant-maintained school. [40655]

Mr. Richards: I understand that T. Costelow and Sons Ltd. is a sub-contractor on two named capital projects at Brynmawr grant-maintained school. Responsibility for the payment of sub-contractor work rests with the main contractor.

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the European Commission concerning the placing of an advertisement in the contracts supplement of the Official Journal of the European Communities for the sale of the Estatecare division of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority; and if he will make a statement. [4022]

Mr. Hague: None. There is no requirement to consult the European Commission.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of the privatisation procedure in respect of the prescription pricing division of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. [40726]

Mr. Hague: I expect that the Welsh Health Common Services Authority will be able to announce the outcome of its market test of prescription pricing services within the next few weeks.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the arrangements for the advertisement for sale of the Estatecare division of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) outside; on what occasions such advertisements have already been published; how many direct approaches to potential trade sale buyers have been made; what consultations he has had with the staff of the Estatecare division concerning their future employment and stake in future arrangements; and if TUPE will apply. [40727]

Mr. Richards: These are matters for the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

Measles

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received regarding the numbers of children in Wales who have been reported as possibly suffering physical or psychological trauma as a result of immunisation against measles. [40657]

Mr. Richards: By October 1995 the Medicines Control Agency received 56 physical and two psychological reports concerning children in Wales who received measles and rubella vaccine during the November 1994 measles and rubella (MR) immunisation campaign.

Measles, Mumps, and Rubella (MMR) vaccine was introduced in 1988. Since 1 January 1988, to date, there have been 34 reports of adverse reactions to MMR vaccine all of which were physical.

The number of children immunised during the MR campaign was larger than the number immunised so far with MMR. The same measles antigen is used in both the MR and MMR vaccine. The increase in reports of adverse reactions could be attributed to circumstances of a mass campaign.

The receipt of a reaction report by the Medicines Control Agency does not necessarily mean that the reaction reported has been caused by the vaccine.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of the leaflet on measles have been distributed by Health Promotion Wales on behalf of his Department in the past year. [40665]

Mr. Richards: None, but 550,000 bilingual—English and Welsh—leaflets were distributed by Health Promotion Authority for Wales to health authorities and schools during September 1994. In addition, translation packs in 10 ethnic minority languages were made available to health authorities for local distribution.

European Regional Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his recent consultations with the members of the commission responsible for regional development in relation to the co-option of members of local authorities on the monitoring committees for the expenditure of the European regional fund in (a) industrial south and (b) rural Wales. [40723]

Mr. Hague: I told Commissioner Dr. Wulf-Mathies that I was satisfied with the present arrangements for local authority membership of both the industrial south Wales and rural Wales structural funds monitoring committees.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the health services that have been market tested by or notified to his Department and won by the private sector indicating (a) the location and (b) the organisation winning the tender. [40617]

Mr. Hague: I am placing a list of contracts won by the private sector for 1993–94, which is the latest available, in the Library of the House.

Surpluses and Deficits (District Health Authorities)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) surpluses and (b) deficits were recorded by each district health authority in 1994–95. [40663]

Mr. Richards: I am arranging for the annual reports of each health authority to be placed in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

OSIRIS

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 575 if he will make a statement on the main purpose of the OSIRIS office automation system for his departmental offices. [40787]

Mr. Hague: The main purpose of the system is to improve the administrative efficiency of the Welsh Office by enabling speedier and more effective transaction of business and improved internal and external communication. The project will provide a personal computer for most Welsh Office staff equipped with word processing, spreadsheet, database and diary, scheduling packages and an electronic mail facility. These will be underpinned by a communications infrastructure covering all major Welsh Office sites. The estimated cost of the project includes the maintenance and support of the system over the life of the contract as well as the costs of hardware and software.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further measures he proposes under the private finance initiative to encourage investment by the private sector in local authority facilities. [40941]

Mr. Hague: I can today announce a further package of measures to encourage and facilitate private sector investment in local authority services in Wales. These change the capital finance rules to allow local authorities to harness private finance and management expertise in the upgrading or replacement of facilities.

The changes will encourage authorities to enter into the "design, build, finance and operate" type contracts for the replacement or upgrading by the private sector of facilities such as schools, libraries and leisure centres; give authorities greater scope for financing the replacement of facilities out of the proceeds from sales of existing assets; ensure that arrangements for joint use of facilities by an authority and the private sector do not trigger financial penalties; and make it easier for authorities to use energy services packages which improve energy efficiency and reduce energy costs.

In addition, more resources for PFI projects will be generated by reducing from 50 per cent. to 25 per cent. the rate of set aside for debt redemption arising from the sale of surplus educational assets during the two years commencing in April 1996. With other elements of the package this opens up exciting opportunities for the upgrading of local authority schools and the rationalisation of school provision.

Draft regulations will be published for consultation within the next few weeks.

I am considering whether there should be a similar relaxation in the rules relating to set aside in the case of receipts from the sale of county farms. A decision will be taken in the context of the rural White Paper to be published later this year.

I hope that the new Welsh unitary authorities will take full advantage of the opportunities offered by these changes when they take up their new responsibilities in April next year.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the winding up date of the Cardiff Bay development corporation; and what consultations he has had with the relevant local authorities concerning the transfer of its assets and liabilities. [40551]

Mr. Hague: My predecessor informed the House on 7 July 1994, Official Report, column 465, that it was expected to be possible to wind up the Cardiff Bay development corporation by the end of 1999. This remains the position. Consultations with the appropriate unitary local authorities will open after the reorganisation of local government.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Peacekeeping (Low-income Developing Countries)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of Britain's direct peacekeeping expenditure is spent in low-income developing countries; and where it is spent. [40205]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Britain will contribute an estimated £144 million in assessed contributions to UN peacekeeping in 1995–96, of which £85 million relates to former Yugoslavia. The remainder is accounted for by 13 UN operations in middle and low-income countries in Africa, Asia, the middle east, the caribbean and the former soviet union.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British troops have served in the last two years in a peacekeeping capacity in low-income developing countries; and where they have served. [40206]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: In the last two years, British logistics support groups of some 600 troops have served with UN operations in Rwanda and Angola. During 1993 British military observers served with the UN missions in Western Sahara and Cambodia.

Common Agricultural Policy

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 25 October at column 1002, if he will list all of those areas of the CAP which are subject to qualified majority voting. [40310]

Mr. David Davis: The legal base of the CAP is article 43 of the treaty, which is subject to qualified majority voting. Food legislation is on a legal base of article 100a, which is also subject to qualified majority voting.

UNSCOM

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from UNSCOM about the involvement of Iraqi spies in its investigations. [40257]

Mr. David Davis: It would not be appropriate to comment on the details of our co-operation with UNSCOM. We deplore all instances of Iraqi failure to co-operate with UNSCOM as required under the terms of UN Security Council resolution.

European Union (Forthcoming Business)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union. [41048]

Mr. David Davis: The information is as follows:

SUBJECT: MONTHLY FORECAST OF BUSINESS FOR NOVEMBER 1995

1. The following Councils are scheduled:

November 6: Industry Council
November 7: Industry Council
November 9: Consumers Council
November 13: Agriculture Council
November 14: Agriculture Council
November 15: Fisheries Council
November 17: Budget Council
November 20: FAC, Culture Council
November 21: FAC
November 23: International Market Council, Justice Council
November 24: Justice Council

Agenda not yet available.

Nuclear Tests, Pitcairn Islands

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) health and (b) environmental studies have been carried out on the residents of the Pitcairn islands and their habitat to assess potential radiological impact from atmospheric and underground nuclear testing in the Pacific region. [40199]

Mr. David Davis: No specific studies have been carried out. The resident nurse has reported that the Pitcairn islanders are in good health. The Sir Peter Scott commemorative expedition, which visited the Pitcairn islands in 1991–92, reported no environmental problems as a result of nuclear testing. We do not believe that the current programme of French nuclear tests, which are being carried out underground, should cause any danger to the inhabitants of Pitcairn.

French Nuclear Tests

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to invoking article 142 of the Euratom treaty in order to bring infringement proceedings before the European Court of Justice against the government of France in respect of its nuclear testing programme. [40201]

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 20 October 1995 Official Report, column 264.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government (a) have taken and (b) are considering taking to protect the residents of the Pitcairn islands from the potential environmental effects of French nuclear testing at Mururoa and Fangatafau. [40196]

Mr. Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 16 October 1995 Official Report, column 18.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation has taken place with the residents of the Pitcairn islands on French nuclear testing in the Pacific. [40198]

Mr. Davis: The governor's office in Wellington is in regular contact with the Pitcairn island council on a range of matters. The council has not expressed any concern about French nuclear testing.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what scientific analysis has been carried out by his Department on the environmental effects of the French nuclear testing programme in the Pacific. [40200]

Mr. Davis: None. The French Government have given an assurance that the tests will cause no harm to the environment, and have invited experts to visit the area in order to verify this for themselves.

Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are Her Majesty's Government's priorities at the forthcoming Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting. [40023]

Mr. Hanley: The Government's priorities are: to promote the fulfilment of the principles embodied in the Harare declaration, including a return to civilian democratic rule in all member states; to promote good government; to support reform of the United Nations and international financial institutions; and to secure a commitment for increased collective Commonwealth action against serious crime, in particular drug trafficking and money laundering.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what priority Her Majesty's Government give to strengthening the Harare declaration at the Auckland Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting. [40025]

Mr. Hanley: The Harare declaration has become a reference point for good government principles in the Commonwealth. High priority will be given at Auckland to encouraging all member states to adhere to the principles it embodies.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter from the Prime Minister to the Prime Minister of New Zealand setting out Her Majesty's Government's priorities for the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting. [40024]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has not written to the Prime Minister of New Zealand setting out the Government's priorities for the forthcoming Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for Commonwealth initiatives to support human rights and democracy. [40028]

Mr. Hanley: The Commonwealth Secretary-General has proposed that within the theme for the Auckland Heads of Government meeting in November—"Fulfilling the Harare Declaration"—a prime focus should be "Advancing Fundamental Political Values". My right hon.

Friend the Prime Minister will take an active role in formulating practical proposals under this heading.

Human Rights (Zimbabwe)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made recently to the Zimbabwean Government regarding human rights abuses in that country. [39924]

Mr. Hanley: We have not made any such representations recently to the Government of Zimbabwe.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Travel Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of travel administered through DSS travel services in the last three financial years; which company is currently operating the DSS travel service; and what target savings for the current year the present operator has been asked to meet. [39332]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Year	Amount £
1993–94	3,895,339
1994–95	4,764,841

Information for earlier periods is not available.

Carlson Wagonlit is contracted to deliver travel services. The contract does not provide for specific savings targets. All travel costs are discounted under its terms, with the contractor required always to offer the lowest published fare.

Departmental Work

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the work of his Department since 1990. [38072]

Mr. Burt: We have a clear strategy for social security. The principal objectives are to focus benefit on the most needy, to encourage personal responsibility, to improve incentives to work and save, to bear down on fraud and abuse and to ensure that the system does not outstrip the nation's ability to pay. Social security has cost £440 billion in real terms since 1990 and provides one of the most comprehensive safety nets in the EU.

The Department has focused benefit on those who need it most. Disability living allowance was introduced in April 1992. Expenditure on help for customers below pension age with care and mobility needs has increased by more than 50 per cent. in real terms since 1992. In addition, the Disability Discrimination Bill will ensure that disabled people are not discriminated against in the workplace or when seeking access to goods and services.

Incapacity benefit, which replaced sickness benefit and invalidity benefit on 13 April this year, provides a better targeted and more affordable system of provision. A more objective medical test will focus help on those genuinely incapable of work because of their medical condition.

The Department has encouraged personal responsibility and the Pensions Act 1995 encourages increased self-provision. Pensioners in all income groups have seen their income rise since 1979 and on average are 50 per cent. better off. About 88 per cent. of recently retired pensioners have incomes other than state benefits. The UK is the largest investor in private pensions in the EU, with more assets invested in pension funds than the rest of the EU put together.

In 1993, the Child Support Agency was launched to implement the Child Support Act 1991 and to operate the new system of child maintenance for parents who live apart. The new Child Support Act 1995 includes wide-ranging improvements to the scheme which will be fairer, improve service and ensure maintenance is paid regularly. This year the Child Support Agency is on track to collect or arrange £300 million in maintenance and achieve a reduction in the bill to the taxpayer of £1.4 billion since its launch.

The Department has improved incentives to work and save. Reforms since 1988 have significantly alleviated the unemployment trap, where people are better off unemployed than working, and the poverty trap, where net income falls even though wages go up. We will reinforce incentives as result of the Jobseekers Act 1995. This country has pioneered the use of in-work benefits. Family credit expenditure has helped to boost earnings for families on low income, and over 5.2 million awards have been made since 1990. We have announced plans for the first ever pilot of a benefit, earnings top-up, for low-earning single people and couples without children.

To bear down on fraud and abuse the Benefits Agency has developed a security strategy ensuring that the right money is paid to the right person at the right time and has delivered fraud savings of record £706.8 million in 1994–95 against a target of £654 million.

The Department has a proud record of efficiency, particularly following the establishment of agencies, where 97 per cent. of our staff now work. Agencies have consistently met or exceeded efficiency targets, resulting in savings of over £500 million being made over the last five years. In the Benefits Agency, output per member of staff has increased by 26.4 per cent. since 1989–90. Further efficiencies will be delivered through the Department's plan to apply an extensive and innovative range of efficiency techniques over the next three years.

The Department is at the forefront of public sector management and service delivery. Nineteen offices of the Benefits Agency have been awarded the charter mark. The Benefits Agency achieved an 84 per cent. satisfaction level of an independent and comprehensive customer survey in 1993–94, an increase on the previous year. The Information Technology Services Agency achieved the international standard for quality accreditation for the whole of its business in 1994. ITSA was one of the first next steps agencies to achieve such recognition for all areas of its business.

Under the Government's private finance initiative, the Contributions Agency has awarded the contract for the development and operation of the replacement national insurance recording system. This was the first major IT contract to be awarded under PFI. Work is also progressing on plans to automate payment of benefit at post offices. The Benefits Agency aims to start issuing benefit payment cards during 1996. Full roll-out of the card will take two to three years and will be funded under PFI; a procurement exercise is now under way.

Over the last several years we have undertaken many measures that have reduced the burdens on business. These include simplifying the rules and requirements of statutory sick pay and introducing from April 1996 a national insurance holiday to encourage employers to take on employees who have been unemployed for two years or more.

We have taken steps to align the tax and national insurance schemes wherever possible. The Contributions Agency, Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise have also established an extensive programme of work which will deliver real benefits for business in practical terms by reducing bureaucracy and duplicate handling.

By focusing help on those in need and encouraging personal responsibility we will achieve savings reaching £4 billion a year during the next Parliament, and more than three times that amount next century.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider holding centrally records of the number of applications for disability living allowance for babies, by Benefits Agency district area; and if he will make a statement. [39024]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format referred to. However, figures are available on claims made for disability living allowance for children under the age of two. This information is held nationally. In addition, it is possible to provide details of awards made in these cases broken down by Benefits Agency district.

Statutory Pay

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the annual was the annual cost of statutory sick pay for 1979–80; and what has been the cost in each subsequent year including 1994–95; [40090]

(2) what was the annual cost of statutory maternity pay for 1979–80; and what has been the cost in each subsequent year including 1994–95. [40089]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table. The statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay schemes were introduced in April 1983 and April 1987 respectively.

Statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay: government expenditure

£ million

	Statutory sick pay	Statutory maternity pay

Figures have been taken from the Social Security Departmental Report March 1995 and earlier equivalents.

Notes:

(a) Expenditure is at cash price.

(b) 1994–95 figures are estimates.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of invalidity benefit have been found fit for work under the provisions of the Incapacity for Work Act 1994 since its implementation; how many new claimants for incapacity benefit have been found fit for work; how many medical tests to determine incapacity for work have been carried out; and how many appeals against the decision that a claimant is fit for work have (a) been heard and (b) are outstanding. [39288]

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the format requested. It is not possible to provide separate figures for the number of ex-invalidity benefit recipients and new incapacity benefit claimants who have been found incapable for work under the provisions of the Incapacity for Work Act 1994. Available information is in the table.

	Numbers
Medical examinations	[1]116,349
Found capable of work	[1]19,188
Appeals heard	89
Appeals outstanding	6,520

[1] This includes both all work test examinations and own occupation test examinations. All data is up to 30 September.

Family Credit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what evidence the estimate, in the explanatory memorandum on the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendment Regulations, that about 5,000 claims for family credit, disability benefits and invalid care allowance are made annually by persons from abroad, is based; and how many claims he estimates are made for each of the benefits. [40616]

Mr. Roger Evans: No systematic record is kept of claims made for benefits by persons from abroad. The estimate is based on an extrapolation across the relevant benefits of an analysis of child benefits claimants who came to the United Kingdom from abroad in 1994.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what grounds he proposes to abolish the entitlement to invalid care allowance for carers who are persons from abroad; and what effect he expects this to have on persons cared for by them. [40606]

Mr. Burt: We believe that those who enter the United Kingdom with limited leave, on the understanding that they have no recourse to public funds, should be held to that understanding for the duration of their stay here. People who have overstayed their leave or who entered the country illegally should similarly not receive Government funding through the benefits system. In all cases, person from abroad who take on roles as carers will continue to be subject to the usual understanding regarding public funds.

Income Support

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the current position in respect of entitlement to income support for relatives admitted to the United Kingdom as sponsored immigrants where the sponsor is no longer able to support the immigrants through unemployment or other unexpected loss of income; [40442]

(2) if he will list for each of the last three years for which figures are available, the number of relatives who were admitted to the United Kingdom as sponsored immigrants following an undertaking by the sponsor that they would be fully maintained without recourse to public funds; in how many cases a written undertaking was required and why in other cases this was not so required; in respect of how many relatives there were claims made for income support under part V of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 and what was the total cost of this to his Department; and how much money was recovered through the liable relative procedures. [40441]

Mr. Roger Evans: People given unlimited leave to enter or remain in the UK as dependent relatives, including sponsored immigrants, currently have the same entitlement to benefits as any UK citizen. However, where a sponsorship undertaking has been signed, the Department may take appropriate steps to recover from the sponsor any income support paid to the sponsored immigrant. There is no provision to reclaim any other benefits paid.

The immigration authorities inform the Benefits Agency of all agreements which have been undertaken. The number of formal undertakings received are set out in the table.

	Number
1993	2,121
1994	1,925
1995 (January–June)	1,348

No information is recorded centrally of the number of sponsored immigrants who claim benefit or of how much money was recovered through the liable relative procedures.

The criteria for requiring written undertakings is a matter for the Home Office.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the percentage of pensioners drawing income support or supplementary benefit in each year since 1978–79. [40377]

Mr. Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Number of pensioners in receipt of supplementary benefit/income support 1978–79 to 1994

Year	(Column A) Number of pensioners in receipt of supplementary benefit/income support	(Column B) Number of pensioners in Great Britain	Column (A) as a percentage of column (B)
1978	1,593,000	9,534,600	16.7
1979	1,599,000	9,559,700	16.7
1980	1,576,000	9,712,800	16.2
1981	1,624,000	9,810,156	16.6
1982	1,683,000	9,866,590	17.1
1983	1,549,000	9,882,301	15.7
1984	1,565,000	9,909,715	15.8
1985	—	10,021,410	—
1986	1,592,000	10,101,729	15.8
1987	1,610,000	10,172,700	15.9
1988	1,431,000	10,220,998	14.0
1989	1,314,000	10,278,565	12.8
1990	1,385,000	10,309,949	13.4
1991	1,272,000	10,355,887	12.3
1992	1,318,000	10,379,538	12.7
1993	1,426,000	10,391,426	13.7
1994	1,568,000	10,384,000	15.1

Notes:

1. Source: Supplementary Benefit/Income Support Statistics Annual and Quarterly Enquiries. Office of Population Censuses and Survey mid-year estimates.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand. Percentages rounded to one decimal place.
3. Income support replaced Supplementary Benefit in 1988.
4. Figures are not available for 1985.
5. Pensioners are defined as men over 65 and women over 60.
6. Figures in column A are for claimants only and do not include partners who may be of pensionable age.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the estimated cost of ending the capital and notional income testing rules for (a) housing benefits and (b) income support for retired people while retaining unchanged the present tests for actual income. [40378]

Mr. Evans: The estimated cost of removing the lower and upper capital limits and tariff income rule for pensioners is £390 million in income support and £340 million in housing benefit. This assumes that actual income from capital would be taken into account.

Notes:

1. Although the question refers to retired people, it has been interpreted to refer to people over 60 years of age and living in the community. The cost for those in residential or nursing care is not available because the base data used excludes those cases.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £10 million.
3. The estimate is based on data from the 1991, 1992 and 1993 Family Expenditure Survey, adjusted to be consistent with reported data from the May 1994 quarterly statistical enquiry for Income Support and the 1994 management information system dataset for Housing Benefit.
4. All figures are uprated to 1995–96 prices and benefit levels.

5. Given the tenuous nature of the data and the methodology used to arrive at this estimate, the figures are broad orders of magnitude as opposed to robust estimates.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what difficulties have been encountered in recovering income support paid to sponsored immigrants; what methods of overcoming such difficulties have been considered or adopted; and with what results; [40613]

(2) how the proposed changes in the benefit entitlement of sponsored immigrants will affect those whose sponsors are unable to support them because of a fall in their income due to sickness, unemployment or old age. [40615]

Mr. Evans: Sponsorship undertakings have been unenforceable and sponsors un-cooperative.

We referred proposals affecting the entitlement of sponsored immigrants and other persons from abroad to the Social Security Advisory Committee on 11 October. We expect to receive the committee's report and recommendations during December. These proposals are based on the premise that people whose leave to remain in the United Kingdom is on the understanding that they will not be maintained by the taxpayer should be kept to that understanding.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, under his recent new proposals, an asylum seeker will be entitled to claim benefits between the initial refusal of the asylum application and any appeal against refusal to grant asylum before a special adjudicator; and if he will make a statement. [40445]

Mr. Roger Evans: Under the proposals, a person who claims asylum immediately upon arrival in the UK will be eligible to claim income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit from the point when their asylum claim is recorded to the point when they receive an initial refusal. A person who claims asylum after arrival in the UK will not normally be entitled to any benefits. However, nationals of countries which have undergone a significant upheaval since their arrival in the UK will be eligible for benefit up to the point of an initial refusal of their asylum claim. In all cases no benefit will be payable during the appeals process.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if, under the proposed new rules regarding benefits for refugees, a genuine refugee who successfully claims asylum after entering the United Kingdom will have his or her entitlement to income support backdated to the date the claim for asylum; [40614]

(2) if the proposed protection of the benefit entitlements of nationals of countries affected by significant upheavals will be extended to other persons claiming asylum because of a well-founded fear of persecution arising from events occurring after their arrival in the United Kingdom not amounting to a significant upheaval but affecting their families or other groups of which they are or were members. [40611]

Mr. Evans: We referred proposals affecting the benefit entitlement of asylum seekers and other persons from abroad to the Social Security Advisory Committee on 11 October. We will consider the position fully once the committee has reported on its consultation exercise.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he proposes to take to ensure that, when a country has undergone events giving rise to a well-founded fear of persecution among its nationals, people who may, as a result, become entitled to benefits as asylum seekers are aware of their potential entitlement. [40608]

Mr. Evans: The Secretary of State will be advised by the Home Secretary when a country has been listed as having undergone an upheaval, such as to give rise to a well-founded fear of persecution of its nationals. The Benefits Agency will therefore advise claimants accordingly. The Home Secretary will inform relevant asylum interest groups and asylum law organisations that the country has been so listed.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the Income Support (General) Regulations so as to make income support payable to asylum seekers as from 8 January 1996 at the full rate rather than 90 per cent. [40609]

Mr. Evans: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research has been carried out into the reasons for persons claiming asylum after arrival in the United Kingdom; and what were the main findings relevant to the proposal to remove their entitlement to benefits. [40610]

Mr. Evans: I am not aware of any specific research project on this subject. However, according to Home Office figures, about 70 per cent. of asylum seekers claim in country having entered the UK as visitors, tourists or students. Only 4 per cent. of asylum decisions result in recognition as a refugee. Regardless of the reasons for persons claiming asylum after arrival, the Government believe that it cannot be right to pay benefits to this group. Those who claim asylum on entry to the UK will still have access to the benefits system while their asylum application is considered.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employees of the Child Support Agency since 1993 have been (a) dismissed, and (b) faced other disciplinary action for the improper use of confidential information. [39930]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 31 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the improper use of confidential information.

You requested details regarding the number of employees of the Child Support Agency, since 1993, who have either been dismissed from employment or faced other disciplinary action for the improper use of confidential information.

The figures are as follows:

(a) 8 dismissals

(b) 10 other disciplinary action

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 1 November 1995

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Ernest Saunders

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the latest estimate of the cost to the legal aid fund for Mr. Ernest Saunders' appeal to the appeal court; and what income Mr. Saunders disclosed in his application. [39611]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I do not consider it appropriate for me to speculate on the likely cost of this case while it is in progress. Because of the confidentiality provisions of the Legal Aid Act 1988, I cannot disclose any details of the application.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department if Mr. Ernest Saunders received legal aid in his case before the European Court. [39612]

Mr. David Davis: I have been asked to reply.

No. UK legal aid is not available for applications under the European convention on human rights and Mr. Saunders is not legally aided by the Council of Europe.

Court Circuits

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to reorganise the Wales and Chester circuits, causing north Wales to be attached to the north-west circuit, and south Wales to be attached to a south-west of England circuit. [39872]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about plans to reorganise the Wales and Chester Circuit.

There are no plans to reorganise the Wales and Chester Circuit in the way described or to create a North West Circuit or a South West of England Circuit.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to carry out public consultation on the future of the current circuits of England and Wales; which circuits are involved; and when the consultation will take place. [39867]

Mr. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about public consultation on the future of the current Circuits in England and Wales.

At the beginning of this year I commissioned a review of the internal management structure of the Court service. As part of this review, I am consulting interested parties about whether they would favour any marginal changes to current Circuit boundaries. The review of the management structure is being carried out in full consultation with the judiciary, the Bar, the Law Society and other agencies. A questionnaire will also shortly be circulated to major court user groups. Further consultation will be carried out during November and December, and again in the New Year, after the review team has reported to me.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what review has been carried out on the future of the Wales and Chester circuit; if he will make a statement. [39868]

Mr. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your question about a review of the future of the Wales and Chester Circuit.

A review of the internal management structure of the Court Service was commissioned at the beginning of the year. The review, which is due to report by Christmas, is considering the future role of Circuit Administrators, as well as all other management tiers in the Court Service. However, no review of Circuits themselves is contemplated.

Illegal Immigration (Employer Sanctions)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate has been made of the possible impact on the costs to the court system from the introduction of employer sanctions in respect of unlawful employment of illegal or other immigrants. [40230]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Discussions are under way with the immigration and nationality department on the likely number of cases which would enter the court system as a result of proposed measures to prevent illegal working. Such cases would be dealt with in magistrates courts, with appeals going to the Crown court.

Legal Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much to date has been paid in legal aid to each of the lawyers representing the Maxwell brothers. [39566]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 24 October, Official Report, column 506.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his office makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annul budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39433]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The non-judicial non-departmental public bodies for which my Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, and the appointments made to them in each of the last four years are as follows:

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
Advisory Committees on Justices of the Peace
Barnsley	2	0	0	[1]6(1)	0
Doncaster	0	0	3	0	1
Rotherham	3	0	1	[1]6(2)	0
Sheffield	6	1	0	[1]6(1)	0
Advisory Committee on General Commissioners of Income Tax

[1] Figures in brackets show the number of renewed appointments in the preceding figure.

The bodies do not have separate budgets.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many times in each month of the current calendar year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39858]

Mr. John Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for four agencies. In the current year, the Lord Chancellor and I met the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry in January; the chief executive of the Public Record Office in January and in July; the chief executive of the Public Trust Office in February and in June; and the chief executive of the Court Service in July. There was a meeting between the Lord Chancellor and the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry in June, which I was unable to attend. I have had no separate meetings with the agency chief executives to discuss the work of the agencies, but I attended the headquarters of Her Majesty's Land Registry in January in my capacity as the Lord Chancellor's Minister responsible for environmental issues, to witness the signing by the chief executive of the agency's declaration of corporate commitment on energy management.

Public Appointments (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due and the salary. [39429]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The non-judicial public appointments for which my Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire are those made to the following bodies:

The South Yorkshire Advisory Committee on General Commissioners of Income Tax

The Barnsley Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace

The Doncaster Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace

The Rotherham Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace

The Sheffield Advisory Committee on Justices of the Peace

Appointment terms are variable but are generally for a period of six years. Roughly half the members are replaced every three years. Salaries are not paid.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40518]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not held centrally. According to the best information available, no such proceedings have been begun by the Department in the past five years.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39492]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for four executive agencies—the Court Service, the Public Trust Office, Her Majesty's Land Registry and the Public Record Office. The question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executives of the agencies are best placed to provide the answer and I have accordingly asked them to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about Court Service staff numbers and cost.

The Court Service was established on 3 April 1995. There are therefore no figures for staff numbers or cost before this date.

Numbers of staff in the Court Service by grade as of 26 October 1995 are as follows:

	Number
Grade 2	1
Grade 3	2
Grade 4	3
Grade 5	12
Grade 6	44
Grade 7	121
SEO	246
HEO	783
EO	1,951
AO	4,922
AA	494
Support Grades	2,045

This makes a total staff complement of 10,624, including part-time staff and those staff on maternity leave or other career breaks.

The current projected paybill for the Court Service for the financial year 1995–96 is £180 million. To divide this further by grade would take up disproportionate time and cost.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question requesting a list, by grade, of the numbers of staff in HM Land Registry and their costs for (a) 1994–95 and (b) estimated figures for 1995–96.

I can provide the following information:

	1994–95	1995–96 (estimated)
Staff numbers (average number—Civil Service full time equivalents	8,585	8,221
Staff costs (including Social Security and other pension costs)	£146,278,000	£144,352,000

A breakdown by grade could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply, in respect of the Public Record Office, to your question about the numbers and cost by grade of staff of executive agencies for which he is responsible.

Estimated outturn for 1994–95 and plans for 1995–96 for Public Record Office staff numbers and paybill are set out in the Departmental Report of The Lord Chancellor's and Law Officer's Departments (Cm 2809), copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. A breakdown by grade could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 24 October, regarding the numbers of staff and their cost for the financial year 1994–5 and the estimated figure for the current financial year.

The estimated outturn for 1994–5 and plans for 1995–6 for this Agency's manpower and paybill are set out in my annual report, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. A breakdown by grade could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department (ii) agencies (iii) non-departmental bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40818]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In addition to the headquarters of the Lord Chancellor's Department and associated offices, the Lord Chancellor has responsibility for four agencies: the Court Service, HM Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. He also has responsibility for the Legal Aid Board and the Northern Ireland Court Service. As the question concerns a specific operational matter, the chief executives of the Land Registry and the Public Record Office have been asked to reply direct. This answer is, however, given on behalf of headquarters and the remaining agencies, the Legal Aid Board and the Northern Ireland Court Service.

It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the highest salary in payment in the Lord Chancellor's Department's headquarters falls within the £95,000 to £99,999 band in both 1994–95 and 1995–96.

In the Court Service, which did not become an agency until April 1995, the highest salary in payment in 1995–96 falls within the £75,000 to £79,999 band.

In the Public Trust Office the highest salary in payment in both 1994–95 and 1995–96 falls within the £55,000 to £59,999 band.

It has not been possible in the time available to identify the lowest salaries actually in payment either in LCD headquarters or the agencies. But the lowest starting pay of the most junior grade at age 16 falls in band £4,000 to £9,999. There has been no increase in these rates of pay since April 1994.

The highest salary in payment to staff of the Northern Ireland Court Service in both 1994–95 and 1995–96 falls within the £60,000 to £64,999 band: the lowest salary which has been in payment for both years falls within the £5,000 to £9,999 band.

In the Legal Aid Board, the lowest salary in payment in both 1994–95 and 1995–96 fell within the £5,000 to £9,999 band. The highest annual salary in 1994–95 fell within the £75,000 to £79,999 band. In 1995–96, the highest salary in payment falls within the band £65,000 to £69,999, with a possible additional bonus payable at the end of the year.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question on the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in the Land Registry in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96.

It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £5,000 – £9,999

1995–96: £5,000 – £9,999

The highest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £65,000 – £69,999

1995–96: £65,000 – £69,999

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply in respect of the Public Record Office, to your question about the lowest and highest full-time salaries paid to employees in 1994–95 and 1995–96.

It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £10,000–£14,999

1995–96: £10,000–£14,999

The highest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £60,000–£64,999

1995–96: £60,000–£64,999

The Keeper of Public Records' salary is published in the Public Record Office's Annual Report, a copy of which is deposited in the Library of the House.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department and (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental bodies whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–86, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93, (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96. [40817]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In addition to the headquarters of the Lord Chancellor's Department and associated offices, the Lord Chancellor has responsibility for four agencies: the Court Service, HM Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. He also has responsibility for the Legal Aid Board and the Northern Ireland Court Service. As the question concerns a specific operational matter, the chief executives of the Land Registry and the Public Record Office have been asked to reply direct. This answer is, however, given on behalf of headquarters, the remaining agencies, the Legal Aid Board and the Northern Ireland Court Service.

Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the department, agencies and non-departmental bodies. As members of the principal civil service pension scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme rules, which have been deposited in the Library of the House. There are no individuals in the headquarters of the Department, the Court Service, the Public Trust Office, the Legal Aid Board or the Northern Ireland Court Service whose total remuneration packages in the years in question exceeded £100,000, excluding pension benefits.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question on the number of individuals in the Land Registry whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000 (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–86, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93, (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96.

Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in HM Land Registry. As members of the Principal Civil Service Pensions Scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the Scheme rules which have been deposited in the Library of the House. There were no individuals within the Land Registry whose annual remuneration, excluding pension benefits, has exceeded £100,000 in the years mentioned.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply, in respect of the Public Record Office, to your question about the number of individuals whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000.

Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Public Record Office. As members of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the Scheme rules which have been deposited in the Library of the House. The number receiving annual remuneration above the sums specified, excluding pension benefits in the years in question was (i) Nil, (ii) Nil, (iii) Nil.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Know-how Funding

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total sum spent by the know-how funds in (a) Estonia, (b) Latvia and (c) Lithuania and (d) Georgia in each of the last five years; and what is the expected total in the next two years. [40667]

Mr. Hanley: Know-how fund expenditure to Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Georgia was as follows:

£ million

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96 (planned)
Estonia	0	0.008	0.359	0.310	0.691	0.695
Latvia	0	0	0.326	0.259	0.915	0.695
Lithuania	0	0.006	0.404	1.058	0.900	0.695
Pan Baltic	0	0.036	0.360	0.627	0.603	0.625
Georgia	0	0	0.026	0.071	0.496	0.600
Total	0	0.050	1.475	3.800	3.605	3.310

Discussions about future spending are currently under way.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Lobbies

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee for what reasons microphones are not allowed to be used at lobbies held in Westminster Hall by speakers, and what considerations underlie permission to use microphones as granted to the House authorities. [40372]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Lobbying is normally carried out in Central Lobby, but in view of the problems posed for disabled lobbyists, the authorities controlling Westminster Hall have agreed that mass lobbies by disabled people may take place there. This is designed to replicate the facilities offered in the Central Lobby, not a meeting room. The microphones and loudspeakers are for the House authorities to let lobbyists know which hon. Members are present and which part of the Hall they will be in.

Air Travel Costs

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what rebate agreements with airlines have been reached in respect of air travel costs. [41059]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I am pleased to announce that on 13 June, following negotiations between the House and British Airways, the Administration Committee endorsed a proposed agreement, whereby BA is willing to assist the House in reducing its air travel costs, in return for the House dealing with BA as a preferred airline, and subject to a certain minimum flown revenue.

Most BA flights on parliamentary business booked through the Palace of Westminster travel office since 1 April by hon. Members, their staff or Officers or staff of the House will count towards a percentage rebate on a sliding scale—the greater the flown revenue, the greater the percentage—as well as actual—rebate. All BA worldwide scheduled services in certain classes are covered, including club world, eurobudget, shuttle services and full economy class UK domestic fares. A complete list of eligible fares is available from the travel office.

It is important to stress that there is no element of "exclusivity" about this agreement. Individual hon. Members or Select Committees who, for example, prefer to deal with other carriers or travel agents, or who wish to take advantage of a group deal with another carrier are, of course, still perfectly free to do so. However, I would hope that all hon. Members will bear in mind that if they do book a BA flight through the travel office, it could now assist the House in being able to keep its air travel costs down.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39485]

The Attorney-General: The chief executive of the executive agency for which I am responsible, the Government Property Lawyers, will write direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from P. Horner to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 31 October 1995:

The Attorney-General has asked me to reply to your question about Executive Agency Staff. I am pleased to provide the details below for the Government Property Lawyers Agency:

Grade	Number	Cost £
a) Financial Year 1994–95
3	1	78,028.67
4–7	45.15	1,998,153.06
Executive Grades	37.12	713,190.47
Support Grades	22.75	293,048.37
Typing and Messengerial Grades	21.83	286,130.40
Total	127.85	3,368,550.97
b) Financial Year 1995–96 (estimated)
3	1	70,963.64
5–7	41.97	1,892,336.76
Executive Grades	36.65	735,750.24
Support Grades	23.6	323,552.37
Typing and Messengerial Grades	21.17	297,171.01
Totals	124.39	3,319,774.02

The information has been given in the above form to avoid identification of individuals.

Late Payments (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Attorney General how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40533]

The Attorney-General: The Departments for which I am responsible make every effort to settle invoices promptly, including those payable to small businesses. The specific information requested is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Attorney-General how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40534]

The Attorney-General: No such petitions have been presented by the Law Officers' Departments in their own behalf.

The Treasury Solicitor's Department has presented bankruptcy petitions on behalf of other Departments for which it acts. Information as to the number of employees affected is not maintained in the Treasury Solicitor's Department's records.

TREASURY

Value Added Tax

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would be raised by increasing the standard rate of VAT to (a) 19 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. per year. [40666]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Figures published in the Treasury's "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs" indicate that increasing the standard rate of VAT by one percentage point is estimated to raise £2,540 million. This implies the following:

New tax rate percentage	Estimated extra revenue £ million
20	6,350

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the cost in 1996–97 and a full year of raising the threshold for registration for VAT for small businesses by (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £30,000, (d) £40,000, (e) £50,000 and (f) £60,000.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Costs have not been calculated for the exact thresholds specified. Calculations have been done for the full-year revenue effects of raising the VAT registration threshold to the following levels:

	VAT registration threshold
	£60,000	£75,000	£100,000
Revenue effect (£ million)	–£120	–£245	–£425

It should also be noted that the EC sixth VAT directive restricts increases in the VAT threshold to those which "maintain its value in real terms".

Windfall Taxes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement in his Department's policy in respect of windfall taxes; and if he will make a statement. [40827]

Mr. Jack: It would be inappropriate to comment on tax matters at this stage in the Budget cycle.

Beer Duty

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research has been undertaken on the revenue effect of lowering the level of excise duty on beer, on sources of tax revenue other than excise duty and directly associated VAT. [38476]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Government costings of a cut in beer duty, published in the tax ready reckoner, allow for the direct effects on indirect tax revenues when consumers switch expenditure from other goods to beer. These calculations make use of a model developed by the Institute for Fiscal Studies, based on detailed data on how demand for individual goods and services has responded to price changes in the past.

Following through the impact on other sources of tax revenue would require assumptions about the stance of fiscal and monetary policy. It is that overall policy stance that is the prime determinant of the effect on receipts, which would require simulation on a macro-economic model, such as that of the Treasury.

The Brewers and Licensed Retailers Association has published its own estimates of the effect on government revenues of a reduction in beer duty, most recently in "A New Deal: A Memorandum to HM Treasury", June 1995.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimate of income from taxes on beers, wines, spirits, tobacco and cigarettes for the current year. [40604]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The summer economic forecast published in June estimated revenues for the current year to be as follows:

	£ billion
Beers (and ciders)	2.7
Wines	1.2
Spirits	1.9
Tobacco	7.3

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the amount of corporate taxation avoidance for each year since 1979; [38865]

(2) what assessment he has made of the amount of capital gains taxation avoidance for each year since 1979. [38866]

Mr. Jack: We continue to monitor examples of the exploitation of tax regulations which result in tax loss. Analysis of these is one of the key factors in determining each year new policies designed to counter avoidance.

Income Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers on PAYE have gross incomes (a) under £10,00, (b) £25,000 (c) £50,000, (d) £75,000, (e) £100,000, (f) £125,000, (g) £150,000, (h) £175,000, (i) £200,000 and (j) over £250,000, specifying in each case the average amount of income subject to PAYE. [39113]

Mr. Jack: Available estimates for 1995–95 are given in the table.

Range of Gross Income[1]	Taxpayers with a source of income subject to PAYE Thousands	Gross Income[1] £ million	Average PAYE income £[2]
£0–£10,000	8,000	54,800	5,780
£10,000–£25,000	11,200	179,000	15,100
£25,000–£50,000	2,400	77,800	30,200
£50,000–£75,000	240	14,500	54,000
£75,000–£100,000	70	5,610	72,300
£100,000 and over	80	14,800	147,000
Total	22,000	346,000	14,400

[1] Gross income is defined as total income for income tax purposes. It excludes income from certain social security benefits and some investment income such as national savings certificates.

[2] Main and subsidiary source schedule E income, occupational pensions, other schedule E income and taxable expenses and benefits.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the basic rate of income tax would be increased to raise an additional £1,000 million in revenue; how much the basic rate of income tax would be increased to raise this sum if the spread of all taxation was consistent with that on 1 June; and if he will make a statement. [39293]

Mr. Jack: The basic rate of income tax would need to be raised by about ½p.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost in 1996–97 and a full year of widening the 20p band of tax to the degree necessary to make half of all taxpayers liable at the 20p rate of tax; and if he will indicate the upper limit of the 20p rate that would be necessary to achieve this. [40775]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The lower rate band would need to be widened to £8,500. The direct revenue cost would be about £4.1 billion in a full year at 1996–97 income levels. This estimate includes consequential effects on the yield of capital gains.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for (a) the number of higher rate taxpayers and (b) the total number of taxpayers on gross incomes of between £31,000 and £40,000 in £1,000 bands. [40786]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Provisional estimates for 1995–96 are given in the table.

Range of gross income[1] £	Number of taxpayers in 1995–96 Thousands	Higher rate taxpayers in 1995–96
£31,000–£32,000	170	160
£32,000–£33,000	120	120
£33,000–£34,000	120	120
£34,000–£35,000	110	110
£35,000–£36,000	120	120
£36,000–£37,000	90	90
£37,000–£38,000	80	80
£38,000–£39,000	70	70
£39,000–£40,000	60	60

[1] Gross income is defined as total income for income tax purposes. It excludes income from certain social security benefits and some investment income such as national savings certificates.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost in 1996–97 and a full year of reducing the number of people paying tax at the higher rate to (a) 2 million, (b) 1.5 million, (c) 1 million, (d) 0.75 million and (e) 0.5 million indicating in each case the upper limit for the 25p rate. [40776]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Estimated full-year costs at 1996–97 income levels are given in the table.

Reduction in the number of higher rate taxpayers to	Full year revenue cost at 1996–97 levels £ billion	Basic rate limit assumed
2 million	0.4	26,500
1.5 million	1.3	29,800
1 million	2.3	35,300
0.75 million	3.0	40,300
0.5 million	3.6	46,300

Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 11 February 1992 to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke), Official Report, column 429, on the effect on Treasury revenues of introducing limits on allowances and reliefs, including in the calculation only those allowances and reliefs taken at the marginal rate. [39099]

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that at 1995–96 levels of income the introduction of the upper limits specified would yield the following:

Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs[1] £	Yield in full year £ million
9,000	560
10,000	490
11,000	430
12,000	380
13,000	340
14,000	310
15,000	290
16,000	260

[1] Including only allowances and reliefs given at marginal rates.

The number of people who would be affected are as follows:

£ Thousands

Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs[1] £	Basic rate taxpayers, lower rate taxpayers and non taxpayers	Higher rate taxpayers
9,000	50	180
10,000	30	140
11,000	30	110
12,000	20	90
13,000	10	80
14,000	10	70
15,000	10	60
16,000	10	50

[1] Including only allowances and reliefs given at marginal rates.

Fewer than 10,000 basic rate taxpayers would become higher rate taxpayers.

The estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a limit.

Capital Gains and Inheritance Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the full-year cost of abolition of (a) capital gains tax and (b) inheritance tax. [39103]

Mr. Jack: Receipts from capital gains tax, excluding tax on gains of companies, and inheritance tax are forecast to be £1.1 billion and £1.6 billion respectively in 1996–97.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current estimate of the amount of public sector capital investment which will have been approved under the private finance initiative by the end of 1995; to what extent the estimate has changed; and if he will make a statement. [39345]

Mr. Jack: Information on private finance projects is assembled in the form of total contract values rather than specifically public sector capital investment. Information on the numerous smaller contracts is not kept centrally, but at the last Budget the Chancellor announced that contracts with a capital value of £5 billion were due to be signed in this financial year. We are on target.

Excise Verification Officers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many excise verification officers were deployed by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995. [40208]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information is not available in the format requested. In the financial year 1993–94 and 1994–95 some 250 staff years were assigned to single market excise work; the majority of these were specially trained excise verification officers. In the financial year 1995–96 an additional 12 staff years were designated to counter excise offences.

National Grid Flotation

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the agreements reached between the Inland Revenue and the regional electricity companies over tax liabilities in relation to the flotation of the National Grid, with particular reference to letters of comfort issued by the Inland Revenue. [40571]

Mr. Jack: The tax affairs of particular companies are a confidential matter between those companies and the Inland Revenue.

Termination of Employment Payments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost in 1994–95 of tax relief given at a rate of (a) 40 per cent. and (b) 25 per cent. on the first £30,000 of payments made on termination of employment. [39142]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 October 1995]: The total cost of tax relief on the first £30,000 of payments made on termination of employment is estimated to be about £1,600 million in 1994–95. A breakdown of this figure at each marginal tax rate is given in the following table:

Cost of tax relief	£ million
Lower rate of 20 per cent.	50
Basic rate of 25 per cent.	800
Higher rate of 40 per cent.	750
Total	1,600

Private Finance Panel

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the names, declared interests, date of appointment and reason for selection of the members of the Private Finance Panel [39381]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The current members and main interests of the Private Finance Panel are:

Sir Christopher Bland

Chairman, NFC Plc, Life Sciences International plc and Hammersmith Hospitals Trust.

Mr. Malcolm R. Bates

Deputy Managing Director, GEC; Non-executive Director, Enterprise Oil.

Mr. Allan Gormly CBE

Chairman, Royal Insurance Holdings plc; Joint Deputy Chairman, Trafalgar House plc; Director, National Grid Co. plc, BPB Industries plc, Brixton Estate plc, Eurorail Ltd.

Mr. Hugh R. Jenkins

Chief Executive, Prudential Portfolio Managers; Director, Prudential Corporation; Member, DoE Property Advisory Group.

Mr. Pen Kent

Director, Bank of England.

Ms Sheila V. Masters

Partner, KPMG Peat Marwick; Non-executive Director, Bank of England; Non-executive Member, Inland Revenue Management Board and NHS Policy Board.

Sir Brian Pearse

Chairman, The Housing Corporation, Lucas Industries, British Invisibles and Young Enterprise. Director, Smith and Nephew plc, Financial Reporting Council, BOTB, London First Centre.

Mr. Neville Simms

Group Chief Executive, Tarmac plc; Non-executive Director, Courtaulds plc.

Mr. Alastair Ross Goobey

Chief Executive, PosTel Investment Management; Non-executive Director Cheltenham & Gloucester Building Society; Non-executive Director, TR Property Investment Trust.

Mr. Murray Stuart

Chairman, Scottish Power; Deputy Chairman, Audit Commission; Director, Hill Samuel.

Mr. Steve Robson

Director (Finance, Regulation and Industry), HM Treasury.

All the members were appointed in November 1993, with the exceptions of Sir Christopher Bland (November 1994), Mr. Ross Goobey (September 1995) and Mr. Stuart (October 1995).

The panel was selected, in discussions between both the previous and present chairmen and myself, in order to bring a mixture of experience and expertise to the task of promoting the progress of the private finance initiative.

Private Medical Insurance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what discussions have taken place, and with whom, about extending private medical insurance tax relief to those policies specifically designed to cover long-term care needs; [39383]

(2) what representations have been made to his Department concerning extending private medical insurance tax relief to those policies specifically designed to cover long-term care needs. [39384]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 October 1995]: The Treasury receives representations from, and has discussions with, many individuals and organisations with regard to taxation issues including tax relief for policies covering long-term care.

Taxation

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his best estimate at 1995–96 prices and in cash terms for the total amount of (a) direct and (b) indirect tax paid since 1945 by (i) a married man on average earnings with two children where only the man is working and (ii) a single person on three quarters of average earnings. [40781]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Tables showing the burden of direct taxes and indirect taxes on various specimen households since 1978–79 are shown in the tax-benefit reference manual, copies of which are held in the House of Commons Library. Comparable figures for both direct and indirect taxes are not available for earlier years.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the number of companies receiving corporation tax repayments in excess of £250 million in 1994–95 or the latest available year. [40785]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Information held centrally shows that no repayment of corporation tax exceeded £250 million in 1994–95, the latest available year.

Company Dividends

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take on the use of special dividends in relation to takeovers and mergers. [40779]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Dividend policy is a matter for the private sector companies concerned.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for the latest available year for estates valued at over (a) £2 million, (b) £3 million, (c) £4 million, (d) £5 million and (e) £6 million, (i) the number of estates notified for probate, (ii) the inheritance tax raised and (iii) the value of exemptions. [40784]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Provisional estimates for estates applying for grants of representation where death occurred in the financial year 1991–92, and where the net estate was valued at £2 million or over, are given. Figures for more recent years are not available.

	1991-92
(i) Number of estates applying for grants of representations	217
(ii) Inheritance tax liabilities	£140 million
(iii) Total capital value of exemptions and reliefs[1]	£390 million

[1] Including value of IHT threshold.

A further breakdown of estates over £2 million cannot be reliably estimated and, in any case, the numbers involved may be too small to give adequate protection to the confidentiality of individual estates.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the recognition of states and boundaries following policy decisions taken in respect of the successor states of the former Yugoslavia. [40703]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The United Kingdom recognised the Republics of Croatia and Slovenia on 15 January 1992, the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina on 7 April 1992 and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia on 8 April 1993. The United Kingdom does not recognise the statehood of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia—Serbia and Montenegro. Succession issues, such as the division of assets and liabilities, will be resolved after the conclusion of the peace process.

United States of America

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received regarding United Kingdom citizens refused entry or re-entry into the United States of America at United States' ports of entry in the last five years; and how many of these involved United Kingdom citizens seeking to return to the United States of America after a visit to Canada. [40692]

Mr. Hanley: Eleven and none respectively.

Foreign Affairs Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Foreign Affairs Council of 2 and 3 October. [40111]

Mr. David Davis: The outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council of 2 October was recorded in a letter from the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs the hon. Member for Boothferry, to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Bankruptcy Petition

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40524]

Mr. Hanley: The information requested will take some time to obtain. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Late Payments (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40523]

Mr. Hanley: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office—diplomatic wing and Overseas Development Administration—is committed to the CBI prompt payment code. This requires all invoices to be paid within the agreed credit period, or within 30 days of receipt where no credit period has been agreed. The following table shows the percentage of all invoices not paid on time by the diplomatic wing, the Overseas Development Administration, and the executive agencies Wilton Park and the Natural Resources Institute. Separate figures for small businesses' invoices are not available.

British Citizens Overseas

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in descending order the estimates he has available of (a) the number of British citizens resident in each overseas country, (b) the number of such citizens registered to vote in United Kingdom elections and (c) the percentage which this is of (a), with overall totals. [40227]

Mr. Hanley: The estimated number of Britons resident abroad as at end December 1994 in descending order by country is below.

In 1994 18,552 overseas electors were registered to vote in United Kingdom elections, representing 0.017 per cent. of the total number of Britons resident abroad.

French Nuclear Testing Programme

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between French and British officials on the environmental effects of the French nuclear testing programme. [40197]

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 31 October 1995]: British officials have discussed with French counterparts a number of aspects relating to the resumption of French nuclear testing, including the environmental effects.

Ken Saro-Wiwa

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Nigerian military Government about the case of Ken Saro-Wiwa; and what representations he has received about the case. [40622]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 31 October 1995]: We and our European Union partners have raised this case with the Nigerian Government many times. We deplore the death sentences passed on Ken Saro-Wiwa and his co-defendants following a flawed judicial process and urge the Nigerian authorities to commute these sentences. We have received a large number of representations on the case, from Members of both Houses and members of the public.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will place in the Library a copy of the Oftel submission which she has received and which relates to digital broadcasting. [39925]

Mr. Sproat: Oftel has agreed that the contents of its submission in response to digital terrestrial broadcasting (Cm 2946) may be made public and I have today placed copies in the Libraries of the House.

National Lottery

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what allocation of national lottery funds has been made to date to organisations and projects in the Cannock Chase district council area. [40203]

Mr. Sproat: Figures for national lottery funds broken down by district council areas are not currently available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to allow the Library Association access to national lottery funding. [40252]

Mr. Sproat: All bodies, including the Library Association, can apply for national lottery funding. All applications are judged against the criteria of the distributing bodies and decisions about awards are for them to make.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the European Union legislation that applies to the capping of public expenditure grants to organisations which are in receipt of national lottery money; and if she will make a statement. [39070]

Mr. Sproat: I am not aware of any such legislation.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the projects which have received lottery funds and have consequently been excluded from receiving public funds for which they would normally be eligible. [38345]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 24 October 1995]: I know of no such projects.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has received from Wales concerning the operation of the national lottery. [39576]

Mr. Sproat: The national lottery is an outstanding success and has become the focus of a great deal of attention. Bearing this in mind, a large number of representations concerning the operation of the national lottery have been received from all of the United Kingdom. The Government have always stated that they will be keeping all aspects of the lottery under review and such representations as I have received are a useful contribution to this process.

Late Payments (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how often her Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40515]

Mr. Sproat: My Department is committed to the payment of invoices within agreed contractual provisions or within 30 days of the presentation of a valid invoice or delivery, if later. While the information requested is not available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost, the following has been produced on the basis of a sample of invoices received by the Department of National Heritage:

Year	Invoices received	Payment delayed	Percentage paid on time
1993–94	291	42	85.6
1994–95	1,323	124	90.6
1995–96	243	12	95.1

Our records cannot be used to determine "small businesses". There are no comparable departmental figures for earlier years as the Department's payment system was not in place until 1993, following the establishment of DNH in April 1992.

The Royal Parks agency and Historic Royal Palaces agency do not currently hold records that could provide the information requested, it could only be provided at disproportionate cost. An examination of invoices for goods and services paid by the Royal Parks agency during October 1994 indicated that 96 per cent. were paid within the 30-day credit period allowed.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by her Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40516]

Mr. Sproat: Since the establishment of the Department of National Heritage in April 1992 no such petitions have been raised.

Mediaeval Boat Hull, Bedwin Sands

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assistance her Department has given to the archaeologists' attempts to raise a mediaeval boat hull from the Bedwin Sands in the Severn estuary; and if she will make a statement. [39572]

Mr. Sproat: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Wales on 30 October 1995, Official Report, on 30 October 1995, column 95.

Libraries

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals she has to connect libraries to the Internet; and if she will provide funding to ensure that customers have free access to the service. [40253]

Mr. Sproat: I am considering the use of new technology in public libraries as part of the on-going public library review, and this topic will be covered in a ministerial statement on the outcome of the review, later this year. However, connection to the Internet, and policy on whether to charge for public access, is a matter for individual library authorities.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many libraries in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands have been closed over the past five years. [40249]

Mr. Sproat: I do not hold this information for England. Questions about public libraries in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are for their respective Secretaries of State.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations she has received in respect of the future of the libraries in the United Kingdom. [40255]

Mr. Sproat: We have received representations on both the Aslib report, which is a key element in the public library review, and the KPMG/capital planning information report on the scope for contracting out in public libraries. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to make a further statement to Parliament on these by the end of the year. We have also received a number of representations relating to the Library Association's current campaign. Questions about public libraries in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are for their respective Secretaries of State.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the impact of the collapse of the net book agreement on the range of books library suppliers are able to offer libraries. [40251]

Mr. Sproat: The net book agreement was a voluntary arrangement in which the Government played no part. It is to early to tell what effect the removal of the agreement will have on the book market and on the range of books offered by library suppliers.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many mobile libraries operated in (a) the United Kingdom (b) the west midlands during (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94 and (iii) 1994–95; and what are the projected figures for each of the next two years; [40254]

(2) how many libraries in the United Kingdom now open for more than 60 hours per week; and how many opened for more than 60 hours per week during (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94. [40248]

Mr. Sproat: Such information is contained in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy's public library statistics, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The latest actual information is for 1993–94, but estimates are available for 1994–95.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many libraries in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the west midlands she expects to (i) close or (ii) reduce the service they provide over the next two years. [40250]

Mr. Sproat: In England such matters are for local authorities to decide. Questions about public libraries in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are for their respective Secretaries of State.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Illegal Immigration (Employer Sanctions)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list employers' organisations and other bodies which have made representations about his proposals for the introduction of employer sanctions to deter the employment of illegal immigrants or of those legally here but with a prohibition against working; and if he will place in the Library copies of the representations. [40228]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have received written representations from the Institute of Directors and from the St. Albans branch of Amnesty International. It would not be appropriate for me to place copies of these letters in the Library.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has available as to the scale of the problem of employers taking on illegal workers. [40229]

Mr. Kirkhope: No such estimates are available, but in 1994 over 10,000 people were detected by the immigration service working while either here illegally or here legally but prohibited from taking work.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department fo businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40520]

Mr. Howard: Information is not recorded in the form requested.

Late Payment (Small Business)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40519]

Mr. Howard: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Departments and their agencies are required to provide details of their payment performance in their annual reports. In its 1995 annual report the Home Office reported that 92 per cent. of all valid invoices were paid within 30 days. There is no reason to believe that analysis of payments made to small businesses would show a different percentage.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40811]

Mr. Howard: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. This provides the following information:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
Lowest bands
Home Office	5,000–10,000	5,000–10,000
Agencies	5,000–10,000	5,000–10,000
NDPBs	5,000–10,000[1]	5,000–10,000[1]

Travel Document Section

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the main recommendations of the recent efficiency review of the travel document section; when those recommendations are to be implemented; and if he will make a statement. [40852]

Mr. Kirkhope: The following main recommendations of the efficiency review of the travel document section have been accepted and take effect from today: that cases should be allocated on arrival to dedicated teams within the section which should retain responsibility for processing the application from start to finish. Applications should be acknowledged and an indication given of the time likely to be needed to process them. Mandatory issues should be given priority and completed with the minimum of delay. Management information systems should be improved.

Two other main recommendations will be implemented as soon as the preparatory work, including consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, has been completed. These were: to introduce an improved travel document; in connection with the improved travel document, to review and redesign the application form.

The travel document section must retain its responsibility to consider applications for documents carefully and to check for signs of abuse, but I am satisfied that these recommendations will produce a better service for applicants entitled to a Home Office travel document.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) 100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–86, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93, (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96. [40810]

Mr. Howard: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies or non-departmental public bodies. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme rules which had been deposited in the Library.

There are only a few exceptions in my Department. One person was paid at a total rate of more than £100,000 in 1992–93, and two actually received more than £100,000 in 1994–95. Five people will have in effect been paid over £100,000 by the end of the financial year 1995–96, and one further person was paid at a rate of more than £100,000 for part of the year.

No individual has earned or will earn in excess of £200,000 or £300,000 in the period specified.

Police National Computer

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for recording cautions on the police national computer. [41372]

Mr. Maclean: From 1 November, the police service will record all cautions administered for reportable offences on the Phoenix database of the police national computer. This will ensure for the first time that police will have access to records of cautions administered by other forces as well as those issued by their own force.

Police Stations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new police stations have opened in each year since 1979. [40468]

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations in each English county (a) are open 24 hours per day and (b) have restricted opening times. [40467]

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

Prison Overcrowding

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contractual provisions exist for overcrowding in (a) Her Majesty's prison Wolds, (b) Her Majesty's prison Blakenhurst and (c) Her Majesty's prison Doncaster; and if he will list in each case (i) the occasions on which they were overcrowded and (ii) details of any additional payments made to the contractors. [40465]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 2 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about overcrowding in the contractually-managed prisons.

There is no contractual provision for overcrowding in Wolds or Blakenhurst prisons. In the contract for Doncaster prison, there is provision for the Prison Service to ask the contractor to accommodate 1,169 prisoners.

Hitherto, it has not been Prison Service policy to overcrowd new prisons. In line with this policy none of these prisons have been overcrowded, although all prisons, whether in the public sector or the private sector, occasionally hold small numbers of prisoners above their normal capacity for operational reasons.

No additional payments to cover overcrowding have been made to any of the contractors.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assumptions he has made about the number of policemen and women who are to be recruited into the service as a result of the Prime Minister's announcement at the Conservative party conference being out on foot patrol at any given point in time. [40475]

Mr. Maclean: None. There will be extra funding available to enable chief constables to recruit an additional 5,000 officers over the next three years. The deployment of officers is an operational matter for chief constables.

Sheehy Reforms

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the benefits and disbenefits of the Sheehy reforms. [40473]

Mr. Maclean: The Government's decision on police pay and conditions of service, following the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards, was informed by detailed recommendations by the police negotiating board, whose careful consideration of each of the proposed reforms took account of their implications for the efficiency management of the police service.

Some of the immediate benefits of the Government's reforms were a more streamlined management structure, new pay structures, a rationalisation of an outdated system of allowances, new arrangements for the management of the payment of overtime and a reform of the rules governing pay while on sick leave.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalty he has imposed on the contractors of Her Majesty's prison Doncaster for exceeding the number of assaults allowed for in the contract. [40464]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 1 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about assaults at Doncaster prison.

No penalty has been imposed on Premier Prison Services Ltd in relation to the number of assaults at Doncaster prison. The total number of assaults on prisoners and staff in the first year of operation did not exceed a level which would be consistent with the population mix and the likely incidence of assaults in a newly opened prison.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) convicted and (b) remand prisoners there were in Doncaster prison in each of the past 12 months. [39563]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 81 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many (a) convicted and (b) remand prisoners there were in Doncaster prison in each of the past 12 months.

The information requested (for the last day of the month) is given in the attached table.

Prison Population Estimates

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his estimates for the prison population for each of the next five years following his recent announcement; and what are the previous projections. [40460]

Mr. Maclean: The most recent projections of long-term trends in the prison population to 2002 were published in Home Office statistical bulletin 4/95, a copy of which is in the Library. A White Paper will be published early in 1996 setting out full details of the Government's proposals and an assessment of their implications.

Prison Health Services

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his department in regard to supporting and encouraging the working of local community health councils with hospital services within the prison department; and if he will make a statement. [39755]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about policy on the support of local community health councils working with health care services in the Prison Service.

The local community health councils are groups of lay people who operate in the National Health Service. They have a wide remit which involves among other things, inspection of hospital services and patient advocacy.

A similar function is carried out within prisons by Boards of Visitors, which are appointed by and report directly to the Home Secretary. All aspects of prison life including prison health care centres are open to Boards of Visitors and they fulfil the same role as the local community health councils with regard to prisoners.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39565]

Mr. Howard: The chief executives of the United Kingdom Passport Agency and the Fire Service College, the Director General of the Forensic Science Service and the temporary Director General of the Prison Service have advised me that the information available is as shown in the tables.

Council Tax (Non-payment)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were serving a sentence of imprisonment for the non-payment of their council tax as at 10 October. [39753]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many people were serving a sentence of imprisonment for the non-payment of their council tax as at 10 October.

The latest available information is for 30 September 1995. On that date there were no prisoners in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for non-payment of council tax.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Immigration Advisory Service calling for detained asylum seekers to be entitled for their detention to be reviewed on a weekly basis by adjudicators of the Independent Appellate Authority; what has been his response to such representations; and if he will make a statement. [40443]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 31 October 1995]: There is no record of any representations from the Immigration Advisory Service calling for a change in policy on the review of detention.

Director General of the Prison Service

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the post of Director General of the Prison Service is to go out to open advertisement; and what qualities he will seek in the successful applicant. [39841]

Mr. Howard: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Custody Statistics

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners now held in custody have currently served (a) at least 30 years, (b) at least 25 years and (c) at least 20 years continuously in custody. [39813]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. William Powell, dated 1 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many prisoners now held in custody have currently served (a) at least 30 years, (b) at least 25 years and (c) at least 20 years continuously in custody.

The information is not available in the form requested as detailed information about a prisoner's movements is not available centrally. The available information relates to those prisoners whose date of sentence was 20, 25 or 30 years ago. Provisional information for 30 September 1995 shows that two hundred prisoners were sentenced more than 20 years ago, eighty four of whom were sentenced more than 25 years ago and twenty five more than 30 years ago.

Rapists

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many male prisoners are currently serving life sentences for rape; and how many of this group are repeat offenders. [39601]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 1 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many male prisoners are currently serving life sentences for rape; and how many of this group are repeat offenders.

The latest available information is for 31 December 1994. On that date there were 188 males in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales serving a life sentence for rape. Information on the number of repeat offenders is not immediately available. I will write to you again with this information as soon as possible.

Temazepam

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his latest estimate of the number of people who have had one or more limbs amputated as a result of injecting the gel formulation of the drug Temazepam during each of the past five years; [39184]

(2) what is his latest estimate of the number of deaths in each of the past five years which were related to the abuse of the drug Temazepam; what estimate he has made of the percentage of these which involved the gel formulation; and if he will make a statement. [39196]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health on 27 October Official Report, column 849.

Crime Prevention Agency

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the structure of the new Crime Prevention Agency announced in his speech of 12 October; what type of body will be in charge of it; from which institutions or bodies staff will be recruited or seconded; and which existing organisation will become part of the agency or have staff transferred to it. [39961]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 October 1995]: I will announce the details shortly.

Prostitution

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned into how other EC countries deal with prostitution, kerb crawling and soliciting. [40577]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 31 October 1995]: We have not commissioned any research into how other EC countries deal with prostitution, kerb crawling and soliciting.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were prosecuted for (a) soliciting, (b) prostitution and (c) kerb crawling in each of the last five years. [40578]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The information is given in the table:

Number of persons prosecuted for certain offences 1990–1994[1]

England and Wales

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to make kerb crawling and soliciting recordable offences. [40580]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Loitering and soliciting for the purposes of prostitution is already a recordable offence. Kerb crawling currently is not, but I am considering whether it should be.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the effectiveness of the Street Offences Act 1959 and other relevant legislation in relation to soliciting, prostitution and kerb crawling. [40581]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 31 October 1995]: We believe that the law in relation to soliciting, prostitution and kerb crawling is generally effective, and we have no plans to review it.

ENVIRONMENT

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what grant-givings funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38599]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him yesterday by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of National Heritage.

Local Government Finance

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the shire counties' budgets for 1994–95, ranking them in order from the largest increase from the previous year to the lowest. [38580]

Mr. Curry: The requested information is as follows:

Revenue account returns (RA94 and RA95).

Note:

Net revenue expenditure is financed through revenue support grant, redistributed non-domestic rates, council taxes and withdrawals from financial reserves. Much of the increase in net revenue expenditure in shire counties between 1993–94 and 1994–95 can be attributed to the increased responsibilities associated with care in community.

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of revenue support grant paid to each shire county in 1994–95, indicating the percentage movement from the previous year. [38577]

Mr. Curry: The requested information is as follows:

Revenue account (RA95) return.

Note:

Revenue support grant is calculated as the difference between an authority's standard spending assessment and the sum of the income from its council tax, assuming that its tax was set at the council tax for standard spending, and its share of the distributable amount of non-domestic rates. At national level, the change in the amount of RSG reflects changes in each of these elements. The differential increases in RSG between authorities will reflect changes in assessed need function and in the size of their own taxbase. Between 1993–94 and 1994–95 in particular, total RSG increased through the fall in the yield of the NDR, and the increase in SSA necessitated by increased responsibilities for local authorities associated with care in the community. In shire counties, the latter amounted to some £350 million.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that counties that become unitary local authorities in 1997 do not lose the financial contributions they currently receive in respect of their sites and ancient monuments record; and if he will make a statement. [40008]

Sir Paul Beresford: Revenue support grant allocations are made using a formula to assess relative expenditure need for each authority to provide its services to a standard level. It will therefore continue to be applied to authorities affected by an order for structural change taking account of their provision of both "county" and "district" functions.

Health and Safety Appeals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to create an appeals tribunal to hear appeals for environmental information and health and safety information. [39361]

Sir Paul Beresford: Under current plans, proposals for a tribunal will be included in the Government's legislative proposals to create a new access right to health and safety information. I cannot anticipate when parliamentary time will be available to create the new right, as I advised the hon. Member in Committee on 13 June.

Rental Accommodation

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes in London for rent in the (a) public and (b) private sectors are currently unoccupied. [39614]

Mr. Clappison: The numbers of local authority and housing association dwellings in London that were vacant on 1 April 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, were as follows:

	Number (per cent. of stock)
Local authority dwellings[1]
All vacants	18,675 (2.9)
of which management vacants[2]	10,485 (1.6)
Housing association dwellings[3]
All vacants	7,896 (4.3)
of which management vacants[2]	3,193 (1.7)

[2] Available for letting immediately or after minor repairs.

[3] Annual Housing Corporation HAR10/1 returns. The figures are not grossed up to take account of the small number of associations which did not submit a return.

The information which is available on private sector vacant dwellings, other than those of housing associations, does not identify separately those which are for rent.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39851]

Mr. Gummer: In the current year I have met the head of the Building Research Establishment once, the head of the Planning Inspectorate twice and the head of the Security Facilities Executive once. I have not met the heads of the two other next steps agencies for which my Department is responsible in the current year—the Buying Agency and the QE II Conference Centre.

Pollution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of (a) nitrogen oxide, (b) carbon monoxide, (c) volatile organic compounds and (d) black smoke emissions in the atmosphere in 1983 and 1993. [39889]

Mr. Clappison: National emissions of nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide, non-methane volatile organic compounds and black smoke in 1983 and 1993 are presented in the table.

Thousand tonnes

	National Emissions
Pollutants	1983	1993
Nitrogen Oxides	2,331	2,347
Carbon Monoxide	5,065	5,641
Volatile Organic Compounds	2,384	2,418
Black Smoke	511	444

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he had to simplify and clarify the measures of carbon dioxide and oxides of nitrogen used in the United Kingdom. [39899]

Mr. Clappison: My Department publishes data on UK emissions of carbon dioxide and oxides of nitrogen annually in accordance with international guidelines set out by the intergovernmental panel on climate change and the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe. A simple interpretation of the carbon dioxide data is given every six months in the Department's climate change newsletter.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on siting pollution monitoring sites in order to register typical readings. [39900]

Mr. Clappison: Monitoring stations are sited taking into account independent expert advice in order to provide a comprehensive picture of air pollution across the country. Sites are selected according to the following criteria:

—urban background sites give information on the exposure of large numbers of people over significant periods of time;

—kerbside sites give information on the highest, albeit transient, levels of traffic-related pollution to which the public are exposed;

—hot spot sites are selected to find locations where the highest levels of pollution may occur after rigorous screening exercises using diffusion tubes.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what representations he has received from local authorities asking him to use his powers as set out in the Environment Act 1995 to enable them to stop vehicles and test their emissions. [40363]

Mr. Clappison: I have received a number of representations from local authorities concerning powers to stop vehicles and test their emissions. There are no plans to change the law which only permits police officers to stop vehicles. However, enabling regulations could be made under section 87 of the Environment Act 1995 to permit local authorities, with police support, to carry our emissions checks on vehicles using the road. We are currently consulting with interested parties on how this might be done in practice.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what proposals he has to introduce air quality standards to allow him to use powers contained in the Environment Act 1995 to set up air quality management areas. [40362]

Mr. Clappison: The national air quality strategy will include proposals for air quality standards. The strategy will be published for consultation under section 80 of the Environment Act 1995 within the next few months.

Canals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the result of the Government's efforts to encourage greater use of canals. [39980]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The management and operation of canals rests with the British Waterways Board and a range of other public and private bodies. One of the board's objectives is to promote the maximum use of the waterways for leisure, recreation and amenity, and where appropriate for freight transport.

There are over 150 million visits each year to the country's canals for boating, walking, angling and other pursuits. Last year, there were around 250,000 boating holidays on canals, a further increase of nearly 5 per cent. to 29,767 in the number of private pleasure boats licensed for canals, and BWB opened its second national waterway walk on the Kennet and Avon Canal.

There are also a number of Government programmes, including the single regeneration budget challenge fund, city challenge and urban development corporations, which encourage canal-side and related development. These programmes have contributed to the creation of jobs in the communities served by canals.

Pleasure Boats (Speed Limits)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policies towards speed limits for pleasure boats and holiday cruisers on inland waterways and rivers. [40030]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Navigation authorities use their byelaw-making powers to determine speed limits for pleasure boats and holiday cruisers on their waterways. The limits are set at levels which suit local circumstances, following consultation with user groups.

Planning Application

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those planning applications since 1987 which he has chosen not to call in for his own decision despite being urged to do so by the Countryside Commission. [40477]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not held centrally.

Noise Disturbances

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has with regard to which local authorities have environmental health departments operating a 24-hour service in respect of noise disturbances. [40485]

Mr. Clappison: Of 328 local authorities in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland which responded to a survey by the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health in December 1994, 117 operate a 24-hour noise service. A further 134 operate a range of partial "out of hours" services, including responding to complaints on certain nights of the week and following up complaints received during normal working hours. The ability to respond will depend on staff resources in relation to the number and nature of complaints. The same survey indicated that target response times for domestic noise complaints were as follows:

	Authorities	(Per cent.)
Immediate response	9	(2.7)
Within 24 hours	51	(15.5)
Within 2-7 days	206	(62.8)
Longer than 7 days	9	(2.7)
Prioritised response service	49	(14.9)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current position regarding proposals to introduce a fine for noise disturbances during the night and to empower environmental health officers to confiscate equipment; and if he will make a statement. [40486]

Mr. Clappison: The proposal to introduce a new night noise offence, punishable either by a fixed penalty or prosecution, was one of nine recommendations of a working party set up last year to review the effectiveness of the current neighbour noise controls. A further recommendation was to clarify current legislation by providing a specific power to enable temporary confiscation of noise-making equipment which would give a stronger legal basis for existing practice. The recommendations and conclusions of the working party were published in a consultation paper in March.

We are currently considering both the written responses to the recommendations in the consultation paper and the results of recent trials of the proposed new night noise offence. We hope to announce shortly how we propose to take forward the recommendations.

Swinden Quarry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations that urged him to call in for his own decision the application by Tilcon Ltd. to continue quarrying at Swinden in the Yorkshire Dales national park. [40476]

Sir Paul Beresford: The following organisations wrote to the Secretary of State requesting him to call in for his own determination the planning application to extend Swinden quarry.

The Countryside Commission

The Council for the Protection of Rural England

The Council for National Parks

Skipton Civic Society

The Open Spaces Society

The Ramblers Association

The Craven Green Party

The Yorkshire Dales Society

CRATER (Craven Residents against Tilcon's Extension Request).

Water, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Servern Trent Water company's utilities programme for water metering in that part of the Doncaster metropolitan borough council area served by company; and if he will make a statement. [40215]

Mr. Clappison: Severn Trent Water does not supply water in any part of Doncaster metropolitan borough council's area. The company does, however, provide sewerage services, which are not metered, in a small part of the council's area.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Yorkshire Water company's utilities programme for water metering in that part of the Doncaster metropolitan borough council area served by the company; and if he will make a statement. [40216]

Mr. Clappison: Yorkshire Water has a programme of metering new or substantially converted domestic properties and extending metering to all commercial premises in that part of Doncaster metropolitan borough council's area served by the company. Yorkshire Water also offers a voluntary meter option scheme. This policy applies throughout the area served by the company.

Living over Shops Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment if he will publish a list of all living over shops schemes so far approved together with the planned and outturn expenditure on LOTS grants for each year the scheme has operated. [40490]

Mr. Clappison: My Department allocated £25 million to its three-year flats over shops programme—£5 million in 1992–93, £10 million in 1993–94 and £10 million in 1994–95. Outturn expenditure was £4.021 million, £9.456 million and £8.729 million, estimated, respectively.

Details of individual schemes are not held centrally. However, an estimated 1,500 additional housing units have been created by the programme in over 150 local authority areas.

Thirty-eight schemes to bring empty property over commercial premises back into use are being funded by the Department's housing partnership funds in 1995–96.

Coal Mines

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what comparisons he has made of health and safety procedures and monitoring between the present privately owned collieries and those formerly state owned. [38683]

Sir Paul Beresford: None. The Health and Safety Executive inspectorate of mines makes regular inspections of coal mines. All mine operators are subject to the Mines and Quarries Act 1954, the Mines and Quarries (Tips) Act 1969 and the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. These Acts apply to mines irrespective of ownership arrangements.

Environment Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Environment Council of 6 October. [40110]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 24 October 1995, Official Report, columns 523–34.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years; [40525]

(2) how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40526]

Sir Paul Beresford: Departmental payment records do not identify the size of businesses paid. However, latest records show that 92 per cent. of all bills have been paid within the agreed credit period, or within 30 days where no credit period was agreed. The Department has no record of beginning any petitions for bankruptcy against businesses of any size in the last five years.

Planning Guidance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the application of the Sandford principle into regional planning guidance. [40414]

Sir Paul Beresford: This principle is already reflected in regional planning guidance for those regions which contain national parks.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will revise PPG17, sport and recreation, in order to take PPG9 and the European habitats directive into account; and if he will make a statement. [40415]

Sir Paul Beresford: PPG9 on Nature Conservation gives guidance on planning and nature conservation, including advice on the Conservation (Natural Habitats, &c.) Regulations 1994, which transpose into domestic law the requirements of the EC directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora. Although we see no need to revise PPG17 in this connection, we intend shortly to commission research into its effectiveness.

American Bullfrogs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he plans to take to prevent American bullfrogs from entering British waterways. [40413]

Mr. Clappison: The north American bullfrog is covered by the provisions of section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, which makes it an offence to release, or allow to escape into the wild, any animal which is not ordinarily resident in, and is not a regular visitor to Great Britain. A person found guilty of an offence is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5,000; or on conviction on indictment to a potentially unlimited fine.

We are consulting English Nature, our statutory scientific advisers, about recent reports of small numbers seen in the wild.

Enterprise Zone Scheme

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) of 14 April 1993, Official Report, column 530, on the total cost of the enterprise zone scheme. [40767]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Approximate costs in 1995–96 prices are given in the table.

£ million

Year	Capital allowances[1][2]	Rates relief[3]
1981–82	28	11
1982–83	26	22
1983–84	21	26
1984–85	34	35
1985–86	88	45
1986–87	81	61
1987–88	50	78
1988–89	134	88
1989–90	95	114
1990–91	104	107
1991–92	17	78
1992–93	16	37
1993–94	—	26

Notes:

All figures are adjusted to 1995–96 prices.

[1] The method of calculating capital allowance costs has been revised by the Inland Revenue and is subject to continuing review. The estimated costs incurred in 1993–94 are not yet known.

[2] The basis for estimating capital allowances has been substantially revised by the Inland Revenue. This has required an updating of the data in the earlier answer.

[3] The cost of rates relief from 1990–91 is based on estimates following the introduction of the uniform business rate.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40822]

Sir Paul Beresford: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands.

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
Lowest salary
Departments	6,000–6,500	6,000–6,500
Agencies	6,000–6,500	6,000–6,500
Highest salary
Departments	95,000–99,000	[1]95,000–99,000
Agencies	70,000–74,000	70,000–74,000

[1] 1995–96 salary dependant on the Government who are expected to implement the recommendations of the Remuneration Committee.

The remuneration of the highest paid employees of non-departmental public bodies include a performance bonus awarded retrospectively, so it is not possible to provide an accurate figure for 1995–96. The highest paid employee in 1994–95 received £117,000 inclusive of a performance-related element. Information on the lowest pay rates is not held centrally.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and non-departmental public bodies whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–96, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93, (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96. [40821]

Sir Paul Beresford: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies and NDPBs. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme rules which have been deposited in the Library of the House. No one in the Department or its agencies received annual remuneration above the sums specified, excluding pension benefits, in the years in question.

It is estimated that two individuals in non-departmental public bodies earned in excess of £100,000—but less than £200,000—in 1994–95 and 1995–96. No individuals earned in excess of the specified sums in other years.

Ministerial Information Systems

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the steps taken in each Government Department to establish a MINIS system or its equivalent. [40364]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 30 October 1995 to his previous question on the subject of Government's management information systems, Official Report, column 5.

WALES

Holt's Field

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the protection of residents in conservation areas for which planning consent has been refused and who are faced with eviction by prospective developers, with particular reference to the case of Holt's Field, near Swansea; and if he will make a statement. [40147]

Mr. Hague: Control of demolition within a conservation area is provided by the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990. There are no powers under the Act to give protection to residents who are faced with a court order for their eviction. Eviction of the residents of Holt's Field is a matter between the owner of the land and the residents and is ultimately one for the courts to decide. It is not an issue in which I can intervene. Under legislation contained in part III of the Housing Act 1985, a local authority has a duty to secure accommodation for all households accepted as unintentionally homeless, or threatened with homelessness, and in priority need of accommodation.

Private Patients (Income)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by trust in each region, details of income from private patients for 1993–94 and 1994–95 (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of total trust income. [39950]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is as follows:

[1] Consists of money received from NHS patients paying for accommodation in single rooms or small wards (Section 63 NHS Act), private in-patients (Section 65), private non-resident patients (Section 66) and accommodation and services provided under Section 58 of the NHS Act 1977. Overseas visitors (Section 121, not eligible for free treatment have been excluded (as they are charged NHS patients).

[2] 1994–95 figures are provisional.

[3] These Trusts did not become operational until 1 April 1994.

[4] These Trusts do not provide private patient services.

Measles Immunisation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current known rate of the occurrence of measles in Wales. [40646]

Mr. Richards: There were 16 notifications of measles during September 1995 and 10 during the first three weeks of October 1995—the latest date for which information is available. In the same months during 1994, the number of measles notifications were 57 and 78 respectively.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40502]

Mr. Hague: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, such petitions would be initiated only in exceptional circumstances and the number of cases is therefore likely to be small.

Nurse Training (Gwynedd)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was allocated to the training of nurses in Gwynedd for the last year for which figures are available. [40382]

Mr. Richards: In 1994–95 £2,552,010 was allocated to the centrally planned and funded training of nurses in Gwynedd under "Towards 2000" arrangements. Figures relating to costs of locally funded training are not available centrally.

Postgraduate Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many nurses are currently receiving grants for the full cost of training in postgraduate courses and what was the equivalent figure for 1990. [40383]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not held centrally.

Hospital Opening Ceremonies (Gwynedd)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of each opening ceremony for new hospitals or new facilities for hospitals in Gwynedd during the last three years; and what was the total cost. [40384]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not held centrally.

Re-admitted Patients

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients were re-admitted to hospital within one month of their discharge in the last year for which figures are available. [40385]

Mr. Richards: Information for 1994–95 is not available centrally. Data on the rates of unplanned re-admission to hospital are being collected for the first time in 1995–96. The data will be published in future, provided the information is of sufficient reliability.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40501]

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments are required, however, to provide details of their overall annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1994–95, the Welsh Office, including its agency Cadw, paid 95 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice. The Department's published figures for the three preceding years were 87 per cent. 76 per cent. and 65 per cent. respectively.

Forestry

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all Forestry Commission woods currently for sale in Wales; and if he will make a statement on the targets for the disposal of land by (a) area and (b) projected income. [40672]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the Under Secretary of State for Scotland gave the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 25 October at columns 685–87. As set out in the Government's expenditure plans 1995–96 to 1997–98, the Forestry Commission plans to sell about 15,000 hectares of forest land in each of the next three years, and expects to receive about £60 million from the sale of forest land and surplus properties during that period. The Commission expects about 15 per cent. of these sales to be in Wales.

National Health Service

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the number of NHS nurses, (b) the number of NHS general and senior managers, (c) expenditure on administration, (d) the number of patients on the waiting list, (e) the number of operations cancelled on the day of or day after admission to hospital, (f) the number of patients treated privately in NHS facilities as in-patients/day-patients/out-patients, (g) the number of hospital beds by category and (h) the number of hospitals (i) for 1990–91 and (ii) at present for (A) the Welsh health authority areas and (B) Wales. [40795]

Mr. Richards: The available information is given in the table. Figures for NHS trusts are included in the health authority areas in which they are situated.

Information on the number of operations cancelled on the day or of day-after admission to hospital is not available centrally.

[1] Whole-time equivalents. Excluding pre-registration learner nurses.

[2] General managers, senior managers and health authority managers. due to the extension of terms and conditions of service a number of staff from within the administrative and clerical and other staff groups have been reclassified as managers. Managers from all disciplines may be included.

[3] Whole-time equivalents (Wte). Figures for East Dyfed include staff who worked for Pembrokeshire Health Authority and Dyfed FHSA. Total includes 39 Wte staff in NHS Ambulance Trusts who cannot be assigned to individual health authority areas.

[4] Senior managers and administration/clerical staff costs. Data for East Dyfed includes Dyfed FHSA expenditure.

Dental Services (Wales)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have been deregistered from NHS dentists since July 1982. [40796]

Mr. Richards: Information supplied by the family health services authorities shows that 52,781 patients in Wales have been deregistered since 1 August 1992.

This is a cumulative total and does not indicate how many of those patients subsequently registered with another dentist. Statistics published by the Dental Practice Board indicate that, at the end of June 1995, the number of registered patients in Wales was 35,891 higher than at 30 June 1992.

Fundholding

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the costs of introducing fundholding since 1991. [40797]

Mr. Richards: Reimbursement to general practitioner fundholders in respect of expenses covered by management allowances totalled £8.9 million for the financial years 1990–91 to 1994–95.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40857]

Mr. Hague: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. The figures are:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
Welsh Office
Highest salary	95,000–99,999	95,000–99,999

Highest salary	75,000–79,999	80,000–84,999

Information on the lowest salary is not held centrally.

Disabled Drivers Assessment Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to come to a decision on the application by the Wales Disabled Drivers Assessment Centre to develop a purpose-built new centre at Rookwood hospital on land adjourning the artificial limb and application centre. [40853]

Mr. Hague: The location of the Wales Disabled Drivers Assessment Centre is a matter for that organisation. The use of the Rookwood hospital site is a matter for the University Hospital of Wales Healthcare NHS trust.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals in (a) his Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies received annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeding (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in each year since 1985–86. [40856]

Mr. Hague: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies and NDPBs. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme, rules, which have been deposited in the Library of the House. No staff in the bodies in question received annual remuneration excluding pension benefits above £100,000.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decision has been reached as a result of the consultation on the "prescribed period" for Wales in part III of the Local Government (Compensation for Redundancy) Regulations 1994. [41353]

Mr. Hague: I have carefully considered the responses which I received. All of them argued that the period should end after 31 March 1997, but there were different views about what the end date should be. I have had particular regard to the views of the new councils that will have to operate the regulations.

Having consulted my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, we have decided that the period should end on 30 September 1997 and my right hon. Friend will amend the regulations accordingly.

Simultaneously, I have considered the responses to a separate consultation exercise on the Local Government Reorganisation (Compensation for Loss of Remuneration) Regulations which will be made in due course by my right hon. Friend. Here, too, our decision is that the prescribed period in Wales should end on 30 September 1997.

The changes I have announced will give Welsh councils more time to implement redundancies which result from local government reorganisation and to harmonise terms and conditions. I would not expect this additional time to mean that there would be an increase in the number of redundancies attributable to the reorganisation or that more staff would suffer a reduction in salary because of the reorganisation. Accordingly, the additional funding which I provide during 1996–97 and 1997–98 will not go beyond the bids which the new councils have recently submitted to me.

I shall announce my decisions on funding for transitional costs in 1996–97 and subsequent years after the Chancellor's Budget statement.

Pembrokeshire National Park

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce his decision on the Pembrokeshire coast national park variation order submitted to him by the Countryside Commission. [41354]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has today confirmed, with modifications, the order to vary the boundaries of the Pembrokeshire coast national park.

In 1989, the Countryside Commission, predecessors of the Countryside Council for Wales, submitted an order to the Secretary of State recommending that the boundary of the national park should be revised at 23 sites. It was proposed that at 15 sites land would be added to the park and at eight sites land would be removed.

The modifications made to the order following a public inquiry mean that 10 new ares will be added to the national park including land at Pencelly Forest, Castlemartin and Brandy Brook valley and its tributaries. Seven areas of land will be removed, including the Texaco and Elf refineries. At six sites, including Marros and Gelliswick bay, the existing boundary will remain.

Copies of the decision letter to the chief executive of the Countryside Council for Wales and the inspector's report have been placed in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Nuclear

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that the management structure of Scottish Nuclear should include a director whose sole responsibility is nuclear safety. [38751]

Mr. Kynoch: The safety procedures and management structure of all nuclear undertakings in the United Kingdom are subject to scrutiny by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate under the terms of nuclear site licences. It would be inappropriate for my right hon. Friend to intervene in these matters.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38607]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of National Heritage, on 31 October 1995, c. 186–87.

Special Needs and Sheltered Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he next plans to meet the chairman or chief executive of Scottish Homes to review its policy of exclusion against the funding of new-build special needs and sheltered housing in peripheral housing estates where no such provision exists; if he will commission a study into the effects of elderly and disabled people having to move away from their own communities to obtain suitable accommodation; and if he will make a statement; [39172]

(2) when he next plans to meet the chairman or chief executive of Scottish Homes to discuss the need for sheltered and special needs housing in large peripheral housing estates with particular reference to Foxbar, Paisley; and if he will make a statement; [39178]

(3) when he next plans to meet the chairman or chief executive of Scottish Homes to discuss its policy on sheltered housing; and if he will make a statement. [39177]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman and chief executive of Scottish Homes regularly and I shall be meeting the board again early in the next year.

As Scottish Homes made clear in its May 1995 policy statement "Removing the Barriers—Housing for Older People", its policy is to focus resources primarily on the provision of accommodation capable of being adapted for a range of changing needs. This policy was significantly influenced by the many responses received to Scottish Homes' May 1993 consultation paper, "Housing for the Elderly in the 1990s". The decision at a local level on what priority to give to the provision of special needs and sheltered housing is made in the light of local needs and demand, working with community care strategic planners such as local housing and social work authorities, and health boards, and taking account of the views of elderly people themselves on whether they wish to remain within their communities.

Orlit Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what special assistance is currently available to the (a) landlords or (b) owner-occupiers of Orlit-type houses which have major structural defects; and if he will make a statement. [39200]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: In 1984 a scheme under the Housing Defects Act 1984 was introduced to help owners of defective homes, such as the Orlit, bought from a public sector authority before 26 April 1984. The scheme, which provided for assistance by way of repurchase or reinstatement grant, ended on 30 November 1994.

Assistance for owner-occupiers remains available in the form of discretionary improvement grant from the local authority if the house has become unstable and various conditions of the grant scheme are met. Landlords are responsible for carrying out any necessary works to their own stock from within the resources available to them.

Flooding, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will visit the Collier street, Johnstone, Park avenue and South End, Paisley, to discuss the effect of the 1994 floods with tenants and residents; and if he will make a statement. [39181]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend recently visited Paisley on other matters, but he has no plans to visit Collier street, Johnstone or the Park avenue and South End areas of Paisley.

The hon. Member will be aware that the Secretary of State will be meeting him and other members of the Paisley South End flood action committee on Wednesday 1 November to discuss matters arising out of the 1994 floods.

Fuel Bills

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of Scottish Power and Hydro-Electric to discuss the abolition of standing charges on fuel bills; and if he will make a statement. [39203]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend meets representatives of the two Scottish electricity supply companies from time to time. The level of standing charges is a matter for the companies and the Office for Electricity Regulation.

Drug Rehabilitation Services

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the detailed arrangements for drugs rehabilitation services which have been put in place in mandatory drugs testing prisons in Scotland referred to by the Minister of State in his statement of 18 October, Official Report, column 302; and what measurements of efficiency are being made. [39812]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Timothy Rathbone, dated 1 November 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the arrangements for drug rehabilitation services in those Scottish prisons involved in the first phase of mandatory drug testing.

Mandatory drug testing will be introduced in Scottish prisons on a phased basis as and when each establishment is ready to begin and has the appropriate programmes in place to assist those prisoners with drugs problems. The first phase of testing will begin in Edinburgh and Cornton Vale prisons early next year.

Edinburgh Prison operates a drug reduction programme consisting of education and counselling and offers detoxification under medical supervision. A multi-disciplinary approach has been adopted, and the treatment offered reflects best practice in the wider community, consistent with the constraints of a prison setting. The programme was evaluated by Glasgow Caledonian University which found that it was effective in reducing the amount and frequency of drug misuse, resulting in harm reduction and the promotion of healthier lifestyles. The programme also won the Scottish Health Management Efficiency Group's "Partnership in Health Care Award" in 1993–94. Prisoners also receive a comprehensive information and training programme on HIV and AIDS within 2 weeks of admission.

Cornton Vale Prison (for women) currently has a drug education programme in place for all prisoners which reinforces the work of the full-time addiction worker, trained prison staff and community-based workers who deliver individual and group counselling. Plans are being taken forward to develop further support programmes, including drug reduction and detoxification, to meet a wide range of the women's needs, prior to the introduction of mandatory drug testing.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39861]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My ministerial colleagues and I meet the chief executives of the agencies for which I am responsible as and when it is necessary for the efficient discharge of business.

Late Payment (Small Business)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40512]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My Department has carried out an annual check of payment performance since 1991–92 but does not distinguish between small and large firms.

The overall results for the last four years show a steady improvement in the percentage of supplier payments made within the period stipulated in the contract, normally 30 days:

Year	Percentage of payments paid on time
1991–92	82

Forestry

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all Forestry Commission woods currently for sale in Scotland; and if he will make a statement on the targets for the disposal of land by (a) area and (b) projected income. [40674]

Mr. Kynoch: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 25 October, Official Report, columns 685–87. As set out in the Government's expenditure plans 1995–96 to 1997–99, the Forestry Commission plans to sell about 15,000 hectares of forest land in each of the next three years, and expects to receive a total of about £60 million from the sale of forest land and surplus properties during that period. The Commission expects about 70 per cent. of these sales to be in Scotland, as most of the Forestry Commission's land is in Scotland.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much income has been accrued; and how much land has been sold under the Government's forestry disposal programme in each year since 1992–93 and in the current year to date. [40669]

Mr. Kynoch: The information is as follows:

Year ended 31 March	Area sold hectares	Income £ million
1993	10,589	9.9
1994	14,950	17.4
1995	10,808	12.1
1996 (to date)	5,364	6.6

Scottish Office Employees

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the number of (i) male and (ii) female employees, (b) the number of officials employed at each of the principal grades and the number and percentages of women employed at these grades and (c) the number of staff employed at administrative grades and the number and percentage of those staff that are women in his Department and for each of its executive agencies for each year since 1985. [39394]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1995]: As the information requested is lengthy, I shall arrange for copies of the figures to be placed in the House Library.

Scottish Office Energy Division

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are employed with the Scottish Office Energy Division on (a) a full-time basis and (b) a part-time basis. [39664]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 27 October 1995]: At 25 October 1995, there were 22 permanent staff in the Scottish Office energy division. Twenty-one of these were employed on a full-time basis and one on a part-time basis.

Local Enterprise Companies

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the chief executives of local enterprise companies who sit on the boards of such companies, indicating their incomes. [38444]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 25 October 1995]: Relationships with the local enterprise companies are an operational matter for Highlands and Islands Enterprise and Scottish Enterprise. I have asked their chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

TRANSPORT

Oil Slicks

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oil slicks have been reported in seas around the British Isles, annually, for the last five years. [40405]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Coastguard agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 1 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as the question deals with an operational matter, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

The number of reports of oil pollution in the seas and around the shores of the UK, as compiled by the Advisory Committee on Pollution of the Sea (ACOPS), is as follows:

Year	Total reports
1990	791
1991	705
1992	611
1993	676
1994	540
Total	3,323

Ship Discharges

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will increase air surveillance resources to combat illegal discharges at sea; [40411]

(2) how he will improve the policing of vessels at sea to combat illegal discharges. [40407]

Mr. Norris: We are working closely with other states which are party to the Bonn agreement to make aerial surveillance an even more effective deterrent against illegal discharges by ships. The number of hours flown this year—1995–96—by Coastguard agency aircraft has been increased from 800 to 925 on a trial basis, and the benefits will have to be assessed.

The Marine Safety Agency is taking forward work on transponders which identify a vessel automatically. We are also working with our Bonn agreement partners to find other ways of making it easier to identify and prosecute offenders.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many prosecutions have been brought in each of the last five years in respect of illegal discharges of oil or other pollutants in United Kingdom waters; and how many were successful; [39767]

(2) whether his Department has yet located the container of toxic lindane which was lost in the channel several years ago; and if he will make a statement. [39618]

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Coastguard agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 1 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions as these deal with operational matters, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

MV PERINTIS, a Panamanian registered and Indonesian owned general cargo container vessel, capsized and sank in UK waters in the English Channel on 13 March, 1989. The lindane container had been stowed on the upper deck and its contents of 5.8 tonnes was packaged in 50 kilogramme sealed polythene bags inside fibre board drums.

The container was located in French waters during this early afternoon of 15 March, and by early evening, a French tug took it in town bound for Cherbourg. From that moment, it became the responsibility of the French authorities. At 11.45 on 16 March, the French authorities reported that the lindane container had been lost under tow some 15 nautical miles north of Cherbourg. It was never relocated.

Over the next few weeks, the French Navy carried out very extensive surface and sub-sea searches for the lindane container but without success. In addition, seawater monitoring was conducted over a much longer period, however, only normal background levels of lindane were ever detected.

There have been 38 prosecutions brought in respect of illegal discharges by vessels in UK waters since 1990, these were brought by MPCU and Port and Harbour authorities, 36 were successful. There were 16 in 1990, 2 in 1991, 5 in 1992, 2 in 1993, and 11 in 1994.

During this period the MPCU referred 23 cases to the Treasury Solicitor for prosecution action if appropriate. Of these, 8 are still open.

Since 1990 55 cases have been referred to vessels' flag states for further action. Of these 9 were prosecuted and fined and 32 are still open. Of the 9 prosecuted 3 had been referred to their flag state before 1990.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on British reception facilities within ports and their operations within the Marpol convention; [40409]

(2) if ships failing to discharge waste at British ports will be notified to the next port of call with details of waste volume at time of departure; and if he will introduce penalties for discrepancies which occur between the ports; [40404]

(3) if he will include reception facility fees within harbour dues; [40410]

(4) if he will place a statutory duty on port authorities to develop waste management plans, certified by the Marine Safety Agency. [40408]

Mr. Norris: My Department is undertaking a consultation exercise to consider these and a number of other initiatives to reduce the amounts of waste discharged into the sea from ships and to increase the amounts discharged into port waste reception facilities. We will announce our conclusions shortly.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will increase penalties for illegal discharge by ships in British waters. [40406]

Mr. Norris: The penalties for illegal discharges by ships are a matter for the courts. The level of fines is not restricted by statute, except on summary conviction in magistrates courts or their equivalent, where the maximum is kept under review. In 1994, we introduced legislation imposing strict liability on all shipowners for pollution damage caused by persistent oils in United Kingdom waters.

Trains (Bicycles)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has commissioned, undertaken or been informed about on the effect on cycle carriage of the £3 per journey charge for bicycles on regional railways; and if he will make a statement. [40499]

Mr. Watts: None. The carriage of bicycles on trains, and any charges made, are operational matters for individual train operators. The franchising director will require franchisees, through the franchise agreement, to carry bicycles where practicable and to ensure that any charges made are reasonable.

Night Flights

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of respondents in respect of each of the public consultations in relation to the current night flights regulations, in January 1993, October 1993, November 1993, March 1995 and June 1995, in relation to Heathrow airport; in each case how many respondents were (a) seeking an increase, (b) seeking a reduction and (c) supporting the night noise levels proposed in the consultation papers concerned; and if he will subdivide the totals in each category according to number of airlines, number of air transport bodies, number of hon. Members, number of local authorities, number of resident associations and environmental groups, number of members of the public and others. [39346]

Mr. Norris: The total number of responses received to each of the consultations, analysed by category of respondent, is set out in the table. These do not relate only to Heathrow. The consultations concerned proposals for a regime of new restrictions on night flights at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports which included a number of discrete elements. Many of the comments in the responses related to more than one of these airports without necessarily focusing on the night noise levels at Heathrow as an issue separate from the other elements of the proposals.

It is not normal departmental practice to provide any form of written summary or statistical analysis of responses to a consultation when the responses are publicly available. All the responses to the November 1993 consultation paper, the March 1995 consultation paper and to the supplementary paper of June 1995, other than those where the author has requested confidentiality, are so available.

Responses to the January and October 1993 consultations have not been made available as the respondents were not given the opportunity to state whether they would object to their responses being copied or otherwise disclosed. An analysis of the responses to the January 1993 consultation in relation to "night noise levels" at Heathrow as requested would not seem appropriate as the consultation, and the responses, were concerned with the whole night restrictions regime, many aspects of which are interrelated—for example, the size of the noise quota is related to both the length of the night quota period and to the QC classification of aircraft. The main points raised in the responses to the January 1993 consultation and the decisions of my right hon. Friend in the light of these responses were announced on 6 July 1993, Official Report, columns 71–73. The October 1993 consultation was limited in time and extent: it was primarily focused on the proposal to specify the maximum number of movements for the winter season 1993–94 in the light of the judgment given on 29 September 1993.

Railtrack (Fly Tipping)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the duties of Railtrack in respect of fly tipping on its land; and if he will make a statement. [39814]

Mr. Watts: The Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990 contain provisions to control fly-tipping. Railtrack's duties in respect of fly-tipping on its land are no different from any other landowner, in that there is no general obligation to remove fly-tipped material. However, if the nature on location of fly-tipped material posed a risk to the safe operation of the railway or to public health and safety, appropriate measures would be taken by Railtrack.

Regarding the case of litter more generally, we are considering whether an order is needed to clarify duties under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, following transfer to Railtrack of operational railway land. As a contractual matter, station leases granted by Railtrack already include a provision requiring the train operators to clean the stations for which they are responsible.

Eurotunnel

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of Eurotunnel to discuss its future; and if he will make a statement. [40165]

Sir George Young: I met representatives from Eurotunnel on 23 October.

Accidents

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured (i) in road accidents in the United Kingdom, (ii) at sea in United kingdom territorial waters and (iii) in aircraft crashes in United Kingdom airspace in each year since 1979. [39977]

Mr. Norris: Available information is shown in the following table.

Year	Road accidents		Accidents at sea[1]		Aircraft crashes in UK airspace
	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured

[1] The sea figures include all deaths and injuries on UK registered vessels at sea, whether or not in UK territorial waters. They also include casualties in foreign vessel incidents in UK territorial waters, though this element may be incomplete. No information is available on foreign flag vessel accidents prior to 1991.

Rail Freight

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list in tonnes the quantity of freight lifted on Britain's railways in each year since 1988–89; and if he will make a statement; [40239]

(2) if he will list in tonnes/kilometres the quantity of freight moved on Britain's railways in each year since 1988–89; and if he will make a statement. [40240]

Mr. Watts: The quantities of freight lifted on Britain's railways in each year since 1988–89 are as follows:

Year	Million tonnes
1988–89	149.5
1989–90	143.1
1990–91	138.2
1991–92	135.8
1992–93	122.4
1993–94	103.3
1994–95	97.3

In tonne-kilometres, the quantities of freight moved on Britain's railways in each year since 1988–89 are as follows:

	Billion tonnes–kms
1988–89	18.1
1989–90	16.7
1990–91	16.0
1991–92	15.3
1992–93	15.5
1993–94	13.8
1994–95	13.0

The Government believe that privatisation of the railways offers the best prospect for addressing the long-term decline of the rail freight industry.

Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers competent harbour authorities other than Trinity House have to waive light dues. [40368]

Mr. Norris: None.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he has to require Trinity House to waive light dues for (a) Isle of Wight ferries and (b) other vessels. [40367]

Mr. Norris: Under present legislation the Secretary of state has no powers to require Trinity House lighthouse service to waive light dues in relation to any vessel.

Road Casualties

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will estimate the cost of (a) a fatality, (b) a serious injury and (c) a slight injury on the road, taking into account the costs of the police, the courts and medical care. [40264]

Mr. Norris: The costs of police and courts, together with insurance company administration and property damage, are not calculated according to casualty but per accident—which may involve more than one casualty. The resulting estimated accident costs in 1994 were (a) fatal: £913,100; (b) serious: £108,100; (c) slight: £10,600.

Ferry Inspections

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many ferries have been inspected by the Marine Safety Agency leaving the United Kingdom; what proportion of those were found to be defective; and if he will make a statement. [40302]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 1 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of ferries inspected by the Marine Safety Agency (MSA).

Unannounced inspections are carried out by MSA surveyors at least twice annually on every UK registered and foreign flagged passenger ferry operating from UK ports. In addition, UK registered ferries are surveyed thoroughly every twelve months by the MSA.

With regard to your query relating to the number of ferry inspections and the proportion of inspections during which deficiencies were identified, I would refer you to my answer to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent North, Ms Walley, on 22 March 1994, which can be found in Hansard volume 257 columns 222–223. A copy of each of the tables referred to in that reply is attached.

Rail Passenger Journeys

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of passenger journeys made on Britain's railways in each year since 1988–89; and if he will make a statement. [40242]

Mr. Watts: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Million Number of passenger journeys
1988–89	763.7
1989–90	758.3
1990–91	762.4
1991–92	740.8
1992–93	744.8
1993–94	713.2
1994–95	702.2

This information can be found in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1995", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Uninsured Motorists

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the number of motorists who are uninsured; how many accidents took place in the last three years where the culpable driver was uninsured; and what plans he has to increase insurance holidays. [40710]

Mr. Norris: Industry estimates are that 4 to 6 per cent. of motorists are uninsured, and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development has supported an estimate at the top of this range. Information on the insurance status of motorists involved in accidents is not collected; the Motor Insurers Bureau handled 39,000 cases on average in each of the last three years under the uninsured drivers agreement, although in a significant proportion of such cases insurance cover is subsequently shown to have been in place. A number of possible measures for tackling the problem of insurance evasion are currently being considered by my Department and the other interested parties such as the police and the insurance industry. In addition, measures aimed at reducing evasion of vehicle excise duty, such as the introduction of wheelclamping, are expected to have a beneficial effect on compliance with compulsory insurance requirements.

London-Tilbury-Southend Line

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current level of subsidy provided for the operation of the London-Tilbury-Southend line. [40297]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. McLeish), Official Report, 13 July, column 706. Negotiations between the franchising director and the British Railways Board on the support appropriate to each individual train operating company are yet to be completed. I will write to the hon. Member when the level of support has been agreed and will place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the level of subsidy projected for the operation of the London-Tilbury-Southend line for the next financial year; [40296]

(2) what is the projected year-on-year level of subsidy to be provided to the franchise operator of the London-Tilbury-Southend line; and if any subsidy will be guaranteed throughout the life of the franchise. [40295]

Mr. Watts: The level of subsidy to be contractually agreed for the full franchise term is currently the subject of commercial negotiations between the franchising director and bidders for the LTS rail franchise. Final bids were submitted to the franchising director on 27 October, and he expects to award the franchise in December.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many petitions for bankruptcy has been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40506]

Mr. Norris: Records are not kept in the form requested.

Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment last met; and what plans have been made for the future work programme of the committee. [40500]

Mr. Watts: The Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment last met in May 1994. No decisions have yet been taken on the committee's future work programme.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration will be given to including within the work programme of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment the assessment of the impact of noise from highways and the justification for various means of ameliorating this nuisance. [40498]

Mr. Watts: In 1989 the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment was asked to review the Department of Transport's methods for assessing environmental costs and benefits, including the impact of noise. The committee's report, "Assessing the Environmental Impact of Road Schemes", and the Government's response were published in March 1992. Subsequently, the Department's guidance on the assessment of environmental impacts has been updated—volume 11 of the design manual for roads and bridges. Also research is on-going into the valuation of nuisance, including noise, in the home, due to road traffic.

I have no plans currently to ask SACTRA to revisit this issue.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40505]

Mr. Norris: Information is not available in the form requested.

M66

Mr. Charles Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects completion of the M66 Manchester outer ring road. [39986]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 30 October 1995]: Spring 1999.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total projected cost of the Newbury bypass before its postponement in December last year; and what is the total projected cost now, under the current tendering process. [40583]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 31 October 1995]: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to hon Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Rendel, dated 1 November 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railway and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, what was the total projected cost of the Newbury Bypass before its postponement in December of last year: and what is the total projected cost now, under the current tendering process.

You will appreciate that due to the imminent tendering process, there is some commercial sensitivity attached to the previous tender prices received last year. However, for the current tenders, we now expect the cost excluding land and VAT to be about £60m. This figure has increased slightly since last December due to increases in construction prices.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the projected total cost of the current tendering process itself for the Newbury bypass. [40584]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 31 October 1995]: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Rendel, dated 1 November 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, what is the projected total cost of the current tendering process itself for the Newbury Bypass.

Costs to the tenderers are unknown to us, and the cost of our own staff time is relatively small and not easily identifiable, but the estimated cost of our Consultants time in preparing new tender documents and assessing them, and the cost of printing the tender documents is about £100,000.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Jewellery Industry

Ms Short: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the effect of EU regulation of the jewellery industry on the position of British manufacturers in the foreign market; what review he is conducting; and if he will make a statement. [40751]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have been asked to reply.

I am not aware of any EU regulations pertaining to the jewellery industry which substantially affect the position of British manufacturers in foreign markets. The Government have listened carefully to the views of British jewellery manufacturers during negotiations on the proposed directives on the marking of articles of precious metal and on nickel in jewellery, and to their concerns about the implications for Hallmarking Act 1973 of the judgment of the European Court in the Houtwipper case ECJ 293/93.

HMSO

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages in the privatisation of HMSO. [40479]

Mr. Horam: The future of HMSO has been examined in depth several times in recent years, against the background of changing markets and a developing business structure. The most recent examination found that privatisation is feasible and that there should be sufficient interest to maximise proceeds through competitive tender.

Coopers and Lybrand is now considering urgently options for the future of HMSO, with a view to privatisation, as my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced last month. We are consulting the authorities in this House and the other place on the necessary safeguards to protect the continued high standards of HMSO's service to Parliament before taking a decision on the way forward.

HMSO's core market in the public sector is shrinking and it faces intense competition from the private sector. At the same time, it is constrained by having to operate from within government: it cannot trade in wider markets, nor can it diversify or raise investment capital as easily as its competitors. Unless these constraints are removed there is a real risk of the business declining. An early privatisation, subject to the needs of Parliament being met, would open up opportunities for the business.

Lancashire Constabulary

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of performance against the standards set out in the citizens charter of the Lancashire constabulary. [40474]

Mr. Horam: Lancashire constabulary applied for a charter mark this year. Assessment involves evaluation against all six citizens charter principles plus three more: user satisfaction, measurable improvements in the quality of service, and innovative enhancements to services at no extra cost. An announcement on those organisations which have been successful will be made in December.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39853]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Since assuming my new responsibilities, I have met the chief executive of the Civil Service College for discussions on one occasion.

I have yet to meet the other agency heads in person. However, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster met the chief executives of the Chessington Computer Centre and of HMSO for discussions in August, and again in September; and the chief executive of the Central Office of Information in October.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service has met the chief executives of all the agencies reporting to me at least once each in the course of the year.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39493]

Mr. Horam: As this question concerns a purely operational matter, I have asked the chief executive of each agency concerned to write direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Dr. E. C. McCloy to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1995:

I am replying to your question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in so far as it relates to my agency. The information you asked for is in the attached schedule.

The following information is available in respect of 1995-96.

Letter from Mike Lynn to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 October 1995:

I have been asked to reply, in respect of HMSO, to your Question (No 301) to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about staff numbers and costs.

I should explain initially that for some years now HMSO has been maintaining its own pay and grading system, which is quite different from the standard Civil Service grading arrangements. Apart from my own post, which is a Civil Service Grade 2, about two thirds of HMSO's staff are on job evaluated paybands and the remainder is made up of mainly operational staff and others who are in single status grades. Average staff numbers in 1994 and 1995 (forecast) were as follows:

HMSO Payband	1994	1995
Payband 20	2	3
Payband 19	1	0
Payband 18	4	3
Payband 17	3	2
Payband 16	6	5
Payband 15	8	7
Payband 14	17	13
Payband 13	35	34
Payband 12	18	26
Payband 11	57	62
Payband 10	100	118
Payband 9	179	182
Payband 8	253	285
Payband 7	331	300
Payband 6	128	122
Payband 5	270	276
Payband 4	337	288
Payband 3	147	128
Payband 2	32	36
Payband 1	27	19
Non-banded staff	951	960
Total	2,907	2,870

Staff costs, including employer's contributions for national insurance and superannuation, were £75.1m in 1994, and are forecast to be £70.9m in 1995. HMSO's financial year runs from January to December.

Letter from Elizabeth Chennells to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1995:

Your written question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster regarding the staff numbers and costs for Executive Agency staff refers. Agency Chief Executives have been asked to reply to you directly. I am replying on behalf of Dr Hickey, Chief Executive of the Civil Service College, who is currently away from the office.

The information that you require is attached. Because of the method the College uses to maintain its records for staff costs, a breakdown of costs by grade is not readily available. However I have included the total staff costs for the College for 1994–95 and our expected costs for 1995–96.

Letter from R. N. Edwards to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1995:

STAFF NUMBERS AND COSTS AT THE CHESSINGTON COMPUTER CENTRE

I refer to your enquiry to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster regarding staff numbers and their cost for the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96.

As the detail of staff numbers and cost by grade is not readily available and a disproportionate cost would be involved in collecting the data the response is limited to providing aggregate numbers and costs for the two financial years. The figures are as follows:-

Year	Average No. of (full-time equivalent) staff in post	Annual cost £
1994–95	395.5	8,484,447
1995–96	385	8,519,620

The estimate for 1995–96 is based on actuals as at the end of October 95 and planned staff in post figures for the remainder of the year.

Letter from Kim Bright to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 October 1995:

"To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) financial year 1994/95 and (b) the estimated figures for the year 1995/96 for each executive agency for which he is responsible."

STAFF NUMBERS AND COSTS

You asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for information on the number and cost of staff, by grade, for the last and current financial years.

As this is an operational matter I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Central Office of Information.

At 31 March 1995 there were 486.39 staff in post and at 30 September 19995 there were 452.42. A breakdown by grade is given in the attached table. Salary costs quoted include superannuation and National Insurance costs. Staff numbers in each grade include part-time staff.

I hope that this information meets your needs.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is his estimate of the total costs of running his office since his appointment, broken down between (a) establishment costs, (b) equipment costs, (c) refurbishment costs, (d) running costs, (e) entertainment costs, (f) stationery costs, (g) rental costs and (h) other costs. [39647]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Expenditure directly incurred in the running of my office during July, August and September 1995 was as follows:

(a) Establishment costs[1]	86,360
(b) Equipment costs	19,860
(c) Refurbishment costs	0
(d) Running costs[2]	8,940
(e) Entertainment costs	0
(f) Stationery costs	6,100
(g) Rental costs	[3]—
(h) Other costs	[3]—
Total	121,260

[1] Direct staff costs.

[2] Running costs not covered by categories (a), (e) and (f), principally transport.

[3] Rental and other costs (e.g light and heating) are incurred within the costs of the office as a whole and cannot be separately identified.

Ministerial Information Systems

Ms Hodge: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer, Official Report, column 823, what sums have been spent on introducing the computerised interdepartmental desk diary system. [40004]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 30 October 1995, Official Report, column 6.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40530]

Mr. Horam: None.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40529]

Mr. Horam: The information is not available in the form requested. The Department's performance in respect of the payment of invoices from its suppliers is published in the annual department report, Cm 2820.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40843]

Mr. Horam: I am also answering on behalf of the Prime Minister.

It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary fell within the band.

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
(i)	5,000–9,999	5,000–9,999
(ii)	5,000–9,999	5,000–9,999
(iii)[1]	0–4,999	0–4,999

[1] Information refers to the research councils sponsored by the Office of Science and Technology which transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry on 5 July 1995.

The highest full-time salary fell within the band.

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
(i)	115,000–119,999	120,000–124,999
(ii)	70,000–74,999	65,000–69,999
(iii)[1]	100,000–104,999	100,000–104,999

[1] Information refers to the research councils sponsored by the Office of Science and Technology which transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry on 5 July 1995.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many individuals in (a) his Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies received annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeding (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in each year since 1985–86. [40842]

Mr. Horam: I am also answering on behalf of the Prime Minister.

Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies and NDPBs. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme or equivalent, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme rules which have been deposited in the House of Commons Library. The numbers receiving annual remuneration above the sums specified, excluding pension benefits are as follows.

The Department has a nil return for the period 1985 to 1991 in all categories. The statistics for the remaining years are:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
(i)	1	1	1	1
(ii)	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
(iii)	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil

The executive agencies for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has responsibility all have a nil return for the period 1985–86 to 1995–96 in all categories.

The NDPBs' have a nil return for the period 1985–86 to 1993–94.

	1994–95	1995–96
(i)	1	1
(ii)	Nil	Nil
(iii)	Nil	Nil

[1] Information refers to the research councils sponsored by the Office of Science and Technology which transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry on 5 July 1995.

DEFENCE

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40531]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The payment of the vast majority of the Department's bills and those of its agencies is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Accounts Agency. The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency is responsible for paying its own bills. I have asked the chief executives of these agencies to reply.

Letter from Peter Trevelyan to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 1 November 1995:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence how often his Department and each Agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last 5 years. As Chief Executive of the Defence Accounts Agency, responsible for paying the vast majority of MOD bills, I have been asked to reply. I understand MOD Agencies which pay their own bills will reply separately.

The statistics which are readily available to the MOD payment office at Liverpool go back two and a half years. During this time 99.99% of bills have been paid within 30 days of receipt. Some low value bills are paid locally throughout MOD, but information about these is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 1 November 1995:

1. You asked the Secretary of State for Defence how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last 5 years. I am replying for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, formerly the Defence Research Agency.

2. Assuming that the 30 day period is measured from the point at which a validated invoice is passed to our bill paying section for action, then virtually all bills are settled within 9 days. We make no distinction in this process between small and large businesses.

Defence Expenditure (NATO Countries)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of gross national product is spent on defence in each of the members of NATO. [40704]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is contained in the "Statement of Defence Estimates 1995", page 82, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Military Hospitals

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the military hospitals at (a) Aldershot, (b) Woolwich, (c) Wroughton and (d) Halton close; and on what date the (i) Royal Naval hospital Stonehouse and (ii) RAF Hospital, Ely will close. [40759]

Mr. Soames: The service hospitals at Aldershot, Halton and Wroughton will close by April 1996. The sale of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich to the NHS took place on 30 August this year. The hospitals at Stonehouse, Plymouth, and Ely closed in March this year and in 1992 respectively.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many national health service patients have been treated as in-patients at (a) the Cambridge military hospital, Aldershot, and (b) the RAF Wroughton hospital, near Swindon, in each year since 1991–92 and in 1995–96 to date; and how much was paid by NHS purchasing authorities to each of these military hospitals in each of those years. [40758]

Mr. Soames: The figures are as follows:

	CMH Aldershot	PARAFH Wroughton
1991–92	5,980	2,218
1992–93	6,248	2,293
1993–94	8,345	2,486
1994–95	5,744	2,366
1995–96[1]	1,386	544

[1] As at 1 October 1995.

These patient numbers were contained within the required training margin for military medical personnel and therefore were treated at no cost to health care purchasers.

French Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information or data Her Majesty's Government have received from French nuclear tests conducted at (a) Reganne in 1965–66, (b) Mururoa in 1966 to the present, (c) Fangataufa since 1966 in regard to Euratom treaty, articles 34 or 35. [40593]

Mr. Arbuthnot: None.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place in the Library copies of all memoranda of understanding signed with France in regard to co-operation on nuclear weapons since 1965. [40591]

(2) what technical data or other information his Department has received from France on the parameters, reasons for and outcome of French nuclear tests conducted this year as part of existing nuclear co-operation agreements with France; [40592]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 24 October 1995, Official Report, column 587.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40532]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information is not held centrally and, while detailed research could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost, a limited inquiry has been made within the time available. This found that there did not appear to have been any instances in any of the years in question.

Low Flying

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning low flying in Wales; and what is the minimum height permitted for such flights. [40847]

Mr. Soames: Low flying is permitted throughout the United Kingdom, except in controlled airspace, over major conurbations and in other locations which are to be avoided for safety or environmental reasons. The normal minimum height for military fixed-wing aircraft, except light propeller driven aircraft, is 250 ft minimum separation distance. A small amount of operational low flying by such United Kingdom military aircraft is permitted down to 100 ft minimum separation distance in three tactical training areas, one of which is in central Wales. Light propeller driven aircraft are permitted to fly to a minimum height of 50 ft. There is no minimum height restriction for helicopters.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his German counterpart concerning low flying by British aircraft over German territory; and what is the minimum height permitted for British aircraft flying in Germany. [40845]

Mr. Soames: There have been no such recent discussions. The normal minimum height permitted for Royal Air Force fixed-wing aircraft flying in Germany is 1,000 ft; however, a lower limit of 500 ft is permitted for a number of major NATO exercises.

Tornado F3

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the Tornado F3 upgrade with EJ200 engines. [40851]

Mr. Arbuthnot: There is no current requirement to upgrade the Tornado F3 with EJ200 engines.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has examined the interoperability of US F–16 aircraft with Britain's air-to-air refuelling systems. [40849]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department is currently evaluating a proposal to upgrade the Tornado F3's weapons systems. As a routine part of our evaluation process, we are examining the comparative costs of alternative options, including acquiring F–16 aircraft from the US. In assessing these alternatives we will take full account of all relevant factors, including the need for air-to-air refuelling.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum flying height of the Tornado F3. [40850]

Mr. Soames: The Tornado F3 is cleared to fly at a maximum height of 50,000 ft. In practice, however, the actual operating ceiling will be determined by a range of interrelated factors, including weapon and fuel load, environmental conditions, and others.

Housing Stock

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's current policy in respect of the married housing stock. [40855]

Mr. Soames: We are continuing to consider possibilities for transferring ownership of the married quarters estate to the private sector. We expect to be in a position to clarify the way ahead before the end of the year.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) independent advisers and (b) companies who are providing advice concerning his Department's (i) housing stock and (ii) surplus land; and if he will make a statement. [40854]

Mr. Soames: For management of my Department's housing stock, a number of individual consultants have been employed on a contract basis by the Defence Housing Executive. The principal companies providing advice on the possible transfer of ownership of the married quarters estate to the private sector are Nat West Markets (financial advisers), Herbert Smith (legal advisers) and Savills (property advisers).

Independent advisers who have contributed in the past year to our consideration of proposals for the married quarters estate are:

Mr. David Dugdale
Mr. David Hart
Mr. Douglas Hogg
Sir Nigel Mobbs
The Lord Poole

In respect of surplus land, no single adviser or company provides advice on all cases. Consultants are appointed, where necessary, to provide advice on such matters as development potential, planning issues and marketing. No central record is maintained of all such current contracts.

Contractorisation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) military and (b) civilian jobs have been replaced under his Department's contractorisation programme. [40844]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Department's budget holders operate within financial allocations, which cover a range of operating costs, including military and civilian staff. Since April 1992, some 26,000 posts have been reviewed under the competing for quality programme, resulting in a reduction in the overall number of MOD posts of nearly 17,500. Details of the breakdown of posts between military and civilian staff are not held centrally.

Air Defence Capability

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has carried out in the last three years of the United Kingdom's air defence suppression capability; and if he will make a statement. [40848]

Mr. Soames: We keep our SEAD—suppression of enemy air defences—assets under constant review to ensure that we maintain our capability against current and future radar threats.

Practice Flights (Wales)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total number of practice flights over Wales by the RAF in each of the last five years. [40846]

Mr. Soames: Records are not maintained of the total number of training flights conducted over specific areas.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39856]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I and my predecessor have frequently met the heads of the agencies which report to us to discuss the work of the agencies concerned. My Department is of course in regular contact with the agencies and I am briefed on major developments.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by grade the number of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39486]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Estimated outturn for 1994–95 and plans for 1995–96 for civil service staff numbers and pay bill are set out in annexes 5 and 6 of my Department's annual report, Cm 2803, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. A breakdown by grade and individual agency could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the number of payments made under the arable area payments scheme of (a) less than £25,000, (b) between £25,000 and £50,000, (c) between £50,000 and £75,000 and (d) above £1 million for the latest year for which figures are available. [39885]

Mr. Baldry: The table gives the number of payments in England by county and banded by size of payment. It is not possible to identify separately the number of payments above £1 million for reasons of confidentiality.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the amount paid under the arable area payments scheme for the latest year for which figures are available. [39884]

Mr. Baldry: The table gives the total arable area payments claimed in 1994 on land situated in each county of England. The total amounts paid will have been slightly lower because of reductions made for various reasons. However, since such reductions normally have to be calculated on the basis of the total claim, which may include land in more than one county, it is not possible to give figures for the total amounts paid on a county basis.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40536]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Ministry has served one petition for insolvency during this period. It is not known how many people the company employed.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Contributions Agency

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many staff are currently employed by the Contributions Agency in identifying those evading their proper social security contributions; and how many he expects will be employed following the implementation of the business unit implementation exercise for the reorganisation of offices; [39971]

(2) what has been the cost of the employment of consultants in connection with the business unit implementation exercise for the reorganisation of Contributions Agency offices; what consultation has so far been undertaken with local authorities, citizens advice bureaux and local chambers of commerce in this connection; and what overall budget savings are expected from the exercise. [39972]

Mr. Heald: The administration of the Contributions Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 31 October 1995:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency. I have been asked to reply to your questions about the cost of consultants in connection with the Business Unit Implementation exercise for re-organisation, what consultation has taken place with various bodies, expected overall budget savings, and the numbers of staff employed in identifying those contributors evading contributions. In view of the nature of the questions I have combined the responses.

I am unable to provide the cost of consultants used in connection with the Field Operations Business Unit Implementation as this information is subject to commercial confidentiality provisions.

The Agency proposes to reduce its Field Operations network from the existing 248 offices to approximately 115. The proposed Field network is being developed in consultation with local management, staff and Trade Unions. A decision on specific locations will not be taken until this process is complete. Thereafter the business community, including Local Authorities, Citizens' Advice Bureaux, Chambers of Commerce and Members of Parliament will be fully consulted before implementation takes place.

Precise details of savings cannot be determined during the planning and development stage of the re-organisation. However it is estimated that there will be significant savings in management costs. Savings in accommodation and related costs will also be captured as the new Field network is implemented.

The Agency has responsibility to ensure compliance with the law in relation to National Insurance contributions. Non-compliance is not solely due to evasion but is frequently the result of lack of awareness or genuine error. Because of this, it is impossible to estimate the proportion of work or staff directly dealing with evasion. Of the Agency's current total Field force of 3093 staff, approximately 1300 are employed on inspectorate duties which bring them into direct contact with employers and the self-employed. It is not anticipated that inspectorate numbers will significantly change as a result of the Business Unit Implementation process.

I hope that this reply proves helpful. Please let me know if I can be of any more assistance.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average time taken by the Child Support Agency to make a maintenance assessment; and if he will make a statement on how this meets the set targets; [38813]

(2) if he will make a statement on the basis for the time period set out in the guidelines, of the Child Support Agency within which the claimants assessments should be completed. [38814]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 31 October 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the time taken by the Agency to clear maintenance assessments.

Due to the nature of the child support work, and the varying level of co-operation experienced, reaching a full maintenance assessment will, on average, involve a period of months rather than weeks. The Agency has, however, sought to introduce a number of operational improvements to ensure that straightforward cases, in which both parents co-operate with the Agency, are cleared quickly. Where both parents co-operate,we would hope that an assessment is completed within 6 to 12 weeks of the maintenance application form being issued.

At present, including the less straightforward cases, the average time taken by the Child Support Agency to make a maintenance assessment is approximately 30 weeks. This information is taken from a five per cent. statistical sample carried out on 31st May 1995.

You asked about performance against the set target. From April to August this year just under 50 per cent. of applications received since the beginning of October 1994 had been cleared within 26 weeks. These figures do not currently take account of all the cases cleared, for example, where "good cause" has been accepted and a reduced benefit direction has been issued. We expect more comprehensive figures to become available within the next two months.

I hope this is helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number (a) invalidity/disability premium claimants for fit for (a) work and (b) for light work in the past 12 months for each of his Department's benefit offices covering the Doncaster and Mexboroguh area; and what was the comparative figure for the previous 12 months. [39561]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefits is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 31 October 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number (a) of invalidity/disability premium claimants found fit for (a) work and (b) for light work in the past 12 months for each of his Department's benefit offices covering the Doncaster and Mexborough area; and what was the comparative figure for the previous 12 months.

Invalidity Benefit was replaced by Incapacity Benefit from 13 April 1995. Disability premium is payable as part of Income Support. A customer who receives Incapacity Benefit may also receive Income Support which could include a disability premium.

Information is not available in the form requested. Statistics are only available for the numbers of customers failing the All Work Test on a national basis from 13 April to the end of June this year. They are available at a local level from July 1995. Figures are not available to show the breakdown into Incapacity Benefit or disability premium as separate statistics are not kept on the type of benefit entitlement at the time of the decision.

The number of customers failing the All Work Test from July to September, in the Mexborough and Doncaster area, are as follows:

	Mexborough	Doncaster
July 1995	10	11
August 1995	20	50
September 1995	40	87

The Doncaster figures include both Doncaster West and Doncaster East Benefits Agency offices.

The Incapacity Benefit scheme does not have a category of "fit for light work" as it is based on either the customers Own Occupation or All Work Tests.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the annual expenditure on social security benefits for people in employment for the latest available year broken down by (a) family credit, (b) income support, (c) housing benefit and (d) council tax benefit. [38612]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Benefit expenditure on people in employment 1994

£ million

Benefit	Estimated annual expenditure
Family Credit	1,480
Income Support	617
Housing Benefit	697
Council Tax Benefit	137

Notes:

1. The figures have been rounded to the nearest million pounds.
2. The expenditure figures for income support, housing and council tax benefits have been estimated by calculation from the number of cases in receipt of benefit and the weekly amount of benefit in payment at a point in time in May 1994. They may not therefore represent actual spending through the year.
3. For the purposes of the calculations referred to in note 2 above 'people in employment' have been defined as cases where either the benefit claimant and/or his/her partner have earnings from employment or self-employment.
4. It is possible for one person to receive more than one of the benefits listed above.
5. Figures for family credit refer to estimated expenditure in 1994–95.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of reduced earnings allowance awards in each year since 1991, and this year to date (a) nationally and (b) in each of his Department's benefit offices covering the Doncaster and Mexborough postal districts. [39040]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Available information is set out in the table. Rother and Dearne district office includes Rotherham north and south, Goldthorpe, Mexborough and Wath-on Dearne.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the changes there will be in the levels of indebtedness among benefit recipients who make up the shortfall in rent demanded by the landlord from their disposable income, following the capping of housing benefit. [38898]

Mr. Roger Evans: No such estimate has been made.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the total amounts paid to recipients of housing benefit in (a) Manchester, (b) Blackburn, (c) Burnley and (d) Liverpool in (i) 1991–92 and (ii) 1993–94; and if he will estimate the amounts likely to be paid out this year; [39842]

(2) what were the total amounts paid to recipients of housing benefit in Blackpool in (a) 1991–92 and (b) 1993–94; and if he will estimate the amounts likely to be paid out this year. [39843]

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table.

Expenditure on housing benefit

£000s

	1991–92	1993–94
Blackburn	18,466	25,235
Blackpool	18,619	29,872
Burnley	10,225	14,216
Liverpool	127,599	164,600
Manchester	213,383	254,638

Note:

Figures relate to local authority areas.

Estimates for expenditure during 1995–96 are not available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1480–81, (1) if he will exempt private sector accommodation identified by local authority social services departments as consistent with strategies for care in the community; [40426]

(2) if he will exempt accommodation provided by a social services authority. [40427]

Mr. Evans: We are considering the situation as regards private sector accommodation which is consistent with social services' strategies for care in the community and accommodation which is provided by social services authorities.

Asylum Seekers

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that asylum seekers who have been victims of torture will not have their welfare benefits withdrawn. [40060]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Government referred proposals affecting the benefit entitlement of asylum seekers and other persons from abroad to the Social Security Advisory Committee on 11 October. We will consider the position fully once the committee has reported on its consultation exercise.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the current benefits system to ensure that self-employed persons are able to claim benefits on becoming unemployed. [40145]

Mr. Roger Evans: Current policy will be carried forward in the new jobseeker's allowance from October 1996. Payment of class 2 national insurance contributions on earnings from self-employment will not enable a self-employed person to gain entitlement to contribution-based jobseeker's allowance. Self-employed claimants will have access to income-based jobseeker's allowance in the same way as other claimants.

Changes to the availability for work rules will, however, recognise the growth in self-employment. As now, all claimants will have to be available for employed earner's employment, but under jobseeker's allowance, people who have been self-employed will be able to limit their jobsearch to self-employed opportunities in their usual occupation for up to 13 weeks at the beginning of their claim.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for business with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40510]

Mr. Burt: No statistics are held to identify the number of employees involved when a winding-up petition is filed against a business by this Department.

Hardship Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people are currently claiming hardship allowance. [40425]

Mr. Roger Evans: For the quarter ending August 1995, 12,417 16 to 17-year-olds were receiving hardship allowances. This figure is provisional and is subject to amendment.

Late Payments (Small Business)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40509]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested.

The methods of recording suppliers and payments does not allow for separation into different categories of suppliers, such as small businesses.

Since 1992, the Department has conducted an annual exercise to establish what proportion of bills for goods and services have been paid timeously, that is within any special terms agreed, or, if none exists, within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice, whichever is the later. Details of the percentage of payments made timeously from 1992–93 are as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Department of Social Security HQ	90	97	89.5
Benefits Agency	93	95	96
Contributions Agency	93	99	99
Resettlement Agency	96	87	98
Child Support Unit[1]/Child Support Agency	95	90	96
Information Technology Services Agency	96	95	99
War Pensions Agency	part of BA	89	96
Departmental total	94	94	96

[1] child support unit did not exist post 1992–93.

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) 16 and (b) 17-year-olds are currently available for work and not in receipt of benefit. [40439]

Mr. Roger Evans: The latest available labour force survey for Great Britain shows that, in summer—June to August 1995—there were 180,000 16 to 17-year-olds who were unemployed[1]. However, of these, 91,000 were still in full-time education and around a further 55,000 were either receiving benefit direct or their parents were receiving benefit on their behalf. Of the remaining 34,000, there is no information on their personal financial circumstances although many will be living as part of their parents' household. In addition, significant numbers move into youth training shortly after registering at the careers office.

Notes

[1] The Labour Force Survey uses the International Labour Organisation's definition of "unemployed", i.e. people who were without a job, were available to start work in the next fortnight, and had either looked for work in the last four weeks, or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies, (iii) non-departmental bodies in (1) 1994–95 and 2) 1995–96. [40820]

Mr. Burt: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salaries fell within the following bands:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
(i) Department	[1]5,000–9,999	[2]5,000–9,999
(ii) Agencies	5,000–9,999	5,000–9,999
(iii) Non-Departmental Public Bodies[3]	5,000–9,999	5,000–9,999

[1] There were 10 people in the Department whose salary fell just under £5,000.

[2] There were 12 people in the Department whose salary fell just under £5,000.

[3] Information refers to those bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1994".

The highest full-time salaries fell within the following bands:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
(i) Department	95,000–99,999	95,000–99,999
(ii) Agencies	85,000–89,999	80,000–84,999
(iii) Non-Departmental Public Bodies[1]	70,000–74,999	75,000–79,999

[1] Information refers to those bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1994".

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000 (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–86, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93, (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96. [40819]

Mr. Burt: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. As members of the principal civil service pension scheme, staff may receive benefits in accordance with the scheme rules which had been deposited in the Library of the House. No member of staff has received remuneration above £100,000 in the years in question.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dumped Armaments

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the locations in Northern Ireland where old armaments have been washed up on the shoreline in the past 10 years. [39643]

Mr. Moss: No old armaments are recorded as having been washed up on the shoreline in Northern Ireland in the past 10 years.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents have been reported by fishermen in Northern Ireland of catching dumped armaments in their nets in the 10 years. [39625]

Mr. Ancram: Such information is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Armaments caught in fishermen's nets may come from a number of sources other than dumping, including shipwrecks or bombing.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the fish caught for consumption in Northern Ireland is caught in or around the Beaufort dyke area. [39639]

Mr. Ancram: It is estimated that, of the total quantity of fish landed into Northern Ireland in 1994, less than 4 per cent. was caught in or around the Beaufort dyke area. No information is available on how much of this is consumed in Northern Ireland.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of armaments washed up on the shoreline in Northern Ireland can be identified as having drifted out of the Beaufort dyke munitions dump in the last 10 years. [39638]

Mr. Moss: No armaments are recorded as having been washed up on the shoreline in Northern Ireland in the past 10 years.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many phosphorus incendiary bombs have been washed up on the Antrim coast in the past 10 years. [39641]

Mr. Moss: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has no record of phosphorous incendiary bombs having been washing up on any part of the Northern Ireland coast in the past 10 years. However, early in May 1993, the Department began to receive reports that a number of unidentified phosphorous canisters were being washed ashore, mainly in County Antrim.

Although there is no record of the number washed ashore, the Department has arranged for the recovery and safe disposal of 84 such objects in 1993, six in 1994 and one to date in 1995.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fishermen in Northern Ireland have reported injuries caused to themselves or crew members of their trawlers due to handling weapons and dumped armaments which have become caught up in their fishing nets in the past 10 years. [39640]

Mr. Ancram: We are not aware of any such cases.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fishermen in Northern Ireland fish in or around the Beaufort dyke area. [39642]

Mr. Ancram: It is estimated that 33 Northern Ireland fishing vessels employing about 150 fishermen fished in and around Beaufort dyke in 1994.

Electricity Prices

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost per unit of electricity in Northern Ireland for (a) domestic users and (b) business users. [39636]

Mr. Ancram: Information on unit electricity charges for domestic and business users is set out in the monthly and quarterly billed tariffs booklets published by Northern Ireland Electricity plc. I have arranged for copies of the April 1995 booklet to be placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the differential between electricity prices in Northern Ireland and Great Britain. [39631]

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State said in his statement to the Northern Ireland Committee on 21 June that the Northern Ireland electricity system, because it was small, dispersed and isolated, was inherently high cost by British isles standards, but that the growing divergence currently being experienced is more due to falling prices in Great Britain than to rising prices in Northern Ireland.

The Northern Ireland electricity supply industry is at present in transition, but it is making steady progress towards mirroring the characteristics of the lower cost industry in Great Britain. Recent developments which will help reduce the differential include the reallocation of sulphur quotas and the decision of British Gas to support the development of a natural gas industry in Northern Ireland, as this will reduce the cost of the gas supply to the Ballylumford power station. The 1997 Northern Ireland Electricity price reviews and the introduction of more competition should also have a favourable impact on prices. The latest comprehensive statements on the size of price differential is based on 1994–95 data and are contained in the Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland's memorandum submitted to the Northern Ireland Committee earlier this year and the paper published in June 1994 entitled "Northern Ireland and Great Britain's Electricity Prices". Copies of these are available in the Library of the House.

Drug Addicts

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many registered drug addicts in Northern Ireland are under the age of 18 years. [39632]

Mr. Moss: None.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of registered drug addicts in Northern Ireland in each of the past 10 years. [39635]

Mr. Moss: The number of registered drug addicts in Northern Ireland as at 31 December of each of the past 10 years was as follows:

1985: 29
1986: 36
1987: 32
1988: 35
1989: 38
1990: 48
1991: 51
1992: 60
1993: 80
1994: 87

Gas supplies

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the availability of gas in Northern Ireland to (a) domestic users and (b) industrial users. [39630]

Mr. Ancram: British Gas is in the process of laying an undersea pipeline from Scotland to Northern Ireland to supply its Ballylumford power station and it has recently announced plans to lay a pipeline from there which will enable it to supply natural gas to consumers in the greater Belfast area. A gas supply to industrial, commercial and domestic consumers is expected to be available at the end of 1996. I intend to present legislation at the beginning of 1996 to facilitate this development.

Drug-related Offences

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the number and nature of arrests for drug-related offences in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; [39627]

(2) if he will list the number of arrests in each of the last 10 years for offences regarding the possession and selling of (a) heroine, (b) cocaine, (c) ecstasy and (d) cannabis in Northern Ireland. [39634]

Sir John Wheeler: The Government, together with the Royal Ulster Constabulary, are committed to tackling all aspects of the drug problem in Northern Ireland. During the past year, the number of officers in the RUC drugs squad has increased by 15 per cent. and the post of head of drugs squad has been upgraded to detective superintendent. There are now more than three times the number of drugs liaison officers as there were last year, an increase from 18 to 60.

In addition, I recently established the central co-ordinating group for action against drugs of which I am chairman. This group comprises top level representatives from Northern Ireland Government Departments, the medical profession and the RUC and will co-ordinate Government action on all aspects of the campaign against drugs.

The RUC collate figures showing the number of persons arrested for drugs offences. A breakdown by drugs trafficking, possession, or type of drugs is not available.

The number of persons arrested for drugs offences, and the number of persons proceeded against at court for drugs offences, are set out in the tables.

Number of persons arrested in Northern Ireland for drugs offences 1985–1994

	Numbers
1985	316
1986	304
1987	223
1988	432
1989	440
1990	429
1991	453
1992	610
1993	976
1994	1,196

Persons proceeded against at court for drugs offences Northern Ireland 1993 and 1994

	1993	1994
Males	471	573
Females	25	37
Total	496	610

"Persons proceeded against" refers to persons prosecuted for drugs offences at Juvenile, Magistrates' or Crown Courts and for whom a result has been obtained ie guilty or not guilty.

Figures cannot be provided prior to 1993 on grounds of disproportionate cost.

Executive Agency Staff Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by grade the number of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39519]

Sir John Wheeler: Estimated outturn for 1994–95 and plans for 1995–96 for civil service manpower and pay bill are set out in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments' annual report, Cm 2816, copies of which are available in the Library. A breakdown by grade and individual agency could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Electricity Generation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the companies who run electricity generating power stations in Northern Ireland and (b) the names of the power stations run by each company. [39629]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

(a)	(b)
Premier Power Limited	Ballylumford
Coolkeeragh Power Limited	Coolkeeragh
NIGEN Limited	Kilroot
	Belfast West

Dental Health Education

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provisions are in place to educate children about dental health in schools in Northern Ireland. [39644]

Mr. Ancram: The statutory Northern Ireland curriculum makes provision for health through the health education cross-curricular theme and the programme of study for science, which all pupils of compulsory school age must follow. The objectives of the cross-curricular theme include the teaching of the skills necessary to make informed decisions about health. The science programme of study requires pupils at key stage I—age four to eight—to be taught about personal hygiene, of which oral hygiene is a part.

In addition, the staff of the health boards' community dental service, which is responsible for screening pupils at intervals during their school careers, take the opportunities offered by their school visits to talk to pupils and teachers about dental health generally.

Nuclear Waste

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance he will give the European Commissioner for the Environment and Nuclear Safety, Ms Ritt Bjerregard, in her investigation into allegations that nuclear waste was dumped in the seas off the Irish and Scottish coasts in 1981 by the British Government. [39626]

Mr. Moss: There is no nuclear industry in Northern Ireland, and no radioactive waste from Northern Ireland has been dumped into the seas off the Irish and Scottish coasts at any time under an authorisation from the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. There is, therefore, no assistance which could be afforded to the European Commissioner.

Drug Education

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to educate schoolchildren in Northern Ireland on the dangers of drug abuse. [39633]

Mr. Ancram: In schools, the statutory Northern Ireland curriculum make provision for drugs education through the programme of study for science and health education cross-curricular theme. Both of these are compulsory and apply to pupils throughout their period of compulsory schooling from age four to 16. The Department of Education issued guidance on dealing with drug-related incidents in the form of a circular in 1992.

A new and comprehensive package of advice and guidance will be issued to schools in the spring of 1996. The pack will contain an expanded circular, guidance on preparing drugs policies and on the place of drugs education in the curriculum, and a detailed working manual for schools on dealing with drug-related incidents.

Fluoridation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has of public support for the fluoridation of the water supply in Northern Ireland. [39619]

Mr. Moss: Health and social services boards are required to consult their resident populations about any proposal to fluoridate a water supply. In four of the five consultations they have carried out to date, a clear majority of the responses received were in favour of fluoridation. Further consultations will be carried out in the near future.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the past five years. [40510]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual performance in their departmental reports. For 1993–94 and 1994–95, the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments paid 95 per cent. and 94.7 per cent. respectively of their bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Forestry

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all Forestry Commission woods currently for sale in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the targets for the disposal of land by (a) area and (b) projected income. [40673]

Mr. Ancram: State forestry in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the forest service of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. In the current year, the following woods have been on offer for sale:

Bann Woods South
Castleward (Ballynacraig)
Castleward (Castleward)
Ecclesville.

The forest service is currently undergoing a prior options study under the Government's "next steps" initiative. Future disposals policy and targets will be determined by the outcome of that study.

Royal Mail (Redundancies)

Ms Mowlam: to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of redundancies in Northern Ireland Royal Mail for each of the past five years. [39628]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

The Post Office tells me that the number of redundancies in Royal Mail Northern Ireland, all of which have been achieved on a voluntary basis, in each of the past five years are as follows:

Year
1991–92: 5
1992–93: 21
1993–94: 23
1994–95: 20
1995–96: 7 (to date)

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Prospects

17. Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss Britain's industrial prospects. [38666]

Mr. Lang: My ministerial colleagues and I meet representatives of the CBI from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Trans-channel Electricity Link

19. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent the trans-channel electricity link has been used in the last 10 years to import from and export to France. [38669]

Mr. Eggar: Since it was commissioned in 1986 the interconnector has normally supplied baseload electricity from France to England.

Ministerial Responsibilities

20. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his governmental responsibilities. [38670]

Mr. Lang: My Department's objective is to help United Kingdom business compete successfully at home and abroad. It also aims, through the Office of Science and Technology, to strengthen the UK's science engineering and technology capability and to maximise its contribution to national economic performance and quality of life. The drive to enhance the UK'S international competitiveness, to which the whole Government is committed, is central to the Department's work.

Vehicle Industry (Investment)

21. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support his Department gives to inward investment from the vehicle industry. [38671]

Mr. Oppenheim: Inward investment by vehicle companies may be eligible for a variety of forms of support, depending on the circumstances and proposed location, in common with inward investment by companies in other sectors.

Small Businesses

22. Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives he is taking to assist small business. [38672]

Mr. Ian Taylor: A complete outline of the range of initiatives introduced is published in "Small Firms in Britain 1995", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

The business link network is the single most important industrial initiative to be introduced by any UK Government. The national launch of the network took place on 31 October and by the end of the year every business in England will have access to the wide range of services available to assist their prosperity and growth.

24. Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small businesses have been established since 1992. [38674]

Mr. Taylor: Estimates for business starts in England and Wales are produced by Barclays and Natwest banks. These show that in the two and a half years to end June 1995 approximately 1 million new businesses started up.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice his Department issues to employees of small businesses regarding (a) rights at work and (b) terms and conditions of maternity pay. [40543]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My Department produces a comprehensive range of free booklets describing the rights of all employees under employment legislation. The booklet "Maternity Rights" was produced with the Department of Social Security, which is responsible for the maternity pay provisions, and the Health and Safety Executive, and gives information about all aspects of the statutory maternity provisions.

Mrs Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small businesses there have been in Britain in each of the last 17 years; and, of these, how many had between (a) one and nine employees, (b) 10 and 99 employees and (c) 100 and 499 employees. [40545]

Mr. Page: Estimates of the number of businesses with fewer than 500 employees in the United Kingdom since 1979 are given in the table. Separate figures are not available for Britain.

At the end of 1993, 791,000 businesses had between one and nine employees, 185,000 had between 10 and 99 employees and 14,000 had between 100 and 499 employees; the remainder have no employees. There are no comparable figures for earlier years.

Small and Medium Sized Enterprise (SME) Statistics for the UK, 1993.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the number and proportion of small businesses which (a) have debt financed over five years and (b) have debt financed by overdraft; what comparable figures are available for European competitor nations; and what plans he has to ensure that longer-term financing is available to small businesses. [40537]

Mr. Page: A number of different surveys confirm that there has been a marked trend away from overdrafts towards term lending among small and medium-sized enterprises in this country in the last few years. According to figures produced by the British Bankers Association, term lending now accounts for 61.7 per cent. of total lending to SMEs compared to 40 per cent. in 1990. The Government welcome this trend and hope it will continue.

As regards the situation in other European countries, a recent survey carried out by 3i found that an average of 29 per cent. of SMEs are reliant upon overdrafts.

Although the Government believe that finance for any business venture is a commercial matter for the banks and other financial institutions, we continue to point out to SMEs the dangers of an over-reliance on short-term debt finance and to encourage them to consider longer-term alternatives. In appropriate cases, term loans over periods of two to seven years are available under the Government's small firms loan guarantee scheme.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement with regard to the small firms Ministers' network announced by his Department on 12 October on (a) what role each Minister will play, (b) how many times per year the network plans to meet, (c) when it last met, (d) what objectives have been set and (e) what effect the network will have on the public purse. [40539]

Mr. Page: The first meeting of the small business Ministers took place on Monday 30 October. It is envisaged that the full team of Ministers will meet approximately every six months with individual bilateral meetings being arranged as necessary to discuss specific issues.

The aim of the group is to discuss how each Department can develop its own programme to help small businesses and how such a programme can be taken forward.

The group itself will not have a direct effect on the public purse.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small businesses have failed within three years of starting up in each of the last 10 years; and what proportion this is of the total of new small businesses. [40544]

Mr. Page: Official estimates for business survival are produced from the VAT register and are given in the table. Figures for business failure rates are not the same as deregistration rates as many deregistrations are for reasons other than business failure.

Table 1: Deregistration rates of businesses registered for VAT

Year	Number deregistering within 3 years (thousand)	Per cent. deregistering within 3 years

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his current estimate of the number of small businesses in each London borough. [40546]

Mr. Page: The best estimate of the number of small businesses by London borough is given by the number of VAT registered businesses. A copy of the most recent figures "VAT Registrations and Deregistrations, County and District Analysis 1992–1993" is in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the cost to the public purse of the bankruptcy of small businesses as regard (a) write-off of tax debts, (b) tax relief to creditors on their losses in the bankruptcy and (c) the cost of statutory redundancy payments to the work force. [40548]

Mr. Evans: The information is not available.

South Western Electricity

23. Ms Church: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from the National Consumer Council on behalf of consumers about the bid for South Western Electricity by Southern Company. [38673]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None.

Nuclear Industry Privatisation

25. Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to privatise the nuclear industry. [38675]

Mr. Eggar: Preparations are in hand to transfer the United Kingdom's advanced gas-cooled reactor and pressurised water reactor nuclear power stations, together with their liabilities, to the private sector. It is our intention that this sale should take place in the summer of 1996.

This sale will bring many benefits. In private ownership, the holding company will be free to compete, both domestically and overseas. Privatisation will provide powerful incentives for the two subsidiary companies to benefit their customers by raising efficiency and reducing costs. Our proposals will make for a more competitive nuclear generation sector operating to continuing, rigorous safety standards and will strengthen the ability of British companies to market nuclear services abroad. At the same time, the changes in the fossil fuel levy and the equivalent step in Scotland will bring significant benefits to consumers.

27. Mr. Corbett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to privatise the nuclear industry. [38677]

Mr. Eggar: Preparations are in hand to transfer the United Kingdom's AGR and PWR nuclear power stations, together with their liabilities, to the private sector. It is our intention that this sale should take place in the summer of 1996.

This sale will bring many benefits. In private ownership, the holding company will be free to compete, both domestically and overseas. Privatisation will provide powerful incentives for the two subsidiary companies to benefit their customers by raising efficiency and reducing costs. Our proposals will make for a more competitive nuclear generation sector operating to continuing, rigorous safety standards and will strengthen the ability of British companies to market nuclear services abroad. At the same time, the changes in the fossil fuel levy and the equivalent step in Scotland will bring significant benefits to consumers.

32. Mr. Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what additional measures he is taking to ensure that safety standards are maintained in the period prior to privatisation of the nuclear industry. [38685]

Mr. Eggar: The independent Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate continues to monitor closely the safe operation of all the United Kingdom's nuclear installations. The Government will not permit any weakening of the existing regulatory regime or of the current safety standards in force.

Competitiveness

26. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new initiatives he is taking to improve competitiveness in British industry. [38676]

Mr. Lang: Improving UK competitiveness is at the centre of my Department's work. We are pursuing a wide range of initiatives, including the extension of the benchmarking approach into the service sector; encouraging innovation and improved supply chains; expanding support for small businesses through the opening of more business links; and export promotion.

Government-owned Companies (Exports)

28. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to improve the level of United Kingdom exports from Government-owned companies. [38678]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government are offering the best ever package of support to British exporting companies, regardless of ownership or sector. I draw the hon. Member's attention to the British Overseas Trade Board annual report and forward plan, which details our support. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Manufacturing Industry

29. Sir David Knox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet the President of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry. [38679]

Mr. Lang: I am due to address the national conference of the Confederation of British Industry on 14 November. The latest CBI survey shows continued growth in manufacturing output, investment and exports. In 1996 the CBI expects manufacturing output to grow by 4 per cent.

Cable Television

30. Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of current cable television investments in the United Kingdom. [38681]

Mr. Taylor: Investment of some £2 billion in 1995 will bring total cable investment in the UK to £5.2 billion. The recent cable communications exhibition showed the extent of the industry and its suppliers.

Engineering Exports

31. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current level of United Kingdom engineering exports. [38684]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is published by the Central Statistical Office in overseas trade analysed in terms of industries, business monitor MQ10, which is available in the Library of the House.

Insurance Company Funds

33. Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further plans he has to regulate the use of insurance company funds. [38686]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: We propose to update the annual returns which insurance companies are required to make to the Department, and to make some technical amendments to the regulations on the value placed on insurance companies' assets. Interested parties are being consulted on these proposals.

Gas and Electricity Prices

34. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in real terms of the prices of (a) electricity and (b) gas for use by domestic consumers since these industries were privatised. [38687]

Mr. Eggar: Since privatisation in 1990, domestic electricity prices, including VAT, have increased by 2 per cent. in real terms. Excluding VAT, they have fallen by 6 per cent. in real terms.

Since privatisation in late 1986, domestic gas prices, including VAT, have fallen by 16 per cent. in real terms. Excluding VAT, they have fallen by 23 per cent.

Privatised Utilities

35. Mr. Canavan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what subjects were discussed at his last meeting with chairmen of the privatised utilities. [38688]

Mr. Lang: I meet the chairmen of privatised utilities from time to time to discuss a range of matters of common interest.

Export Markets (East Timor)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if export licences have been applied for or granted for the export of logging trucks to East Timor. [40373]

Mr. Oppenheim: None in the period 1990 to 1995. Examination of manual records for earlier years would entail disproportionate costs.

Postal Services

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the postal services. [38920]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government are committed to maintaining a nationwide letter and parcel service with daily delivery to every address in the country at a uniform and affordable structure of prices.

Regional Electricity Companies

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance the Government will give to regional electricity companies in respect of tax liabilities arising from the flotation of the National Grid. [40567]

Mr. Eggar: None.

Internal Market Council

Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Internal Market Council of 9 October. [40112]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Internal Market Council scheduled for 9 October was cancelled. The next IMC is on 23 November.

Research Council

Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Research Council of 30 October. [40113]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Council agreed to increase the budget of the EU fourth framework programme for research and technology development by 6.5 per cent. to reflect the accession to the EU of Austria, Finland and Sweden. A number of member states, representing a blocking minority of votes, including the UK, formally indicated that any further decisions made by the Council for supplementary financing for the programme should be contained within the European Union's current financial perspectives.

The Council also decided that the International Association for the Promotion of Co-operation of Scientists from the new independent states of the former Soviet Union should continue in operation until the end of the fourth framework programme in 1988, and agreed a position for the EU at the meeting of the International Thermonuclear Reactor Council in December 1995.

The Commissioner for Research and Education introduced a Commission communication setting out the EU's approach to scientific and technological co-operation with third countries. The Commissioner for Industry briefly reported on the work of the Commission's research-industry task forces. These two issues will be the subject of further analysis and discussion by member states during the Italian presidency in the first half of 1996.

BMARC

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will rescind his decision not to release documents to the former director of BMARC, Mr. John Anderson, and if he will make a statement. [39014]

Mr. Lang: The court considering my application for disqualification of Mr. Anderson from acting as a company director, has ordered disclosure of certain documents and other material

> "as are presently in the hands of the Inspectors appointed to investigate the affairs of Astra Holdings Plc."

All such documents have been supplied to Mr. Anderson.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40508]

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on the number of petitions for bankruptcy initiated by my Department could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, my Department would initiate such proceedings only in exceptional circumstances and the number of such actions begun in each of the last five years is therefore likely to be very few.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) liquidations, (b) administrations, (c) receiverships and (d) company voluntary arrangements businesses employing under 500 people have experienced in each year since 1985. [40541]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information available is published in table 2 of the Insolvency Service general annual report for the years 1989 and 1994, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Information by size of business is not available. However, over 99 per cent. of businesses employ less than 500 people.

Company Rescue Procedures

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to encourage insolvency practitioners to undertake the London approach with small businesses, allowing a company to work out an informal arrangement with creditors while being protected from them. [40542]

Mr. Oppenheim: My Department has no such plans. I am keen to encourage the use of company rescue procedures, such as company voluntary arrangements and administration orders, wherever appropriate.

In April 1995, the Insolvency Service issued a consultative document on proposals for adding a 28-day moratorium on creditors' actions to the existing company voluntary arrangement procedure. It would give a company in financial difficulty a breathing space to put rescue proposals to creditors and was developed with the small company particularly in mind.

Illegal Immigration (Employer Sanctions)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from organisations representing small businesses about the burden on them of his proposals to fine employers who hire illegal immigrants. [40540]

Mr. Page: No representations on this issue have been received.

This proposals is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40507]

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the form requested. However, in common with other Government Departments, surveys of the DTI's payment performance have been carried out annually since 1991–92. Since then, the proportion of bills paid to all suppliers by DTI and its agencies within 30 days, or within the agreed credit period, has been as follows:

1991–92: 80 per cent. proportion
1992–93: 90.5 per cent. proportion
1993–94: 90 per cent. proportion

In 1994–95, following Treasury guidance, a new more rigorous system of sampling was introduced and the figure for that year was 84 per cent. I do not regard this performance as satisfactory and a target of 95 per cent. has been introduced for 1995–96.

Jewellery Industry

Ms Short: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make it his policy to accept annexe III of the draft directive on precious metals only if traditional marks remain permitted; and if he will make a statement; [40720]

(2) if Her Majesty's Government intend to support the draft precious metals directive; and if he will make a statement; [40719]

(3) what assessment has been made of the views of jewellery manufacturers and retailers on the proposed European directive on precious metals; and if he will make a statement. [40716]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government attach great importance to the maintenance of traditional Assay Office marks and will continue to press for these to be permitted, within the terms of any directive. However, he will continue to oppose the adoption of any precious metals directive which includes manufacturer marking on this basis of self-certification, as in annexe III of the current draft. Manufacturer marking on this basis is an inadequate form of consumer protection. The Government have consulted the British jewellery manufacturers and retailers throughout negotiations on the directive.

Ms Short: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment has been made of the likely effect of the Houtwipper decision in the European Court of Justice on the British jewellery industry; and if he will make a statement; [40717]

(2) what review his Department has undertaken of the Hallmarking Act 1973 in following the Houtwipper judgment in the European Court; and if he will make a statement. [40718]

Jonathan Evans: The Government are considering what the implications of the Houtwipper judgment, ECJ 293/93, might be for the Hallmarking Act 1973 and the British jewellery industry, having regard to the industry's concerns about the need to avoid confusion among customers in the marketplace, and to progress on negotiations on a draft directive to harmonise laws on the marking of precious metal articles.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38609]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of National Heritage on 31 October 1995.

Inward Investment

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the level of inward investment in the United Kingdom, and what is the average figure for the EU. [38680]

Mr. Oppenheim: The stock of inward direct investment in the UK in 1993—the latest available year—was £120 billion. It is estimated that the total stock of inward direct investment in the EU Twelve in 1993 was about £410 billion. The average of the EU Twelve was about £34 billion.

Former Coalfield Areas

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the regeneration of the former coalfield areas. [38668]

Mr. Oppenheim: My right hon. Friend the then President of the Board of Trade announced a package of measures totalling £200 million to help areas affected by pit closures. The major elements of this package were £75 million for training and enterprise councils, to be focused on training and business start-up measures and a £75 million English partnerships programme for factory and site provision. Assisted-area status was also granted to eight travel-to-work areas affected by pit closures.

This framework of regeneration measures is now in place in all areas and major projects are under way.

Electronic Batons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the country of origin and the destination of the electronic batons which were covered by trans-shipment licences issued in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994. [40375]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 30 October 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answers of my hon. Friend the Minister of Science and Technology to her on 15 June 1995, Official Report, column 603 and his letter to her of 3 August this year. No such licences were issued for these goods in 1994.

"The Torture Trail"

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost in damages and legal fees of the Department's unsuccessful libel action brought by Martyn Gregory, in relation to his programme "The Torture Chamber". [40374]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 October 1995]: I assume the programme to which the hon. Member refers is "The Torture Trail". I refer her to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley on 27 October 1995, Official Report, column 826. In addition, the Department's own costs, including calculation of value of time spent on the matter by officials, are estimated at £31,500.

Export Licences

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the practice of successive administrations not to disclose details of export licences has precluded providing information on the country of origin and destination of goods which are the subject of trans-shipment licences on every occasion that applications for such information has been made over the last five years. [40376]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 30 October 1995]: To ascertain whether the practice has precluded provision of such information over the last five years would involve disproportionate cost. In the event of any such requests, I would expect these details to have been refused in line with the practice of successive Administrations.

Personal Travel Times

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what values for personal travelling time are given in departmental assessment methods for (a) bus passengers, (b) pedestrians, (c) motorists and (d) cyclists. [39791]

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

Departmental assessment methods use values for savings in personal travel time, rather than a value of personal travel time itself. A saving of one hour of personal travel time for bus passengers or motorists is valued at £3.15 in 1994 prices. The value used for time savings to cyclists and pedestrians is double that for users of modes.

HEALTH

GP Lists

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the frequency of patients being removed from their doctor's list, at the decision of their doctor, over the last five years; and if he will publish this research; [37639]

(2) if he will instigate research into the removal of patients from doctor's lists and differences between regions, patient types and age groups and other relevant statistics. [37641]

Mr. Malone: Family health services authorities have delegated responsibility for the provision of general medical services in their area, including registration with and movements between general practitioners. In carrying out their responsibilities, family health services authorities themselves are best placed to recognise the need to commission research. Family health services authorities are increasingly encouraging general practitioners and patients to participate in conciliation processes which help avoid the need for removal action.

Manchester Family Health Services Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what payments were made to (a) the chairman and (b) the chief executive of Manchester FHSA when they left that authority in 1992; and if he will make a statement. [38299]

Mr. Malone: No payment was made to the chairman of Manchester family health services authority upon his resignation from the authority in May 1992. The chief executive received an employment termination settlement of £58,081.

Besselarr Clinical Research Unit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current research the Besselarr clinical research unit based at Leeds is carrying out for his Department; and what research they have carried out during the last 12 months. [39567]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 October, Official Report, columns 35–37.

Malaria

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the incidence of cases of malaria reported in the United Kingdom during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [39501]

Mr. Sackville: The cases reported to the malaria reference laboratory of the public health laboratory service and the London school of hygiene and tropical medicine for the United Kingdom for the period August 1994 to July 1995 are shown in the table.

	Total all malaria
August 1994	228
September 1994	222
October 1994	171
November 1994	176
December 1994	132
January 1995	124
February 1995	92
March 1995	98
April 1995	85
May 1995	173
June 1995	259
July 1995	218

These figures reflect the seasonal pattern in the numbers of United Kingdom citizens visiting malarious regions. The Government recommend that all travellers to malarious areas should seek advice from their doctor on measures to prevent malaria, including the use of appropriate prophylaxis.

Private Patient Income

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by trust in each region, details of income from private patients for 1993–94 and 1994–95 (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of total trust income. [39955]

Mr. Sackville: Details for 1993–94 will be placed in the Library. Figures for 1994–95 are not yet available.

Westminster Hospital

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what future plans are being considered for the former site of the Westminster hospital. [40238]

Mr. Malone: North Thames regional health authority is marketing the site. My hon. Friend may wish to approach the chairman, Sir William Staveley, for details.

Pharmaceutical Industries

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when, and for what purpose, he, his Ministers, or his officials last met representatives of the pharmaceutical industries. [40694]

Mr. Malone: There are regular contacts, at both ministerial and official level, between this Department and a wide range of representatives of the pharmaceutical industry to discuss issues of mutual interest.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many petitions for bankruptcy have been began by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40522]

Mr. Sackville: None.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40521]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested. The Department and its agencies regularly monitor their overall payment performance, the results of which are as follows:

Since 1991–92 the Department, excluding its agencies, has carried out annual surveys to ascertain the percentage of invoices paid within the agreed credit period, or where no credit period has been set, within 30 days of the presentation of a valid invoice. The Department's payment performance, against these criteria is as follows:

1991–92: 85 per cent.
1992–93: 90 per cent.
1993–94: 87.1 per cent.
1994–95: 91.9 per cent.

Information is available for the Department's agencies only in respect of 1994–95. Details are as follows:

NHS estate management and Health Building Agency—85 per cent. of payments were made within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice.

NHS Pensions Agency—the average time taken to pay suppliers was six days from the date of receipt of an invoice.

Medical Devices Agency—all invoices are paid promptly on receipt of a valid invoice. The agency which was established in September 1994 is due to publish its payment performance in its next annual report.

Youth treatment service—the average time taken to pay suppliers was 11 days from the receipt of the invoice.

Medicines Control Agency —the average time between receipt of a valid invoice and payment was 20 days.

Drug Deaths

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were killed in each of the past 10 years as a result of the use of (a) heroin and (b) paracetamol and substances containing paracetamol among other drugs. [40668]

Mr. Bowis: Data for 1993 and 1994 are not available.

Data for previous years are published in table 10 of the publication, "Mortality statistics, injury and poisoning, England and Wales", Series DH4, copies of which are available in the Library.

Donations

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount of moneys donated by (a) private individuals, (b) private companies and (c) charitable or voluntary organisations to hospitals and other NHS bodies in each of the last three years. [40794]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the losses made by the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital from the collapse of its joint business venture in building a super-incinerator; and if he will make a statement on the impact of these losses on patient services. [40798]

Mr. Sackville: The Royal National Orthopaedic hospital national health service trust is taking action to minimise the loss arising from its failed joint venture and to prevent any similar situation arising again. The loss to date stands at £3,492,000. The NHS executive is working with the trust to ensure that the impact of the loss on patient services is minimised.

Joint Business Ventures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial impact of joint business ventures on NHS trusts. [40799]

Mr. Sackville: It is a matter for individual national health service trusts whether they enter into joint business ventures. Trusts must satisfy themselves that any such venture is value for money and secures benefits for the NHS, in terms of either additional income, increased quality of service or access to private sector expertise, which would not be available to the trust operating alone.

Hospital Beds

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking in respect of bed losses in hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [40800]

Mr. Sackville: The number of beds needed by each individual hospital cannot be determined centrally. Decisions about bed stocks need to be made at local level, based on contracted work loads and taking account of local circumstances, such as the local rate for emergency admissions, the level of day case treatments and the availability of alternative services, such as hospital at home schemes.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement on the prevalence of under-bedding in the NHS (a) by category of hospital and (b) by region. [40801]

Mr. Sackville: National health service trusts regularly review the availability of beds to ensure they are matched to demand and to secure the best use of available resources.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40867]

Mr. Sackville: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95:
£5,000.00-£9,999.00
1995–96:
£5,000.00-£9,999.00

The highest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95:
£95,000.00-£99,999.00
1995–96:
£95,000.00-£99,999.00

GP Recruitment, London

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes in respect of general practitioner recruitment in inner London. [40829]

Mr. Malone: We have made available £15 million this year and plan to make available £20 million next year to support a package of initiatives designed to recruit and retain high-quality general practitioners in inner London. These initiatives have been drawn up in collaboration with local family health services authorities and general practitioners.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individuals in (a) his Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, received annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeding (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in each year since 1985–86. [40866]

Mr. Sackville: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme, staff received benefits in accordance with the scheme rules which had been deposited in the Library. Excluding the benefit of pension contributions, no member of staff employed directly by the organisations mentioned received annual remuneration above the sums specified in the years in question.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the performance of hospitals in meeting the patients charter target for trolley waits. [40802]

Mr. Sackville: Since April 1995 there has been a patients charter standard that a patient admitted to hospital via an accident and emergency department can expect to be given a bed a soon as possible, and certainly within four hours. From April 1996 this standard will be improved to two hours. Information relating to performance on this standard will become available in due course.

London Initiative Zone

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the underspend on capital spending by London initiative zone in each year since 1992 (a) in total and (b) by family health services authority; and if he will make a statement. [40828]

Mr. Malone: London initiative zone funding began in 1993–94. The information for 1993–94 and 1994–95 is shown in the table.

Reasons for the underspends included: delays and setbacks in finding suitable sites and securing planning permission; and adjustments inevitably needed when managing a complex capital programme over a six-year period. Capital underspends will be carried forward as part of ring-fenced funding of the development programme. The relevant funds will be spent on LIZ capital projects. In its third year, overall management of the LIZ capital programme continues to improve, in terms of both smaller projects and larger schemes requiring input from a number of different agencies.

Hospital Wards

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospital wards are presently closed in (a) London and (b) England. [40830]

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Staff Cars

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by (a) trusts, (b) district health authorities, (c) regional health authorities and (d) in total on cars for staff within the NHS in each of the last five years. [39652]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 26 October 1995]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville), gave her on 25 May, Official Report column 776. These replies cover the total expenditure on cars for the period 1991 to 1993. The expenditure on staff cars by regional health authorities in the year 1993–94 fell by £332,881 to £5,053,065. The expenditure on staff cars by district health authorities in the year 1993–94 fell by £17,071,191. Expenditure on staff cars by national health service trusts rose from £24,010,267 to £47,219,792, with the growth in the number of trusts from 156 in 1992–93 to 292 in 1993–94, an increase in expenditure on cars of about 5 per cent. per trust. The total expenditure on cars for staff was £76,271,287 in 1993–94, as against £70,465,834 in 1992–93. The provision of lease cars for NHS staff working in regional and district health authorities and for those working in NHS trusts on Whitely terms and conditions are governed by section 24 of the general Whitley Council handbook. Under these arrangements, employees contribute to costs of lease cars according to the amount of private mileage included in the lease car contract. The figures do not take account of employee contributions for private use of lease cars, since this information is not held centrally. In some cases, cars are offered to trust staff as part of remuneration packages. A survey on the use of lease cars in the NHS was carried out by the general Whitely Council management side secretariat during June 1994. The replies showed 62 per cent of cars being used by nurses, midwives and doctors.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Class Sizes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average size of classes in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Doncaster in January; and what was the figure for the previous 12 months. [38633]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is shown in the table.

Average size of single teacher classes in maintained schools in Doncaster local education authority area

Position in January each year Year	Primary	Secondary
1994	27.5	21.1
1995[1]	28.1	21.4

[1] Provisional.

Research Funding

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she is taking to ensure adequate funding for long-term research projects in United Kingdom universities. [38912]

Mr. Forth: The Higher Education Funding Council for England has allocated £636 million for support for basic research and the research infrastructure in English universities and colleges this year. It is for institutions themselves to decide how to spend their funds and what priority they attach to long-term research projects.

Barnsley-Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the employers in the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC area who have been given the investors in people award; and if she will list the employers who have currently made a commitment to meeting the standard. [39454]

Mr. Paice: The companies in the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council area who have been recognised as investors in people are:

> Bridon Ropes, JI Case, Reed Northern Newspapers, HMP Lindhome, Barnsley College, ACE Conveyor, Apollo Travel, Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, BYDA, Chamber of Commerce and Training, Doncaster Careers, G Page Holdings Look and Learn. Mercedez Benz, Rossington Comprehensive, Russell Eaton, The Hayfield School and the Weldrick Group.

Companies in the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council area who have made a commitment to investors in people are:

> ABB Passenger Services Ltd, Addspace/Coltran, Amocura, Barnsley Benefits Agency, Barnsley Hospital, Barnsley NHS Trust, Benefits Agency Doncaster, BMBC Catering, BTCV (Charity), BTCV (Enterprise), Care Homes Thorne, Doncaster College, Dunlop Slazenger, Grampian Country Foods, Haslam Homes, Hepworth Building Products Barnsley, Hepworth Building Products Doncaster, Hepworth Refractories, Hoyland Fox, KOYO, Lyons Cakes, Midland Bank Data Centre, Moorlands Prison, MP Burke, Naylor Brothers, Pilkington, Pindar Nursing Home, PLM Redfearn, Ardsley Moat House, Benton House Nursing Home, Billington Structures, BLP Group, BMB Builders Merchants, BMBC TES, Cambertown, Cameron Motor Services, Campsmount School, Danum Hotel, Doncaster Health Authority, Dunstan Brearley Travel, DVBS, Edlington School, FM Ball, Fosters Bakery, Fox's Music, Kostal, Monkton Coke, Northern College, Perry's, Priory School, Regent Hotel, Siddall & Hilton, SPG, Spring Choice, Sue Ryder Home, Sqllow Wood Nursing Home, Syndicate Group, Taylor Bracewell, Tranmoor Primary School, Walter Frank, Willis Supermarkets, Winterbottom Wire, Regency Doors, The Dome and Yorkshire Traction.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how much funding the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC has allocated to childminders undertaking the national vocational course in child care and education; [39478]

(2) if the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC assists childminders undertaking the national vocational qualification course in child care and education at (a) level 2 and (b) level 3. [39476]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when her Department last checked the credit rating of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC; and if she will make a statement. [39542]

Mr. Paice: The Department for Education and Employment carries out an assessment of Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council's financial viability on an annual basis.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what facilities are available to (a) her Department and (b) training providers to check the changing credit rating assessments of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC. [39510]

Mr. Paice: The Department does not undertake credit rating checks on Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council. An annual assessment of financial viability is made, and the financial status of the TEC is continually monitored by qualified accountants within the Government office for Yorkshire and Humberside.

Copies of the TEC's annual accounts are placed in the Library. Copies are also lodged with Companies House and these are available to training providers. Information is also provided by credit rating organisations in the private sector which offer assessments of TECs as part of their normal business. It is for individual training providers to decide if they need a credit rating assessment for Barnsley and Doncaster TEC.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current percentage pass rate at Barnsley and Doncaster TEC of general national vocational qualification students; and how this compares with previous results. [39470]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is operational information on the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council and the question would be best addressed to the TEC to answer.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many training weeks (a) were promised and (b) were undertaken for (i) employment training, (ii) youth training and (iii) other programmes for the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC for each year since its inception. [39464]

Mr. Paice: Since the inception of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC the total number of training weeks for employment training, youth training and other programmes allocated and paid for against the contract is as follows:

Contract year 1991–92

Programme	Allocated	Delivered
Youth training	237,801	229,578

These are Department for Education and Employment budgets only.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she last met representatives of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC to discuss its budget. [39523]

Mr. Paice: The Secretary of State for Education and Employment does not meet representatives of Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council to discuss its budget. Officials from the Government office for Yorkshire and Humberside meet TEC representatives monthly.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people were trained by Barnsley and Doncaster TEC in 1993–94 and 1994–95. [39452]

Mr. Paice: The total numbers starting youth training and training for work in the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC area are given in the table:

Barnsley and Doncaster TEC total starts in year

Cornish Language

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will take steps to ensure the continued existence of GCSE examinations in Cornish. [40489]

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for the GCSE examining groups, as independent commercial enterprises, to decide which subjects outside the national curriculum they wish to offer at GCSE. The Government cannot and should not require the groups to continue to offer a particular subject.

Workfare

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on workfare. [38682]

Mr. Forth: The term "workfare" can mean many things. As I understand, it usually refers to a universal compulsory work creation programme. We must be clear that the Government cannot create jobs; only the economy can do that. The Department's priority is to get unemployed people into jobs, and we have a wide range of provision to help them.

Unemployed people must make every effort to get work and it is right to require them, if necessary, to undertake appropriate action to do so. The Government have always made it clear that they do not rule out the use of targeted compulsory work experience programmes if it is shown that these help people back to work. We believe it is right to require activity that is focused firmly on what is most appropriate to the individual's circumstances.

Education Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Education Council held of 23 October 1995. [40115]

Mr. Forth: On 23 October, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) attended the Council of EC Education Ministers. The Council adopted a decision allowing the conclusion of a bilateral agreement in higher education and vocational training with the United States. The Council and the representatives of the Governments of the member states adopted a resolution on the response of education systems to the problems of racism and xenophobia and the Council also agreed conclusions on social participation as a factor for quality in non-university education.

Political agreement was reached on a bilateral agreement in higher education and vocational training with Canada which will be taken as an "A" point at a future Council.

Ministers received information from the European Commission on the European Year of Lifelong Learning; multimedia education software; and the forthcoming Commission White Paper on education and training. The presidency reported on preparations for the Euro-Med conference to be held in Barcelona on 27-28 November.

After the conclusion of Council business, a meeting was held with Education Ministers of the associated countries of central and eastern Europe to discuss prospects for their eventual participation in EC education, training and youth exchange programmes.

Stapio Insecticide

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer of 2 May, Official Report, column 145, what materials are disclosed on the invoice held by the Treasury Solicitor as having been used to spray the Grays unemployment benefits office on 8 October 1991; [40223]

(2) what properties are claimed for the chemical compound Novastet in relation to extermination of cockroaches and other insects; and if she will make a statement; [40224]

(3) if it was an implied condition for the contractors who sprayed chemicals at the Grays unemployment benefit office on 8 October 1991 to have public liability insurance; and if she will make a statement; [40225]

(4) what was the nature of the insect infestation as a result of which the Grays unemployment benefit office was sprayed on 8 October 1991. [40226]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D.J. Lifton to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay, dated 1 November 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your questions about Grays Unemployment Benefit Office (UBO).

You asked what materials are disclosed on the invoice held by the Treasury Solicitor as having been used to spray Grays UBO on 8 October 1991. The invoice does not make reference to materials and I attach a copy (Annex 1) for information.

You also asked what properties are claimed for the chemical compound Novastet in relation to the extermination of cockroaches and other insects. The Chief Executive's letter to you of 5 October provided a copy of the latest manufacturer's Data Hazard Sheet for Novastet.

You asked whether it was an implied condition for the contractors who sprayed chemicals at Grays UBO on 8 October 1991 to have public liability insurance. I am advised that it was not.

Finally, you asked what was the nature of the insect infestation which led to the spraying at Grays UBO. I am advised that the insects were black beetles.

I hope this is helpful.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to make training and enterprise council board members more accountable to the community. [40424]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are already accountable to their local communities in a number of ways. The contract Government have with TECs requires them to publish summaries of their corporate and business plans, to hold public meetings at least annually and to publish an annual report. All TECs have endorsed the TEC National Council framework on local accountability to which they are required to have due regard under their contract.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how individual training and enterprise council board members' activities are monitored to ensure they are in the public interest. [40420]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are private companies. The activities of the directors are a matter for the TECs themselves in compliance with company law. The Government contract with TECs requires them to maintain a register of directors' interests, which is open to regular inspection by staff from the Government regional office. All TECs have endorsed the TEC National Council framework on local accountability and the Cadbury code on corporate governance to which they are required to have due regard under their contract.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the Confederation of British Industry's review of training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies, "Making Labour Markets Work", and its recommendation in respect of enhanced local democracy. [40440]

Mr. Paice: In July this year the Training and Enterprise Council National Council published a "Framework for the Local Accountability of TECs in England and Wales". The framework, which is based on the principles of openness, integrity and accountability, covers the issues relating to local accountability addressed by the Confederation of British Industry in its 1993 report, and in particular the recommendation that the council develops a voluntary code of practice. TECs are required by their contract with Government to have due regard to the framework. Local enterprise companies in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the merger arrangements between training and enterprise councils and chambers of commerce. [40423]

Mr. Paice: The Government have agreed to a pilot programme of voluntary mergers to test local initiatives which build on the existing strengths of training and enterprise councils and chambers. So far five proposals for merger have been approved.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to (a) increase the numbers of directors on training and enterprise boards, (b) maintain a register of board members' interests, (c) appoint directors for specific terms of office and (d) ensure that directors receive initial training. [40419]

Mr. Paice: There are no plans to increase the number of directors on the boards of training and enterprise councils. The contract the Government have with TECs requires them to maintain a register of the declared interests of directors. As private companies, the organisation of TECs is set out in their articles of association. These require the directors to seek re-election by the membership every three years. Induction training is a matter for each TEC board.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what actions she plans to take to promote women, representatives of ethnic minority groups and the voluntary sector becoming involved in training and enterprise council boards of directors. [40421]

Mr. Paice: As private companies, training and enterprise councils are responsible for the appointment of their directors. The Government's contract with a TEC requires at least two thirds of the directors to be chairmen, chief executives, senior partners or top operational managers from the private sector. The remaining directors should have equivalent status and be drawn from education, economic development, trade unions, voluntary organisations or the public sector. Directors are appointed as individuals and not as the representatives of another organisation. The Training and Enterprise Council National Council framework on local accountability, endorsed by all TECs, expects boards to have the necessary breadth and balance to reflect the priorities of the local community and economy.

Training Schemes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many persons undertaking employment training and training for work schemes left without a qualification in the last five years for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [40438]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is given in the table.

Employment training/training for work England and Wales—Percentage of leavers without a full qualification or credit towards one

	Per cent.
1990–91	67
1991–92	63
1992–93	59
1993–94	56

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she plans to take to promote employment training and training for work within the ethnic minority community; and how she plans to pursue an improvement in qualification pass rates. [40418]

Mr. Paice: Training for work, which replaced employment training in April 1994, is delivered locally by training and enterprise councils. They have contractual obligations to promote equality of opportunities for all their activities. To help them meet these obligations, the Department has recently issued an updated equal opportunities good practice guide.

The Department recognises the importance of qualification and monitors closely the achievement rates of the ethnic minority and non-ethnic minority communities. TFW's main focus, however, is on jobs and we have set each TEC targets that reflect this. TECs are paid substantial premiums for trainees requiring basic literacy and numeracy or for whom English is a second language.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how she plans to prevent abuse of output-related funding schemes within training for work; and if she will make a statement. [40422]

Mr. Paice: Output-related funding in training for work provides an effective incentive to produce results for participants in the form of jobs and qualifications. Any specific allegations of abuse are investigated. The Department has stringent audit requirements in its contracts with TECs. Measures have been taken to assist awarding bodies to enhance their verification of NVQs within training for work.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by her Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40528]

Mr. Forth: I know of none.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how often her Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40527]

Mr. Forth: Information in the form requested is not available. In the Department and its agencies, over 95 per cent. of bills are paid within 30 days.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in her (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40863]

Mr. Robin Squire: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £6,773—£9,499
1995–96: £6,928—£9,716

The highest full-time salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £95,000—£99,999
1995–96: £95,000—£99,999

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many individuals in (a) her Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, received annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeding (i) £100,000 (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in each year since 1985–86. [40862]

Mr. Robin Squire: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies and NDPBs. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme's rule, which has been deposited in the Library.

The numbers receiving annual remuneration above the sums specified, excluding pension benefits in the years in question, was: (i) nil, (ii) nil, (iii) nil.

Skills Shortages

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment her Department has made of skills shortages experienced by British exporters. [40538]

Mr. Paice: In October 1995 10 per cent. of manufacturing firms, of which the majority of companies surveyed are exporters, expect skill shortages to limit output over the next four months. This is similar to recent quarters and well below the levels observed in the 1980s.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment her Department has made of the impact of (a) skills training and (b) management training on the likelihood of small businesses surviving. [40547]

Mr. Paice: The "Winning Report", published by DTI and CBI in 1994, shows that training is increasingly a key element in business success. On small firms, the 1994 skill needs in Britain survey provides clear evidence that smaller businesses need to improve management and skills training. The last two competitiveness White Papers have announced measures to encourage training in small firms.

Teachers' Pensions

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the future administration of teachers' pensions in England and Wales. [41373]

Mr. Robin Squire: I announced on 7 June 1995 that we were inviting expressions of interest for a contract to administer the teachers' superannuation scheme. In the light of the expressions of interest that we received, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is satisfied that we should proceed to the next stage and invite some of the companies concerned to tender for a contract. Inviting tenders will give the companies the opportunity to show whether they could administer the scheme at lower cost and to the required standard. The taxpayer is entitled to the best possible value for money in the administration of the scheme.

We are inviting six companies to tender: Abbey National Benefit Consultants Ltd., Capita Group Plc, Colonial Mutual Group (UK Holdings) Ltd., CSL Group Ltd., Hartshead Solway Ltd. and ITnet Ltd.

All six have declared that they would: intend to seek a fee for administering the scheme that was lower than the expected cost of keeping the administration of the scheme in the public sector; and agree in any contract to provide a standard of service and performance that was at least as high as that which the Teachers' Pensions Agency would provide.

We shall let a contract only if it would be better value for money than keeping the administration of the scheme in the public sector. We remain absolutely committed to ensuring that the scheme continues to operate smoothly and without interruption. We continue to expect that any contract would start in the latter part of 1996.

We are advised that staff of the Department for Eduction and Employment who transferred to a contractor would be covered by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. All six companies say that they would intend to keep the core administration of the scheme at its current location in Darlington. All six see possibilities for introducing new business.

We shall lay a draft order under section 69 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 at the start of the coming Parliamentary Session. It will be subject to affirmative resolution in both Houses. Once approved, it will allow my right hon. Friend to authorise a contractor to administer the scheme.

I reaffirm that a contractor would not be allowed to use data on teachers for purposes other than administering the scheme. All the companies have declared that they would keep data concerning members of the scheme confidential.

I also reaffirm that any contract would concern only the administration of the scheme. Whether or not we let a contract, the scheme itself will stay in the public sector, on its current statutory basis.

Letting a contract would not affect the size of safety of teachers' pensions. The scheme has no real pension fund. Instead payments are made to and from the Exchequer; and the Exchequer guarantees, in effect, the payments to which retired teachers are entitled under the regulations that govern the scheme.

We shall shortly invite representatives of teachers and their employers to comment on a draft statement of the service that any contactor would have to provide in administering the scheme. Similar invitations will go to the staff of the TPA itself and to the six companies that we are inviting to tender. We shall take careful account of all the comments that we receive before finalising the statement.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list by individual case the number of industrial tribunal and fair employment applications lodged against each (a) college and (b) university in England for each year since 1990; how many cases have been upheld against the colleges and universities; how many cases have resulted in a settlement which has involved payments being made by an education and library board or university; and if she will make a statement. [39508]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the industrial tribunals has now passed to my Department. Information about individual parties to industrial tribunal cases is not collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a list of the (a) regional, (b) full-time and (c) part-time chairs of industrial tribunals stating in each case their previous or past occupation and positions and any relevant interest they have declared. [40494]

Mr. Evans: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the industrial tribunals has now passed to my Department. A list of all industrial tribunal chairmen, giving their previous occupations, will be placed in the Library at the earliest opportunity. Details of positions held and any relevant interests they have declared could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Training and Employment Grants Scheme

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on how the training and employment grants scheme operates in Scotland; what criteria are used to assess entitlement; how post codes are used to identify eligible areas and if he will make a statement. [39294]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

The training and employment grants scheme is operated by Scottish Enterprise through its network of local enterprise companies. The scheme is designed to increase access to employment opportunities for young and long-term unemployed people, and to enhance their employability through the provision of training and work experience. The scheme operates in selected postcode areas of Scotland where employment opportunities are generally low and unemployment high. The designation of the eligible areas for TEGS is a two-tier process. The first tier ranks every postcode in the SE area based on levels of unemployment. Three factors are applied: the proportion of unemployed people in the area, numbers of long-term unemployed males and the rate of change in the numbers of long-term unemployed males. The second tier relies on judgments by LECs based on their knowledge of local needs and unemployment patterns using a number of criteria which focus on linking unemployed people into the wider economy.

Unemployment (Carers)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what analysis she has of current levels of unemployment among (a) male and (b) female carers and past carers. [38546]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The latest available information from the labour force survey shows that in spring 1995 there were 23,000 International Labour Organisation unemployed women who stated that their previous occupation was a care assistant or attendant. The number of ILO unemployed men whose previous occupation was in these categories is too few to provide a reliable estimate.

Information is also available from the autumn 1994 LFS, which shows that there were 68,000 men and 246,000 women who said they were economically inactive—not in employment or ILO unemployed—because they were looking after a dependent adult relative.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional revenue is allowed to local education authorities over the capping levels to provide the additional services to meet local demands? [38789]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

Under the 1995–96 capping criteria even those local education authorities budgeting above their standard spending assessment were able to increase their budgets by a minimum of 0.5 per cent. over the previous year. Within its overall budget, it is a matter for each authority to decide on its relative priorities in the light of local needs.

We will announce our provisional decisions on the local government finance settlement for 1996–97 and our intentions for capping shortly after the Chancellor's Budget statement. We will consult authorities and others on our proposals at that time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38600]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my Friend the Minister of State, Department of National Heritage on 1 November 1995, Official Report, columns 186-87.

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department will be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Oldham, West of 1 September following up a letter of 18 July concerning the case of Mohammed Nadeem, GV100/28257. [40731]

Mr. Hanley: The migration and visa correspondence unit replied to the hon. Member's letter of 1 September on 27 October. The delay in replying is regretted.

Cyprus

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the names of those holders of British passports who went missing during the Turkish invasion of Cyprus in 1974. [41178]

Mr. David Davis: We have no record of any single nationality British citizens still missing following events in Cyprus over the last 30 years. Under international law, British citizens with dual nationality are the responsibility of the country of their second nationality while in that country. The cases of dual nationals who went missing in Cyprus were submitted to the UN committee on missing persons by the Government of Cyprus. If there are dual nationals amongst those Cypriots known to be missing, they are not specifically listed as such.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government propose to take to ascertain the fate of those holders of British passports who went missing in the Turkish invasion of Cyprus in 1974. [41176]

Mr. Davis: It is for the UN committee on missing persons to examine these cases. We have no locus to act for dual nationals in the country of their second nationality. The British High Commission in Nicosia remains in close touch with the committee and is ready to check with the committee that all cases of dual UK/Cyprus nationals brought to its attention are being examined.

European Court Decisions

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral answer of the Attorney-General of 30 October 1995, Official Report, column 12, relating to decisions of the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights, if he will list those European Court decisions relating to responsibilities of his Department over the past two years; and if he will further indicate the estimated annual cost to public funds of each decision. [41207]

Mr. David Davis: The information requested will take some time to compile. I shall reply to the hon. Member shortly.

Zaire

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the alleged killings of peaceful protesters during a rally in Kinshasa, Zaire on 29 July. [40599]

Mr. Hanley: An unauthorised demonstration was held on 29 July in Kinshasa by the Unified Lumumbist party—PALU—close to the transitional Parliament buildings. Demonstrators clashed with the gendarmerie and, most regrettably, 10 people died: one gendarme and nine demonstrators.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information and representations he has received about the human rights situation in Zaire. [40598]

Mr. Hanley: Through the British embassy in Kinshasa we are in regular contact with a broad range of human rights organisations and political parties in Zaire. We receive information on a regular basis about human rights issues from non-governmental organisations, the press and political parties.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Zaire about protection of human rights in the country. [40600]

Mr. Hanley: We remain concerned at the human rights situation in Zaire. Through the British embassy in Kinshasa we keep in close touch with the Zairean authorities over the need to improve respect for human rights, including issues that affect refugees in the great lakes region.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 2 November. [39339]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 2 November. [39341]

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 2 November. [38959]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies whose annual remuneration, including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–86, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93, (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96. [40813]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 November 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 1 November, column 324.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40814]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 November 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 1 November, columns 324-25.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to public funds in respect of the Benefits Agency staff who travelled around Spain earlier this year explaining to resident United Kingdom citizens how to claim pensions and social security allowances; and if he will make a statement. [39051]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 November 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the cost to public funds in respect of the Benefits Agency staff who travelled around Spain earlier this year explaining to resident United Kingdom citizens how to claim pensions and Social Security allowances.

A visit to Spain was made by Benefits Agency staff during the period 4 June 1995 to 8 June 1995. This was in response to requests from the British Consulate and customer representative organisations to provide sufficient information to them to better understand and answer enquiries from Benefits Agency customers living in, or visiting Spain. The cost of the visit was less than £4,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39560]

Mr. Burt: Estimated outturn for 1994–95 for civil service manpower and pay bill and manpower plans for 1995–96 are set out in the Department's annual report, Cm 2813, copies of which are in the Library.

A breakdown by grade and individual agency could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Statutory Maternity Pay

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reduce the statutory maternity pay rebate. [40093]

Mr. Heald: Any proposed changes in the level of reimbursement of statutory maternity pay paid by employers would be announced and would require primary legislation.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria are used by the vaccine damage payments unit to decide on the merits of claims and order of magnitude of payments arising from claims; and on what basis as to liability claims are made. [40273]

Mr. Burt: Vaccine damage payments are made by the Secretary of State under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 and associated regulations. The Act and regulations set out the conditions of entitlement, including medical and disability conditions, which must be satisfied before payment is made. Where a claim is successful a single tax-free payment of £30,000 is made. The payment is made without acceptance of liability and does not affect the claimant's right to seek compensation through the courts.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the total number of individuals claiming housing benefit in each of the past five years; [40688]

(2) if he will list the total sums of money paid in housing benefit in each of the past five years. [40686]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Housing benefit recipients and expenditure for Great Britain

Year	Recipients Thousands	Financial year	Expenditure £ million
1991	4,030	1991–92	5,100
1992	4,326	1992–93	6,375
1993	4,533	1993–94	7,793
1994	4,650	1994–95	9,193
1995	4,734	1995–96	10,253

Notes:

1. Figures for number of recipients is taken from count made on last working day of May for each of the given years. Figures refer to benefit units which may be a single person or a couple.

2. Expenditure figures for 1995–96 are the estimated outturn. Figures for other years are outturn.

3. Sources of data: Housing Benefit Management Information System and the 1995 departmental report.

Lone Parents

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department is currently undertaking to investigate whether child maintenance payments set at too high a level can provide a work disincentive to some lone parents. [40316]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The Department has an on-going programme for evaluating the effects of child support. Research by the Policy Studies Institute has already established that over 90 per cent. of parents with care who are not working have past work experience, and that maintenance provides an important incentive for those who want to return to work.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the parents with care who cease benefit claims after the intervention of the Child Support Agency reapply within a six month period. [40317]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he had in respect of the legal dispute between EDS and Computer Associates at the time of placing the Child Support Agency computer system with EDS. [40320]

Mr. Burt: The Secretary of State had no information about any legal dispute between EDS and Computer Associates at the time of placing the child support computer system with EDS.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many persons receiving (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit he expects to lose their entitlement on 8 January 1996 as a result of the determination of a claim for asylum on or after 12 October 1995; and what would be the cost in 1996–97 of preserving that entitlement; [40612]

(2) how many persons receiving income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit, respectively, he expects to lose their entitlement on 8 January 1996 as a result of having claimed benefit as asylum seekers on or after 12 October 1995; and what would be the cost in 1996–97 of preserving that entitlement. [40625]

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 31 October 1995]: It is estimated that following an asylum decision in the period after 12 October, some 7,000 existing asylum seekers who applied for benefits before that date may lose their entitlement when the regulations come into effect. The gross cost of preserving those entitlements during any appeals process in 1996–97 is estimated at £15 million. This does not allow for those who may have lost their entitlement under the previous regulations.

A further 6,000 in-country asylum seekers who are expected to claim benefit after 12 October may also lose their entitlement to benefits when the regulations come into effect. The gross cost of preserving those entitlements in 1996–97 is estimated at £30 million. This extra cost arising because their entitlements would have to be preserved during the initial decision making process as well as any appeals process.

Asylum seekers are separately identified only in the income support scheme. Approximately 55 per cent. of asylum seekers in receipt of income support are also in receipt of housing benefit. Some 15 per cent. are also in receipt of council tax benefit.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which countries have been notified to him by the Home Secretary as having (a) before 12 October 1995 and (b) on or after 12 October 1995 undergone a significant upheaval; and how many asylum seekers from each of those countries have claimed income support since 12 October; [40626]

(2) if people claiming asylum while in Great Britain on or after 12 October 1995 as a result of a significant upheaval in their country of origin which occurred before 12 October will be treated as asylum seekers for purposes of entitlement to benefit. [40628]

Mr. Evans: I have not yet received notification of any upheaval list countries.

Motability

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department will receive a report from the National Audit Office on Motability and Motability Finance Ltd. [40929]

Mr. Burt: The status and timing of the report from the National Audit Office on Motability is a matter for the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Earnings (Replacement Ratios)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the current replacement ratio of (a) a single person, (b) a married couple, (c) a married couple with one child, (d) a married couple with two children and (e) a married couple with three children and jobs paying at (i) 25 per cent. of median wages, (ii) 50 per cent. of median wages, (iii) 60 per cent. of median wages, (iv) 75 per cent. of median wages, (v) 80 per cent. of median wages and (vi) 90 per cent of median wages. [41079]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Replacement ratios show potential out-of-work income as a percentage of in-work income. It should be noted that the figures provided for couples assume that only one partner is in work. The replacement ratio is likely to be significantly lower if both partners are in work.

Changes made to the tax and national insurance systems and to the structure of income-related benefits since 1985 have led to a significant reduction in the numbers with very high replacement ratios of over 90 per cent. It is estimated that only a tiny proportion of the working population have replacement ratios of over 100 per cent.

The new premium in family credit from July for those working 30 or more hours per week will further reduce the numbers with very high replacement ratios. In addition, a new in-work benefit aimed at couples and single people without children will be tested from October 1996 to examine its effects on increasing the gain from work, in the same way as family credit does now for families with children.

Replacement ratios at various percentages of median earnings

Family Type	Percentage of median earnings 25 per cent.	50 per cent.	60 per cent.	75 per cent.	80 per cent.	90 per cent.
Single person	85	52	42	33	30	27
Married couple	94	79	64	50	47	41
Married couple with 1 child aged 3	83	80	80	68	63	56
Married couple with 2 children aged 4 and 6	87	86	85	79	74	65
Married couple with 3 children aged 3, 8 and 11	91	90	88	83	82	77

Notes:

[1] Figures have been rounded to the nearest 1 per cent.

[2] Median earnings are £323.20 gross per week, based on all males in full-time work at April 1995 (New Earnings Survey 1995).

[3] Replacement ratios shown are based on in work and out of work income after the payment of housing costs. Out of work income figures used include the cash value of milk tokens and free school meals where appropriate.

[4] All family types shown are assumed to live in local authority accommodation and pay average rent, appropriate to family size, and average council tax. Families with children are assumed to work for 30 or more hours per week and have no childcare costs.

[5] Married couple examples assume only one partner working. All examples assume no income other than earnings, income-related benefits and, where appropriate, Child Benefit.

[6] All benefit rates used in the calculation of replacement ratios are for 1995–96.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the estimated cost of ending the capital and notional income testing rules for council tax benefit for retired people while retaining unchnged the present tests for actual income. [41035]

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated cost of removing the lower and upper capital limits and the tariff income rule for pensioners is £340 million in council tax benefit. This assumes that actual income from capital would be taken into account.

Notes:

1. Although the question refers to retired people, it has been interpreted to refer to people over 60 years of age and living in the community. The cost for those in residential or nursing care is not applicable, as these are exempt from council tax.

2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

3. The estimate is based on data from the 1991, 1992 and 1993 Family Expenditure Survey, adjusted to be consistent with reported data from the 1994 HBMIS dataset for council tax benefit.

4. All figures are uprated to 1995–96 prices and benefit levels.

5. Given the tenuous nature of the data and the methodology used to arrive at this estimate, the figure are broad order of magnitude as opposed to robust estimates.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the income support and housing benefit income of (a) a single person, (b) married couple, (c) married couple with one child, (d) married couple with two children and (e) married couple with three children assuming an average housing benefit payment. [41080]

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is provided in table 3.1 of the tax benefit model tables, a copy of which is in the Library.

European Court Decisions

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral answer of the Attorney-General of 30 October, Official Report, column 12, relating to decisions of the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights, if he will list those European Court decisions relating to responsibilities of his Department over the past two years; and if he will further indicate the estimated annual cost to public funds of each decision. [41213]

Mr. Burt: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff are currently employed in his Department and in related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work-force; and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41112]

The Attorney-General: Breakdowns by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—normally those engaged for a period of up to 12 months, but exceptionally up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis for 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of which countries he expects, on the basis of the information at present available to him, to make a declaration on 8 January 1996 for the purposes of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1995 that they have undergone events likely to give rise to a well-founded fear of persecution among their nationals. [40627]

Mr. Kirkhope: We envisage that a declaration will be made only if a major upheaval occurs in a country. It is not proposed to make a declaration in respect of upheavals which have already taken place, since nationals of the country concerned who were present in the United Kingdom will have had adequate opportunity to claim asylum before 12 October. Under the draft regulations, the benefit entitlement of a person who claimed asylum before that date will be protected until a decision is taken on their claim.

National Lottery Charities Board

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 23 October 1995, Official Report, column 448, if he will list (a) the consultants employed by the National Lottery Charities Board in the 14 months up to September 1995 and (b) the amounts paid to each firm. [39817]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 26 October 1995]: This is a matter for the National Lottery Charities Board, on which the hon. Member may wish to contact the chief executive. The National Audit Office has full access to contract and payment details.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 23 October 1995, Official Report, column 448, if he will specify the travel costs claimed by each member of the National Lottery Charities Board. [40659]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Of the £44,000 reimbursed to the chairman and members of the National Lottery Charities Board up to the end of September 1995, £21,000 was paid in travelling expenses for legitimate attendance at board meetings and journeys on official board business. These figures are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

Michael Joseph McKenny

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will release Joseph McKinney from Frankland prison; what is Mr. McKinney's date of birth; and how many years of his sentence he has served. [40450]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 30 October 1995]: The prisoner referred to was convicted under the name of Michael Joseph McKenny.

Mr. McKenny was born on 7 February 1927. He has served eight years and seven months of a 16-year sentence. His final statutory parole review is due to commence in January 1996. If he is not released as a result of that review, his earliest date of release will be in January 1997.

Metropolitan Police (Settlements)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been paid by the Metropolitan police in out-of-court settlements in each of the past three financial years and the current year to date. [41182]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 17 July 1995, Official Report, column 933. This information is recorded by calendar year, not by financial year. The amount paid in out of court settlements this year up to 31 October is £488.000.

Football Matches (Policing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend charges made upon London football clubs for police presence in or at stadiums to include all officers employed outside the ground in connection with matches; and if he will make a statement. [41179]

Mr. Maclean: Policing outside football grounds is part of the duty of the police to maintain law and order in public places and to keep traffic flowing. It would not be appropriate to make charges.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the payments to police forces made by each of London's Premier and Football League clubs in season 1994–95 and 1995–96 to date. [41181]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Metropolitan police that the payments—which are not necessarily the same as the amounts billed—are those given in the table.

	Payments to Metropolitan police
Club	1994–95 season £	1995–96 season[1] £

National Insurance Status

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from employers' organisations in respect of the Government's plans to make employers check on employees' national insurance status; and what proportion of these have been in favour of the proposals. [40968]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 1 November 1995, Official Report, column 270.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the disturbances that have occurred since Doncaster prison was opened; and if he will make a statement. [40955]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of disturbances that have occurred since Doncaster prison was opened.

Doncaster prison was opened on 20 June 1994 and from that date until 30 September 1995, a total of 48 incidents of concerted indiscipline were reported to Prison Service headquarters.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who or what organisation initiated the litigation about the tariff scheme for criminal injuries compensation; and to what extent this litigation was funded out of public funds. [40705]

Mr. Maclean: The applicants in the application for judicial review were the Fire Brigades Union, the National Association of Schoolmasters and Women Teachers, Unison, GMB, the Royal College of Nursing, the Transport and General Workers Union, the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, the Prison Officers Association, the Civil and Public Services Association and the Trades Union Congress. After the House of Lords judgment, the applicants were awarded costs; these costs and the costs incurred by Government were met from public funds.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of whether the police and medical authorities are co-operating sufficiently with the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board concerning cases of the constituents of the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East. [40496]

Mr. Maclean: Under the terms of the criminal injuries compensation scheme the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board is exclusively responsible for the handling and determination of individual applications. The CICB reviews on an on-going basis the responses of the police and medical authorities to requests for reports. It advises that there are no significant problems in the Bolton, North-East area.

Gambling

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions on the commercial promotion of gambling are currently in place; and what have been the changes in the last five years. [40750]

Mr. Kirkhope: Section 42 of the Gaming Act 1968 prohibits, with certain exceptions, advertisements which inform the public of premises on which gaming takes place or which invites them to participate in such gaming. The main exceptions are:

> advertisements relating to incidental activities at non-commercial entertainments; to amusement centres and arcades; and to travelling showman's pleasure fairs;
> print advertisements relating to bingo which do not contain inducements;
> signs displayed on bingo premises giving information on prizes;
> signs outside casinos indicating that gaming takes place on premises.

Section 10 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 provides a general prohibition on advertisements relating to particular betting shops. There are exceptions for advertisements which are published inside betting shops and those which can be seen from outside the premises, provided that they comply with certain restrictions which are prescribed in regulations.

The Broadcasting Act 1990 makes the Independent Television Commission and the Radio Authority responsible for drawing up and enforcing codes governing standards and practice for advertising and programme sponsorship on television and radio respectively. There is a general prohibition on advertising of betting and gaming in the advertising codes. This prohibition does not apply to advertisements relating to lotteries permitted under National Lottery etc. Act 1993 and the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976, or the football pools. In addition, the ITC and Radio Authority programme sponsorship codes prohibit betting and gaming companies from sponsoring television and radio programmes about certain activities related to the same form of betting or gaming as that in which the company deals.

Changes introduced in the last five years include:

the Bingo Act 1992, which introduced a partial relaxation of restrictions on print advertising of bingo;

the Licensed Betting Offices (Amendment) Regulations 1995, which gave betting shops greater freedom to advertise in their windows; changes to the ITC and Radio Authority advertising codes in December 1993 and April this year, respectively, to allow broadcast advertising of the national lottery;

changes to the ITC and Radio Authority programme sponsorship codes in January and December 1994, respectively, to allow betting and gaming companies to sponsor certain types of programmes; changes, in April this year, to the ITC and Radio Authority advertising codes to allow broadcast advertising of the football pools.

Prison Education

Mr. George Howarth : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate for spending on prison education for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 following the Woodcock and Learmont reports. [40461]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 2 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the estimate for spending on prison education for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 following the Woodcock and Learmont reports.

Budgets for education services are devolved to governors who base their spending plans on local needs taking into account the number of teacher contact hours which can be purchased from their education provider at the agreed contract price.

The estimate for spending on prison education in 1995–96, including Public Library Authority library provision but excluding Vocational Training and Construction Industry Training spending, is £37,093,000.

Estimates of expenditure for 1996–97 and 1997–98 will be determined as part of the strategic planning cycle on which negotiations are currently taking place. Final decisions will not be taken until shortly before the start of the next financial year.

Prison Service Performance Indicators

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make changes to the Prison Service's key performance indicators; and if he will make a statement. [40454]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 2 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about proposed changes to the Prison Service's Key Performance Indicators (KPIs).

The Prison Service has achieved its existing targets on visits and trebling. The remaining indicators do not now fully reflect the impact of new work that the Service has taken on (for example, the mandatory drug testing programme). The Service is therefore committed to developing new indicators to reflect its performance across the range of its work.

We are now considering what changes are necessary in the light of Sir John Learmont's recommendation on performance indicators.

The Prison Service Framework Document requires changes to the KPIs to be approved by Home Office, Treasury and Office of Public Service Ministers.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the figures for each key performance indicator for each prison for the year 1994–95. [40453]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 2 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about figures for key performance indicators (KPIs) for the year 1994–95.

The figures are set out in the attached tables, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House. Establishments are grouped by type to make it easier to compare performance between establishments of a similar kind.

The tables do not include data on KPIs 3, 4 or 7. The target for KPI 3 was to ensure that the average number of prisoners held three to a cell intended for one was fewer than in 1993–94. The outcome was that there was no trebling in any establishment. On KPI 4, the target was to provide 24 hour access to sanitation in at least 3,500 more cells, thus ensuring that at least 95% of prisoners have access to sanitation at all times. This target is managed nationally, not locally, and the outcome was that 4,191 more cells were provided with 24 hour access to sanitation. On KPI 7, the target was to ensure that all prisons had the opportunity to exceed the minimum visiting entitlement throughout the year. This was achieved in full at all establishments.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary. [39461]

Mr. Howard: My Department is responsible for the following appointments in South Yorkshire:

one member of the selection panel on appointments of independent members to the South Yorkshire police authority;

the board of visitors at the following prison establishments:

Doncaster

Lindholme

Moorland Young Offenders Institution

Hatfield Young Offenders Institution.

The appointment to the selection panel is for two years. A new appointment is due on 8 August 1996. There is no salary but members are entitled to be paid allowances; the rates to be determined at the police authority's discretion. The Home Office recommends the allowances should be consistent with those paid to police authority members, that is £15 per hour up to a maximum of £120 per day and £3,000 per year.

Members are appointed to the boards of visitors for a maximum period of three years to coincide with the triennial review date of that board. Appointments are made for varying periods of up to three years and new appointments are made as and when vacancies arise. Members are unpaid volunteers though they can claim for expenses they have incurred as a result of the performance of their official duties.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39571]

Mr. Howard: The only such bodies in South Yorkshire to which my Department makes appointments are the boards of visitors at the following prison and young offender establishments:

HMP Doncaster;

HMP Lindholme;

HMP and Young Offenders Institution Moorland;

HMYOI Hatfield

The national boards of visitors budgets for the financial years 1991–92 to 1994–95 were as follows:

£ thousands

Year	Budget[1]
1991–92	378,000
1992–93	507,000
1993–94	734,000
1994–95	764,000

[1] These figures include the liaison section, which manages the administration of boards of visitors, and all local board expenses.

The total number of national appointments to the boards of visitors were as follows:

Year	Appointments
1991	346
1992	350
1993	344
1994	243
Total	1,283

The following table illustrates the appointments/reappointments during the last four years—1 January 1991 to 31 December 1994—in the South Yorkshire area.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39859]

Mr. Howard: I met the former Director General of the Prison Service 11 times in January, four times in both February and October, 10 times in March, once each in April, August and September, three times in both May and July and five times in June, an average of one meeting a week over the 10-month period. I met the chief executive of the Passport Agency once in April. I had no meetings with the chief executives of the Forensic Science Service and the Fire Service College—the other Home Office agencies—during that period. I receive quarterly reports from the chief executives on the performance of their agencies.

Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he last visited the military corrective training centre at Colchester; [39515]

(2) on what dates during the last 12 months his Ministers have visited the military corrective training centre at Colchester. [39514]

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. and learned Friend last visited the military corrective training centre at Colchester on 3 March this year. The right hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth) visited the centre on 3 May.

Fire Services, Wales

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is prepared to receive further representations on the re-structuring of the fire services in Wales. [39579]

Mr. Kirkhope: The consultation period has ended and drafts of the orders containing the schemes which will establish the three combined fire authorities in Wales were laid in Parliament on 24 October. This stage could not have been postponed without putting the timetable for reorganisation at risk. For the future, if representations are made we shall consider them.

Camden Hopscotch Asian Women's Group

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all grants given, and any future grants planned, by his Department to the Camden Hopscotch Asian women's group, indicating the amount and dates. [38131]

Mr. Kirkhope: From April 1992 to March 1995, the Home Office supported a project entitled training and employment opportunities for Bangladeshi women, which was run by the Hopscotch Asian women's centre. Payments of some £19,000, £32,000 and £38,000 in the three financial years were made under the ethnic minority grant to the Central London training and enterprise council, which acted on behalf of the Home Office in relation to the project.

The Home Office has agreed to pay grant to Kingsway college, under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, in respect of a project to be run by the college for two years in association with the Hopscotch Asian women's centre. The maximum potential grant cost is £25,000 in 1995–96, and £50,000 in 1996–97.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Meeting Heads of Agencies

Mr. Gordan Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many times in each month of the current year she has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to her to discuss the work of those agencies. [39860]

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has met the chief executive of the Royal Parks Agency once, in September. No such formal meetings have been held with the chief executive of the Historic Royal Palaces Agency although one is planned for November.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which she is responsible. [39466]

Mr. Sproat: I have responsibility for two executive agencies: the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and the Royal Parks Agency. The information in respect of both agencies is as follows:

Historic Royal Palaces Agency

Grade	(a) Number 1994–95	(b) Number 1995–96[1]

Notes:

[1] Estimate.

1. Information on the cost of staff by grade is not held.

2. In 1994–95, the payroll cost of the staff listed above was £10,400,000 (as recorded HRPA Annual Report).

3. In 1995–96, the estimated payroll cost for the staff listed above is £9,047,000 (as recorded in HRPA Sixth Corporate Plan).

ENVIRONMENT

Fair Rents

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of tenants with registered fair rents at the end of each of the past five years. [40687]

Mr. Clappison: The estimates available for tenants in England are as follows:

	Private rented	Housing Association
1990	[1]320,000	—
1992	—	[4]405,000
1993	[2]220,000	[4]385,000
1994	[3]170,000	[4]330,000

[1] Summer 1990.

[2] Average for financial year 1993–94.

[3] Average for financial year 1994–95.

[4] At 31 March.

The estimates for private renters are from the 1990 private renters survey and, from 1993–94, the survey of English housing. Like all estimates from sample surveys, they are subject to sampling error. The estimates for Housing Association tenants are based on returns to the Housing Corporation.

Living-over-the-shop Grant, Newcastle

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the applications for living-over-the-shop grant support was received for Clayton street and High Bridge, Newcastle upon Tyne; how many dwellings units are proposed for these projects; and when he expects to make a decision on them. [40495]

Mr. Clappison: An SRB challenge fund plan to regenerate the Grainger Town area of Newcastle upon Tyne was received in the Government office for the nort-east on 27 October 1995. This plan includes a living-over-the-shop programme to bring city centre disused upper floors back into the use for residential purposes. A decision will be issued by the Government Office for the north-east as soon as possible. Approval of individual projects within the programme is subject to delegated arrangements which do not normally involve Ministers.

Ramsar Convention

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list candidate wetlands of international importance in the United Kingdom proposed for listing under the Ramsar convention. [40753]

Mr. Clappison: The Government are considering the sites listed which have been proposed for Ramsar listing by the statutory conservation agencies.

Site	County or region	Site	County or region
Avon Valley	Hampshire Dorset	Greenlaw Moor and Hule Moss	Borders
Breydon Water	Norfolk	Westwater	Borders

Somerset Levels	Somerset	North Roe and Tingon	Shetland
Southampton Water and Solent	Hampshire, Isle of Wight	Inner Clyde Estuary	Strathclyde
Thames Estuary and Marshes	Kent	Rhinns of Islay	Strathclyde

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the United Kingdom is designated under the Ramsar convention; and what percentage areas of their territories other EU member status have designated. [40752]

Mr. Clappison: Approximately 1.3 per cent. of the United Kingdom is listed under the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance. Similar information is not readily available for other EU member states.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there is a timetable for the designation of candidate Ramsar wetlands included on the United Kingdom's shadow list. [40754]

Mr. Clappison: Including three sites in dependent territories, the United Kingdom has already listed 95 wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention—far more than any other country in the world. A number of additional proposed sites are under consideration, but there is no firm timetable for future listings.

Planning Permission

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers are available to development corporations in respect of (a) short-cutting or avoiding standard procedures for planning permission and (b) extending their spheres of influence beyond their recognised boundaries. [40709]

Sir Paul Beresford: Urban development corporations are bound by the planning powers which are set out in sections 148 and 149 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. A corporation cannot use these powers outside its designated area.

Charter Trustees

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will establish charter trustees to preserve the office of mayor of Beverley and the civic regalia; and if he will set out their duties and the manner of their appointment. [40595]

Sir Paul Beresford: It is our intention that charter trustees for Beverley will be established on 1 April 1996.

The charter trustees will be the district councillors elected for wards wholly or partly comprised in the area for which charter trustees are established.

As charter trustees, they will be required to hold an annual meeting at which the first business would be to elect one of their number as mayor and another as deputy mayor. They may also exercise powers to appoint local officers of dignity and may acquire and maintain historic or ceremonial property, except land, of the area for which they are established.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the appointment of charter trustees to preserve the office of major of Beverley will allow the post to be held as in the past in the absence of the establishment of a town or parish council; and what powers the major will have. [40596]

Sir Paul Beresford: The charter trustees for Beverley may elect one of their number as town major and another as deputy mayor: it is not necessary for there to be a town or parish council in existence. The mayor presides at the meetings of the charter trustees but has no formal statutory functions. His role is representative or ceremonial.

Local Government Reviews

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention to direct the Local Government Commission to conduct reviews to establish the case for or against new parishes. [40597]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Local Government Commission is devoting its attention to the structure reviews of individual districts which we have directed it to carry out. When these have been completed, its next priority must be the periodic electoral reviews that it has a statutory duty to undertake. Against this background, we expect to direct it to carry out only a few, if any, parishing reviews over the next few months.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Local Government Commission to complete all outstanding local government district and other reviews. [40594]

Sir Paul Beresford: We expect the Local Government Commission to complete the district reviews by 2 January 1996.

Local Authority Crematoriums

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reasons he was unable to lay an order before Parliament relating to the sale of local authority crematoriums prior to the summer adjournment of Parliament. [40568]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment No.2) Regulations 1995 provide for increases in the usable proportion of local authorities' capital receipts from sales of shops and car parks, as well as of crematoriums. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration announced the increases for shops and car parks on 23 March, and stated that they would apply from 1 September, so the regulations needed to come into effect by then. Discussions with local authorities were held before the regulations were laid, so as to ensure that the increases applied in as wide a range of circumstances as possible. The regulations were laid as soon as possible after those discussions.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he will issue in respect of the commercial development of crematoriums sold off by local authorities following the order of 2 August. [40569]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have encouraged authorities in considering any disposals to take into account the need to ensure competitive pricing and continuing quality of service.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the number of people currently regularly sleeping rough in central London; what was the equivalent figure in previous estimates; and if he will make a statement. [41130]

Mr. Clappison: Independent street counts of people sleeping rough are undertaken twice yearly in central London, co-ordinated by Homeless Network, the umbrella organisation for voluntary sector agencies helping street homeless people in the capital. The information requested is:

	Number of people sleeping rough in central London	Percentage sleeping rough for more than one year
May 1995	270	66
November 1994	288	76
May 1994	268	72
November 1993	287	77
June 1993	348	74

It is, however, likely that people sleeping out for a period of time will occasionally make use of hostel, nightshelter or winter shelter accomodation.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the rough sleepers initiative contained in the housing White Paper will be funded from local authority housing budgets. [41051]

Mr. Clappison: Decisions on future public expenditure commitments cannot be made before the Budget statement by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 28 November 1995.

Biodiversity

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his timetable for publishing the Government's biodiversity plan; [40909]

(2) what is his timetable for the biodiversity plan being approved by the relevant Cabinet committee; [40910]

(3) what representations he has received from other Government Departments about the biodiversity plan. [40911]

Mr. Clappison: The United Kingdom was one of the first countries to produce a national biodiversity plan when "Biodiversity: The UK Action Plan"was published in January 1994. The plan contains some 59 board targets including a commitment to develop specific costed targets for key species and habitats for the years 2000 and 2010.

A biodiversity steering group, chaired by my Department, with members drawn from all sectors was established to take forward work under the plan. The steering group, which has consulted all the relevant Government Departments, will submit its advice to the Government in a report to be published in December this year. I expect a Government response to the report to be made by the spring of 1996.

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are currently employed in his Department and in related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work force; and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41125]

Sir Paul Beresford: Breakdowns by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—normally those employed for a period up to 12 months, but, exceptionally, up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis for 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Farm Safety

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the Transport and General Workers Union to discuss farm safety; and if he will make a statement. [38930]

Sir Paul Beresford: Since my Department took over responsibility for health and safety at work I have not met representatives of the Transport and General Workers Union. The Health and Safety Commission and Health and Safety Executive give advice and enforce the law in relation to farm safety. The Transport and General Workers Union is represented on the commission's agriculture industry advisory committee, which last met on 26 October.

County Hall

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the decision by the Shirayama Group to sell or lease county hall, London, to another hotel group; and how much is still owed by Shirayama from the original purchase price of the building. [41185]

Sir Paul Beresford: No. Proposals for the sale or lease of the Riverside building of county hall are a matter for the freehold owners, Shirayama. The terms of the sale, with which Shirayama has to date wholly complied, were that £50 million was to be paid on completion with a deferred payment of £10 million to be paid in the period 1997 to 2012.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are in place to secure the balance of the purchase price of county hall from the by Shirayama Group in the event of the building being sold or leased to a third party. [41184]

Sir Paul Beresford: The deferred payment was secured by a legal charge on the Riverside building granted Shirayama in favour of the London Residuary Body or its successor.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what report has been made by English Heritage on the removal of the war memorial in county hall by the Japanese owners of the building; and if he will make a statement. [41188]

Sir Paul Beresford: None, as far as I know.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has happened to the book of remembrance previously located adjacent to the war memorial on the principal floor of county hall, London. [41183]

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand that the book of remembrance is now located at the headquarters of the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority on Albert embankment.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what applications have been made by the current owners of county hall, or their representatives, to remove or delist artefacts or listed features of the building. [41187]

Sir Paul Beresford: None, as far as I know.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when English Heritage last inspected county hall, London, and submitted a report to his office. [41189]

Sir Paul Beresford: On 19 October. There is no requirement to report to me.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what licences have been applied for by the current owners of county hall, the Shirayama Group, in respect of sea mammals to be housed in the proposed aquarium on the site. [41186]

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand that the owners of county hall intend to open an aquarium on the site. If the proposed aquarium is to be open to the public for more than seven days a year, it would need to be licenced under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. It would be for the London borough of Lambeth to decide whether to issue such a licence. I understand that the council has not so far received an application from the Shirayama Group.

If the owners wished to import for display at the aquarium any species covered by the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild and Fauna and Flora, they would need to apply for an import permit from my Department, and, for some species, an exemption certificate permitting the display of such specimens. We have received no CITES applications from the group.

Particulate Matter

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total and percentage source contributions to United Kingdom PM10 particulate matter from (a) diesel cars, (b) petrol cars, (c) petrol light goods vehicles, (d) heavy goods vehicles, (e) buses, (f) domestic heating, (g) bonfires, (h) power stations and (i) other industry. [41193]

Mr. Clappison: The most recently published UK inventory of emitted PM10 was published in the second report of the quality of urban air review group in December 1993, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Of a total of approximately 250,000 tonnes of PM10 emitted in 1991, diesel cars accounted for 1 per cent., petrol cars 9 per cent., petrol light goods vehicles 1 per cent., heavy goods vehicles 12 per cent., buses 2 per cent., domestic heating 47 per cent., power stations 7 per cent., and other industry 18 per cent. No information is available on the contribution of bonfires. These proportional contributions apply to the whole of the UK and do not reflect the relative contributions in urban areas or in periods of elevated pollution levels.

Volatile Organic Compound Controls

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis small service stations will be excluded from the requirements of stage 1 VOC controls for petrol delivery; and when such controls will be introduced. [41192]

Mr. Clappison: Under the stage 1 of the EC petrol vapour recovery directive, member states are allowed to grant a derogation from the requirements of the directive to those service stations with an annual throughput of 100—500m^3/year—those below this threshold are exempt in any case—which are located in a geographical area or on a site where vapour emissions are unlikely to contribute significantly to environmental or health problems. The implementation date for all other existing service stations of this size is 2004 and as such there is a nine-year delay before the derogation takes affect.

My Department is consulting industry and other interested parties on how this derogation should be applied.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 July, Official Report, column 1421 if he will list the outstanding responsibilities of the London Residuary Body. [41190]

Sir Paul Beresford: The outstanding responsibilities of the London Residuary Body are to distribute to the London boroughs any remaining sums outstanding, and to make arrangements for the transfer of any residue rights and liabilities to successor authorities.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ask the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea to prepare the accounts of the London Residuary Body in 1995–96; and if he has set a date for the order to wind-up the London Residuary Body. [41180]

Sir Paul Beresford: The London Residuary Body has an arrangement with the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea to prepare the residuary body's final report and accounts for 1995–96. As to the winding up of the London Residuary Body, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 19 July 1995, Official Report column 1421.

Archway Tower

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report column 334, regarding the future of Archway tower, what discussions his Department has had with estate agents regarding the disposal of the lease; and if he will make a statement. [41070]

Sir Paul Beresford: Letting agents appointed by Property Holdings continue to pursue a number of avenues for disposal and are in discussion with the landlords.

Pollution (Central London)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the results of research undertaken by Warren Spring Laboratory in 1993 into personal exposure to pollution in central London. [41191]

Mr. Clappison: The results of the research were published in Warren Spring Laboratory report IR 353(AP) in November 1992 and LR 982(AP) in April 1993. Copies are being placed in the Library.

Mesothelioma and Asbestosis

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, how the number of cases of mesothelioma and asbestosis reported in the London borough of Hillingdon exceeds the average figure for England as a whole during the past 25 years; and if he will publish the number of such cases reported for (a) Hillingdon and (b) England as a percentage of the population. [41074]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive maintains registers of deaths in Great Britain for which mesothelioma or asbestosis are mentioned on the death certificate. Mesothelioma and asbestosis crude death rates per million population for males and females are given for the London borough of Hillingdon and for England as a whole in the tables.

Mesothelioma

Year of death	Crude death rate per million population Hillingdon	England
Males
1976–79	15	11
1980–83	11	15
1984–87	33	22
1988–91	43	29
Females
1976–83	3.2	3.0
1984–91	4.2	4.0

Asbestosis

Crude rate per million population Year of death	Hillingdon	England
Males
1978–91	16	7.7
Females
1978–91	0.60	0.75

The mesothelioma register records a geographical code for area of usual residence at death from 1976 onwards, and the absestos register from 1978 onwards. The latest year for which complete data is available in 1991.

WALES

Measles-Rubella Immunisation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations led to the decision not to include details of each of the known side effects of immunisation in the booklet, "Measles—Why every child in school needs to be protected from measles this autumn," which was distributed by the his Department in Wales. [40658]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The content of the measles booklet was underpinned by research to establish what information parents regarded as most important. This research, conducted by the Health Education Authority, showed that parents were unaware of the seriousness of measles. The final leaflet which was approved by the Measles Immunisation Group, an expert committee comprising a wide range of NHS professionals, reflected parents' information priorities about the need for measles and rubella immunisation.

Side effects from measles-rubella vaccine are rare, but the more common ones are covered in the booklet. Doctors were given more detailed information on the full range of possible adverse reactions. Parents were advised to discuss any further concerns with their family doctor.

The measles booklet distributed in Wales was the same as that for the rest of the UK, except that it was bilingual.

Fire Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what extent extra resources are made available to fire authorities with a coastline. [41146]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no indicators specific to fire authorities with a coastline in the capital and revenue distribution formulae for 1995–96 and the proposed formulae for 1996–97.

Motorway Surfacing

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of motorway there are in Wales, what percentage of them are surfaced by the new low-noise, no-spray tarmac and what plans he has for (a) all motorways (b) dual carriageways and (c) A roads to be so resurfaced. [41145]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 78 miles of motorway in Wales, of which 7 per cent. is currently surfaced with the new porous material. Further lengths will be resurfaced where the cost can be justified.

The dual carriageway section of the A4042 Llantarnam bypass currently being constructed will also have the new surface. There are no further plans to use such a treatment elsewhere on trunk roads.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans there are to improve access to dialysis treatment for renal patients in mid-Wales; and if he will make a statement. [40919]

Mr. Hague: Though Wales has one of the highest access rates in Europe for renal dialysis, health authorities and NHS trusts will continue to assess the case for extra provision against need.

In the case of Mid Wales, I understand that there is a possibility of introducing dialysis facilities at Bronglais general hospital, Aberystwyth along the lines of those currently being provided at West Wales general hospital, Carmarthen. There are also proposals to enhance the existing facilities at Shrewsbury.

Environmental Industries

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to promote the growth of the environmental industries sector in Wales. [40962]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Continual efforts are made to highlight opportunities in all industrial sectors through a programme of company visits and awareness raising seminars. A major business and environment campaign is planned which will, among other things, demonstrate business opportunities in the sector.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the extent of the environmental industries sector in Wales; and if he will list the names of the companies involved. [40963]

Mr. Jones: This information is not readily available.

Charter Trains

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact of increases in track access charges on special trains in and to Wales. [41466]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Charter train operators have had to face cost increases. In the past, British Rail provided these services on a marginal cost basis which in effect meant cross-subsidisation with taxpayers' money. Under the new arrangements, charges by Railtrack to charter train operators reflect the full cost of services provided.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Historic Buildings Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who are the current members of the Historic Buildings Council; what is their defined role and responsibility; who appoints each of them; and how often they meet. [39922]

Mr. Moss: The current members of the Historic Buildings Council are:

Mrs. P. Wilson (Chairman)
Mrs. D. Corcoran
Dr. M. Gould
Mr. S. C. McGuckian
Ms J. Pyne
Mr. D. Stelfox
Mr. T. Brown
Mr. C. Corry
Dr. P. Mowat
Mrs. F. Jay-O'Boyle
Mrs. J. Smyth
Mr. J. D. Thompson

The functions of the council are as follows:

(a) to give advice on the listing of buildings of special architectural or historic interest, or amendment of lists so compiled;

(b) to give advice on the designating of conservation areas of special architectural or historic interest, the character or appearances of which it is desirable to preserve or enhance;

(c) to keep under review, and from time to time report to the Department on the general state of preservation of listed buildings;

(d) to advise the Department on such matters relating to the preservation of buildings of special architectural or historic interest as the Department may refer to it;

(e) to advise on applications for the exemption of listed buildings from capital transfer tax;

(f) to advise on the issue of certificates stating that buildings are not intended to be listed;

(g) such other functions as are conferred on it by any statutory provision.

All members of the Historic Buildings Council are appointed by the head of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

The Historic Buildings Council usually meets on a monthly basis.

Private Patients

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 18 July 1995, Official Report, columns 1119-20, if he will now confirm and update the figures on private patient income. [39952]

Mr. Moss: The table shows income from private patients for each health and social services board for 1994–95. This information has been extracted from the 1994–95 accounts of the health and social services boards. These accounts are as yet unaudited and therefore the figures supplied may be subject to change.

In my previous reply, I provided unaudited figures for trusts for 1994–95. The trusts accounts have now been audited and I can now confirm these figures.

Private patient income for each health and social services board—1994–95

Health and social services board	Total private patient income 1994–95
Northern Board	314,791
Southern Board	23,343
Eastern Board	0
Western Board	179,037
Total — Northern Ireland	517,171

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, by trust in each region, details of income from private patients for 1993–94 and 1994–95 (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of total trust income. [39951]

Mr. Moss: The information requested for health and social services trusts for 1993–94 and 1994–95 years is outlined in tables 1 and 2. For the years in questions there were no trusts in either the Northern or the Western health and social services board areas.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of the those agencies. [39857]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: In January, I had one meeting with the head of the Northern Ireland Prison Service. I met him again, once in February, twice in June and once in October.

I met the chief executive of the Public Records Office of Northern Ireland in April 1995.

Ballywalter Primary School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to make secure the grounds of Ballywalter primary school. [39927]

Mr. Ancram: The South-Eastern education and library board has no plans to make additional security provision at Ballywalter primary school.

Listed Buildings

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what method of appeal is available to property owners who dispute a historic building preservation order; and if the appeals body is independent of the Department of the Environment. [39920]

Mr. Moss: There is no legislative provision giving a right of appeal against the decision of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland to list a building as being of special architectural or historic interest. However, any person may make representations to the Department that a building should cease to be listed on the grounds that it is not of special architectural or historic interest, and such representations are carefully considered. Where an application for listed building consent to carry out alterations is refused, the applicant may appeal that decision to the Planning Appeals Commission, which is independent of the Department.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Historic Buildings Council has produced a register of the buildings currently listed with it for circulation to the public. [39921]

Mr. Moss: The Historic Buildings Council does not have a register of listed buildings. The official lists are prepared and held by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. A copy of the relevant lists is sent to divisional planning offices and district councils, where they may be inspected by the public. A full list is also available for inspection in the monuments and buildings record at the public office of the Environment Service of the Department at 5/35 Hill street, Belfast.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many properties have received historic buildings preservation orders since 1974 in (a) Belfast; and (b) Northern Ireland excluding Belfast; how many are grade A, and how many are grade B; what criteria are used to determine which grade; what criteria are used to reach decisions as to whether to list; and what process is undergone in determining the listing of buildings. [39919]

Mr. Moss: Since 1974 some 1,018 buildings in the Belfast area have been listed of which 35 are category A and 983 are category B. The number of buildings listed since 1974 elsewhere in Northern Ireland is 7,057 of which 157 are category A and 6,900 are category B.

The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is responsible for listing buildings of special architectural or historic interest; the criteria for listing include the building's age, condition, style, aesthetic quality, structural system, any innovatory architectural qualities, and its historic importance.

The listing process includes a physical survey of the building, the application of the listing criteria and consultations with the local district council and the Historic Buildings Council.

Ardmillan Bay (Pollution)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to clear up the environmental pollution at Ardmillan bay in Killinchy, County Down, and if he will make a statement. [39926]

Mr. Moss: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has been investigating water quality in Ardmillan Bay, Killinchy and recently wrote to a developer who is responsible for a private sewage treatment plant discharging into the bay. Subsequently, the Department's environment service took a statutory sample of the effluent emanating from this treatment plant and enforcement action will be considered, as appropriate.

The environment service will continue to monitor the situation. The Department's water executive would be prepared to adopt this sewage treatment works and sewers if the developer brings these up to the required standard.

Grant-giving Funds

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38605]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage on 30 October 1995, Official Report, columns 48–49.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40859]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 1 November 1995]: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary fell within the band:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
Northern Ireland office and NI departments	4,669—9,826	4,669—10,279
Agency	4,669—9,826	4,669—10,279
Non-departmental public body	4,669—8,878	4,669—8,878 (currently under review)

The highest full-time salary fell within the band:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
Northern Ireland Office and NI Departments	95,000–99,999	95,000–99,999
Agency	52,704–62,817	55,000–82,500
Non-departmental public body	95,001–100,000	95,001–100,000

Domestic Electricity Supply

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many households are estimated to be without a mains electricity supply. [41204]

Mr. Ancram: Figures from the 1994–95 continuous household survey suggest that 0.3 per cent. of households in Northern Ireland are not connected to an electricity supply. The 1991 census recorded a total of 530,000 households in Northern Ireland.

School Transport

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to have discussions with the education and library boards concerning open enrolment and related school transport policy. [40263]

Mr. Ancram: I have no plans for discussions with the education and library boards about open enrolment policy. However, my Department is currently engaged in consultations with board officials about the home-to-school transport arrangements.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40517]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information required to answer the question fully is not held centrally. Since 1992, the Department and its agencies have conducted periodic surveys of performance against the Government's target of 30 days for the payment of invoices. Four surveys have been carried out, covering all invoices paid during specific periods. Those surveys show the percentage of invoices paid within 30 days as follows:

1991–92: 82.5 per cent.

1992–93: 83.4 per cent.

1993–94: 89.4 per cent.

1994–95: 93.9 per cent.

The target for this financial year is 95 per cent. A new survey is under way, but the results are not yet available.

Information relating specifically to small businesses and for earlier years is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Lord Chancellor is now responsible for four agencies: the Court Service, Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. Information relating to the Court Service is included above, as it became an agency only after the period covered by the information available; and information relating to the Public Trust Office is included up to the time it acquired agency status in July 1994. In respect of the Land Registry, the Public Record Office, and the Public Trust Office from July 1994, the question concerns operational matters on which the chief executives are best placed to provide answers. I have accordingly asked them to reply direct.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 26 October 1995, regarding the number of invoices from small businesses which were not paid within 30 days of receipt over the last five years.

The Public Trust Office became an Executive Agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department on 1 July 1994, prior to which the departmental Headquarters maintained these records on our behalf. We have maintained our own records since becoming an Agency and one month sample of invoices are checked each year to establish how many were paid on time. For the monthly sample for 1994 of 129 invoices 109 (ie. 85%) were paid within terms. Whilst this figure excludes HMSO invoices it does not specifically refer to small businesses, to do so would be at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply, in respect of the Public Record Office, to your question about the prompt payment of invoices due to small businesses.

The Public Record Office has not systematically recorded its performance in paying invoices nor which of its suppliers are small businesses, over the last five years. The answer to your question could therefore be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

In eight months of 1994–95, it monitored its performance in paying invoices and found that 98% were paid within 30 days.

Other occasional monitoring exercises over the last five years have produced similar results.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 1 November 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question on the number of instances in which the Land Registry has failed to pay invoices to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last 5 years.

Records of the size of the supplier are not maintained and therefore I am able only to supply details of all late payments to both large and small businesses. These relate to credit periods up to and including 30 days. In the years 1993/94 and 1994/95 sampling indicated that the annual numbers of such payments were as follows:

1993/94: 2019 (8 per cent.)

1994/95: 2954 (10 per cent.)

In the majority of these cases, payment was delayed whilst verification was sought relating to queries on the invoices. Payment was effected once such queries were satisfied.

Details for the previous three years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Family Homes and Domestic Violence Bill

Mr. Coe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department how he proposes to proceed with the Family Homes and Domestic Violence Bill. [41753]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Family Homes and Domestic Violence Bill was timetabled to complete its stages in the House of Commons on the basis that it was uncontentious. This has proved not to be so. Contentious points have arisen during the last stages of this parliamentary Session. My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor has listened to the concerns expressed about the Bill, and he is considering them. The timetable is such, however, that it is now impossible to make further progress this session. My right hon. and noble Friend will continue to work on the Bill with a view to bringing it back before Parliament as soon as possible.

Information Technology Systems (Confidentiality)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps have been taken to secure the confidentiality of information technology systems, and accountability to the judiciary, in the course of the implementation of the Government's private finance initiative in the (a) county court system and (b) Crown court system. [39909]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 2 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the confidentiality and accountability of information technology systems introduced within the Government's Private Finance Initiative.

Any contractor will have to ensure that information systems serving the county courts and the Crown Court provide confidentiality and support to all who use the systems. They will be operated within the framework provided by the appropriate Rules of Court and other legislation.

Local Office County Court System

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what administrative processes and support functions are included in the statement of service requirements of the local office county court system. [39911]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M.D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about what administrative and support functions are included in the LOCCS Statement of Service Requirements.

The Statement of Service Requirement for the Local Office County Court System procurement project requires bidders to submit proposals for:

provision of the CaseMan service;

provision of the County Court central information systems service; provision of the County Court Information Systems Development Service.

Bidders may, if they choose, offer to provide other information systems services and other related support services to the Court Service and Lord Chancellor's Department, subject to the restrictions contained in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the companies shortlisted for the bidding process for the local office county court system project. [39910]

Mr. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M.D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 1 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the companies shortlisted for the LOCCS project.

The following have been shortlisted for the Local County Court System (LOCCS) Procurement Project:

Electronic Data Systems Limited;

SEMA Group plc;

Siemens Business Services Limited;

Unisys Limited.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which companies have been shortlisted for the bidding process for the local office county court system; and what are the criteria for the involvement of the private sector in this process. [39913]

Mr. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 2 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the companies shortlisted for the bidding process for the local office county court system and the criteria for private sector involvement in this.

The Requirements of the Local County Court System (LOCCS) Procurement Project were advertised in the Official Journal of the European Community. The following have been shortlisted:

Electronic Data Systems Limited;

SEMA Group plc;

Siemens Business Services Limited;

Unisys Limited.

Since the cost of meeting the requirements will exceed the Department's financial delegation the Government requires the Department to test the availability of private finance under the Private Finance Initiative. The fundamental principles of the Private Finance Initiative are that:

the private sector contractor must assume genuine risk, and;

value for money must be demonstrated for any expenditure by the public sector.

Contracting Out (Court Service)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department at what stage in the process of the contracting out of services relating to the Court Service it is required under schedule 16 to the Deregulation and Contracting Oct Act 1995 that the senior judiciary be consulted; on what occasions such consultations have taken place; and in respect of which services. [39912]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 2 November 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the judicial consultation required under the above Act when contracting out services.

The Lord Chancellor is required to consult the senior judges before making an order under the provisions of Schedule 16 to the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1995. No such consultations have yet taken place.

European Court Decisions

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the answer of the Attorney-General of 30 October, column 12, relating to decisions of the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights, if he will list those European Court decisions relating to responsibilities of his Department over the past two years; and what was the estimated annual cost to public funds of each decision. [41219]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not readily available. The question will be answered in detail by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

DEFENCE

Executive Agencies

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Defence Agency status for the Army's personnel, pay and pensions administration. [41642]

Mr. Soames: As originally announced to the House by the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 2 November 1993, Official Report, column 124, the Army's pay and personnel administration functions are to be considered for defence agency status. A prior options study is therefore being undertaken to determine whether agency status would be appropriate. If agency status is agreed, then the organisations that will be considered for inclusion within the prospective agency are the Army personnel centre, which now includes administration of Army pensions as well as pay and personnel, and which will be fully formed in Glasgow by mid-1997, and a substantial part of the Adjutant General's information centre, Worthy Down, Winchester.

Phosphorous Canisters, Kintyre

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the wounding of Gordon Baillie of Kintyre by a phosphorous canister on 20 October. [40792]

Mr. Soames: We have been investigating the source and origin of the phosphorous devices which have been washed ashore recently. They are very old and decayed and have proved difficult to identify. Defence experts now believe that they probably formed part of the filling for second world war incendiary devices. There is no record of such devices being dumped but investigations are continuing.

Gordon Baillie received burns to his right hand and arm on 20 October after handling one of these devices which had been washed ashore near his home. A Royal Navy explosive ordnance disposal team attended the scene within 20 minutes of the incident having being reported and dealt with the remains of the device. The local authorities in the area have issued extensive material warning the public of the dangers, and the Royal Navy teams and other emergency services involved in the operation to dispose of these items are making every effort to eradicate the risk of such an incident occurring again.

Disbanded Regiments (Funds)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State foi Defence how regimental funds of disbanded regiments are disbursed; and what regard is paid to outstanding liabilities before funds are so disbursed. [40392]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is set out in chapter 15 of the service funds Army regulations, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Outstanding liabilities should be identified and settled before its residual funds may be disbursed.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38597]

Mr. Soames: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for National Heritage on 31 October 1995, Official Report, column 186.

Gurkhas

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many members of the Gurkha troops are in the ranks of the Parachute Regiment; [41097]

(2) what percentage of the ranks of the Parachute Regiment are occupied by Gurkha troops. [41098]

Mr. Soames: There are no Gurkha troops currently serving in the Parachute Regiment.

Armed Forces Medical Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of medical services for the armed forces. [40428]

Mr. Soames: Changes to the defence medical services, which were announced last year as part of "Front Line First", will be largely complete by April 1996. The resulting organisation will be able to meet the future requirement for efficient and effective medical support for the armed forces.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of (a) surgeons and (b) anaesthetists currently employed by the armed forces; what is the most current assessment of need for the Defence Medical Services for (a) and (b); and if he will make a statement. [40434]

Mr. Soames: There are currently 117 surgeons and 64 anaesthetists serving in the regular armed forces. The requirement for surgeons and anaesthetists from 1 April 1996 will be 116 and 95, respectively. The shortfall in anaesthetists is being addressed.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Cambridge military hospital and its present contribution to health services for the armed forces. [40432]

Mr. Soames: Closure of the hospital will take place by April 1996 as previously announced. Its health care services in support of the armed forces are being transferred progressively to the Royal hospital, Haslar, the Duchess of Kent military hospital, Catterick, and the Ministry of Defence hospital units, including that at the Frimley Park hospital, which are being established under the reorganisation of the defence medical services.

Bases (US Use)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the change of control to the US Army intelligence and security command at Menwith Hill station falls within the remit of the terms of the War Office/US air force agreement of 11 December 1951. [40874]

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to comment on the confidential arrangements between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States of America concerning the use of Menwith Hill station by United States forces. While Her Majesty's Government retain legal possession of the Menwith Hill site and control over the use that is made of its facilities, it is for the United States Department of Defense to decide the personnel assignment arrangements required to meet the operational objectives of the station.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there is any intention to use American security police in conjunction with the Ministry of Defence police at Menwith Hill station to secure this base. [40875]

Mr. Soames: No.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State [illegible] Defence on what legal basis the National Security Agency of America is operating and controlling the Menwith Hill station base. [40876]

Mr. Soames: Her Majesty's Government has made the site available for the use of forces of the United States of America by arrangements which are appropriate to the comity which exists between the two allied powers for their mutual defence and defence of their allies.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the National Security Agency of America operates at RAF Mildenhall, RAF Lakenheath, RAF Feltwell and RAF Molesworth. [40877]

Mr. Soames: Her Majesty's Government have made these sites available for the use of forces of the United States of America. It is not our policy to comment in further detail on operational matters.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the commanding officers or heads of establishment at RAF Lakenheath; RAF Mildenhall, and RAF Molesworth. [40879]

Mr. Soames: Her Majesty's Government have made these sites available for the use of United States forces. the names of the United States commanding officers at these bases are as follows:

RAF Lakenheath: Colonel D.F. MacGhee, United States air force

RAF Mildenhall: Colonel J.W. Morehouse, United States air force

RAF Molesworth: Lieutenant Colonel G.B. Evans, United States air force.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of the administrative arrangements between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States of America for the base at Menwith Hill station. [40880]

Mr. Soames: The site at Menwith Hill has been made available to the United States visiting forces and their civilian component in accordance with the agreement regarding the status of forces of parties to the North Atlantic treaty of 1951 and other arrangements which are appropriate to the relationship which exists between the United Kingdom and the United States for the purposes of our common defence.

Civil Trespass

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what powers the Ministry of Defence police have in respect of civil trespass. [40878]

Mr. Soames: Ministry of Defence police have the same powers of arrest as the Home Department police force in respect of trespass. They also have powers under military lands byelaws.

Royal Welch Fusiliers, Bosnia

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions took place between British commanders, his Department, the United Nations and UNPROFOR before the deployment of troops from the Royal Welch Fusiliers in Gorazde on the task set for the Royal Welch Fusiliers operation there; [41201]

(2) what discussions took place between British commanders, the United Nations and UNPROFOR about changing the mandate of the Royal Welch Fusiliers in Gorazde during the operation; [41200]

(3) what mandate the Royal Welch Fusiliers were operating under when they arrived in Gorazde; and what changes were made, to that mandate during their deployment. [41198]

Mr. Soames: The Royal Welch Fusiliers, deployed to Bosnia as part of the British contribution towards UNPROFOR, were operating under the UN's humanitarian and peacekeeping mandate for the duration of their tour. Discussions took place both prior to and during their deployment on a range of subjects including the unit's tasks. Restrictions were subsequently placed on some operations in order to reduce the risk to the troops concerned.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what equipment and armour the troops of the Royal Welch Fusiliers took into Goradze at the beginning of their operation; what additions were made; and for what reasons. [41199]

Mr. Soames: On deployment to Gorazde the Royal Welch Fusiliers were equipped with Saxon armoured personnel carriers, anti-tank weapons, 51mm mortars, general purpose machine guns and standard infantry small arms. This equipment was subsequently supplemented with heavy machine guns and smoke grenades to enhance the level of protection afforded to British troops.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what request was made by (a) his Department or (b) commanders of the Royal Welch Fusiliers for reinforcements or additional armaments during the Royal Welch Fusiliers operation in Goradze; and what was the response. [41197]

Mr. Soames: There were no requests for reinforcements. Additional armaments requested and supplied were heavy machine guns and smoke grenades.

Telephone Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if (a) the Army and (b) the Navy are permitted by his Department to monitor public cellphone networks; and if he will make a statement. [40970]

Mr. Soames: The services are permitted to conduct telephone monitoring where it is designed to ensure that security regulations are being observed by military users. These activities are governed by the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

European Armaments Agency

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the conclusions of the meeting of 20 October of the Western European Armaments Group concerning the development of a European Armaments Agency. [40969]

Mr. Arbuthnot: At their meeting of 20 October, the national armaments directors of the Western European Armaments Group noted the considerable progress made towards developing the structure under which a possible European Armaments Agency could be established.

TREASURY

Private Medical Insurance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the total tax relief paid to those in receipt of private medical insurance in each year since the introduction of the scheme; how much has it cost to administer the scheme in each year; and how many people have claimed relief; [37231]

(2) what is the estimated annual cost to the Exchequer of the provision of private medical insurance as a perk to employed persons due to the tax exemption for those earning less than £8,500. [37233]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 October 1995]: Information on the total tax relief and number of people claiming the relief for private medical insurance premiums in each year since the start of the scheme, is given in the table.

Tax relief on private medical insurance contracts for individuals aged 60 or over

Year	Approximate number of contracts	Approximate number of individuals covered	Cost of tax relief (£ million)
1990–91	350,000	500,000	40
1991–92	350,000	500,000	60
1992–93	350,000	500,000	70
1993–94	375,000	550,000	80
1994–95	375,000	550,000	95
1995–96[1]	375,000	550,000	110

[1] Provisional.

Changes in the scheme announced in the Finance Act 1994 included restricting the tax relief to the basic rate. This has meant that the total cost of the relief in 1994–95 and 1995–96 is lower than it would otherwise have been. Administrative costs were estimated to have been about £150,000 a year up to 1994–95 but, again as a result of the Finance Act, costs have now fallen to an estimated £50,000 in 1995–96. Information on the annual Exchequer cost of providing this relief to employees with earned income including benefits, of less than £8,500 a year is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings there have been since 1 September 1993 between the Chancellor or another Minister in the Treasury and representatives of private health insurance companies; and what was the subject matter of each meeting. [37232]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 19 October 1995]: Treasury Ministers have meetings with representatives of a broad range of commercial organisations from many sectors, including the private health insurance industry. Since 1 September 1993, a number of meetings with representatives from the private health insurance industry have taken place, covering a wide variety of issues.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates have been made of the cost of extending private medical insurance tax relief to those policies specifically designed to cover long-term care needs. [39382]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 October 1995]: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on tax matters at this stage of the Budget cycle.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent meeting with the Paymaster General and hon. Members concerning duty on tobacco products. [39287]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 26 October 1995]: I recently saw the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Members for Wrexham (Dr. Marek), Easington (Mr. Cummings), Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) and Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) and heard their representations concerning duty on tobacco products.

Oil Taxation Office

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are employed with the Inland Revenue's oil taxation office in Scotland (a) full time and (b) part time. [39663]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 October 1995]: The Inland Revenue oil taxation office is located in London. It employs 41 full-time and two part-time staff, and deals with the corporation tax and petroleum revenue tax affairs of UK oil and gas producers and associated concerns. A number of Inland Revenue offices in Scotland are responsible for other oil-related matters. These include PAYE matters, the liabilities of divers, and the income tax and corporation tax liabilities of oil industry support concerns based in Scotland. The total number of Inland Revenue employees in Scottish tax and collection offices is approximately 5,700. No information is centrally available on the number of staff in Scotland whose work is related to the oil industry, and obtaining this information would involve disproportionate cost.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor Exchequer how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40504]

Mr. Angela Knight [holding answer 1 November 1995]: The total number of petitions for bankruptcy in 1995 is two. No petitions for bankruptcy were begun in any of the previous five years.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40503]

Mr. Angela Knight [holding answer 1 November 1995]: The Treasury aims to pay all legitimate invoices within 30 days, irrespective of the size of the business concerned. Records of the promptness of payment for the past five years are not maintained, but over the last three years the following percentage of invoices were not paid within 30 days.

1993–94: 14 per cent.
1993–94: 18 per cent.
1995–96: 14 per cent.

Most of these invoices were delayed due to problems associated with the particular suppliers, such as an error in the invoice or failure to deliver the goods or service.

Immoral Earnings

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were (a) prosecuted and (b) convicted for failure to pay income tax and national insurance while living off immoral earnings in each of the last five years. [40579]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: This information is not available.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the impact on the retail prices index of (a) raising insurance premium tax to 5 per cent., (b) giving a £50 rebate to each electricity customer and (c) raising fuel and tobacco duties by (i) 5 per cent. (ii) 3 per cent. in real terms. [40768]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The estimated RPI effects are:

Per cent.

	RPI	RPI Ex MIPs
Raising insurance premium tax:
to 5 per cent.	0.03	0.03
£50 rebate to each electricity customer[1]
Raising fuel duties:
by 5 per cent. real (8.9 per cent. nominal)	0.22	0.23
by 3 per cent. real (6.9 per cent. nominal)	0.17	0.18
Raising tobacco duties:
by 5 per cent. real (8.9 per cent. nominal)	0.24	0.25
by 3 per cent. real (6.9 per cent. nominal)	0.18	0.19

[1] The size and timing of any effect of a rebate to electricity customers depends on how the rebate is effected. Assuming the rebate qualified as a price reduction for RPI purposes and that the full rebate was made to all households in the same quarter, then the effect of a £50 rebate to all domestic electricity consumers in the United Kingdom would be to reduce the all items RPI by between 1 and 1½ per cent. by the end of the quarter. A one-off rebate would have a temporary effect only; if there were no other changes the index would return to its previous level by the end of the following quarter.

Housing Investment Trusts

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he proposes to make an announcement on the detail of the tax provisions for housing investment trusts; [40765]

(2) if he will estimate the revenue cost in a full year of allowing financial institutions to invest in privately rented property through the housing investment trusts proposed in the paper, "Our Future Homes", assuming that the trusts pay no capital gains tax for gains within the trust and pay corporation tax at the rate of 25 per cent. [40766]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: It would not be appropriate for me to comment on tax matters at this stage of the Budget cycle.

Tax Simplification

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made by the Inland Revenue on the report on tax simplification in accordance with clause 160 of the Finance Act 1995; and what is the estimated date of publication of this report. [40733]

Mr. Jack: The Inland Revenue is preparing its report on tax simplification and this will be presented to Parliament and published before the Christmas recess.

Employment Statistics

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were employed by businesses employing (a) 0–9 employees, (b) 10–99 employees and (c) 100–499 employees in each year since 1979; and if he will break these figures down by (i) region, (ii) ethnicity and (iii) gender. [40965]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Information on the number of people employed in workplaces with one to 10, 11 to 49 and 50 or more employees is available from the labour force survey for Great Britain, annually between 1984 and 1991 and quarterly from spring 1992 onwards. It can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Tax Bands

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in a full year of introducing a new 30 per cent. tax band on £3,000 of income above the basic rate band; and what would be the yield from introducing a 60 per cent. upper rate at a 40 per cent. rate limit of (a) £50,000, (b) £70,000 and (c) £100,000. [39105]

Mr. Jack: The full-year cost of introducing the 30 per cent. band at 1996–97 levels would be about £590 million compared with an indexed tax regime.

The table gives the yield from introducing a new top rate of tax of 60 per cent. for taxable income above £50,000, £70,000 and £100,000. These estimates do not allow for any behavioural changes that might result from the introduction of the new tax rate.

Lower limit of taxable income for 60 per cent. rate £	Full year revenue yield at 1996–97 levels[1] (£ billion)
50,000	4.3
70,000	3.1
100,000	2.2

[1] The figures include consequential effects on the yield of capital gains tax.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are liable for income tax at the higher level; how many people would be taken out of higher rate tax if the basic rate limit was raised by (a) £500, (b) £1,000, (c) £1,500, (d) £2,000, (e) £2,500, (f) £3,000, (g) £3,500, (h) £4,500 (i) £5,000; and how much of the revenue cost of such a measure would be in 1996–97 and 1997–98 after indexation. [39097]

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that there will be 2.2 million higher rate taxpayers in 1995–96. Providing all of the details sought would involve disproportionate cost. The table gives available estimates for 1996–97 showing the variation in the revenue costs and the numbers of people affected over the range of specified increases in the basic rate limit.

Increasing the basic rate limit by[1] £	Full year revenue cost at 1996–97 levels[2] £ million	Number of people taken out of higher rate thousands
500	170	100
2,500	770	450
5,000	1,400	760

[1] Compared to an indexed 1995–96 regime.

[2] The estimates include consequential effects on capital gains tax. They do not take into account any behavioural changes which might result from the introduction of the new regime.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers are in receipt of profit-related pay; and how many of them are higher rate taxpayers. [39109]

Mr. Jack: There are around 2.5 million participating employees in about 10,000 live registered profit-related pay schemes. Reliable information on the distribution of earnings and the numbers of participants at each marginal tax rate is not available.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost in a full year of raising the threshold for inheritance tax by (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £30,000, (d) £40,000, (e) £60,000, (f) £80,000 and (g) £100,000, specifying in each case the number of people who would be taken out of tax by the measure. [39096]

Mr. Jack: The estimated full-year costs of increasing the indexed threshold for inheritance tax by the specified amounts, and the associated reductions in taxpaying estates, are given in the table:

Raise IHT by threshold	1996–97 full year cost £ million	Number of estates taken out of tax
£10,000	80	2,500
£20,000	150	4,000
£30,000	220	6,000
£40,000	280	7,500
£60,000	390	9,000
£80,000	480	11,000
£100,000	560	12,000

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) of 11 February 1992, Official Report, column 430, on income tax liability as percentage of gross income. [39106]

Mr. Jack: Available estimates for 1995–96 based on a projection of the 1993–94 survey of personal incomes are as follows:

Income tax liability as a percentage of gross income[1]	Estimated number of taxpayers (thousands) Gross income over £100,000	Higher rate taxpayers
Less than 35 per cent.	60	2,190
Less than 30 per cent.	10	1,970
Less than 25 per cent.	—	1,360
Less than 20 per cent.	—	180
Less than 15 per cent.	—	—
Less than 10 per cent.	—	—
Less than 5 per cent.	—	—

Millionaires

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of millionaires in the United Kingdom. [39100]

Mr. Jack: It is not possible to assess precisely the number of living millionaires in the United Kingdom at any one time. The only available estimates are derived from inheritance tax data on a year-of-death basis. Relevant information for 1991–92 is given at the end of table 13.1 on page 128 of Inland Revenue statistics 1995.

Gardening Leave

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the staff of the Treasury were on gardening leave on 1 October and at each previous quarter day from 1 October 1992; and what is (a) the maximum permissible gardening leave that the Treasury allows and (b) the average actually taken. [39333]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Details of the number of Treasury staff on gardening leave—those not working, but excluding those on statutory paid leave, maternity leave or long-term sick leave—by quarter from 1 July 1993 to 1 October 1995 is given in the table. The information for 1 October 1992, 1 January and 1 April 1993 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HM Treasury staff on "gardening leave" by quarter

	Headcount 1993	1994	1995
1 January	—	9	8
1 April	—	13	21
1 July	6	10	19
1 October	6	9	8

The marked increase on 1 April 1995 was a result of the Treasury further expenditure review. Following the Treasury's voluntary redundancy programme, the numbers have returned to the usual levels of less than 1 per cent.

The Treasury does not set limits for the amount of time that staff are on gardening leave but the aim is to keep the amount to a minimum. To that end, we have set in place procedures to allocate project work to staff who are temporarily between postings.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list contracts (a) signed under the private finance initiative over the last six months and (b) which he expects to be signed under the private finance initiative over the next three months, and if he will make a statement. [39344]

Mr. Jack: The two largest individual contracts that have been signed in that period are for the new national insurance recording system and the Midland Metro light rail project. In addition, the contract to supply a new train service on the Northern line was signed some six and a half months ago. In the next three months, contracts are expected to be signed for, among others, the first tranche of design, build, finance, operate roads, two privately financed prisons and two hospital projects.

In addition to this, numerous small PFI deals have been signed at local level primarily in health sectors and information technology.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times in each month of the current year he has met personally the heads of the agencies which report to him to discuss the work of those agencies. [39865]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Four executive agencies—the Royal Mint, the Valuation Office, Paymaster and the Central Statistical Office—are responsible to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. My right hon. and learned Friend is in contact with the heads of these agencies as appropriate. To date this year, he has met personally the head of the Central Statistical Office.

Retired People (Income Tax)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of persons over retirement age who paid income tax in the latest financial year for which figures are available; and how many were liable to pay more than £500 in income tax. [40706]

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that in 1995–96 there will be around 10 million people aged 65 or over, about 3 million of whom will pay income tax. Personal allowances available to people aged 65 or over ensure that only 1.8 million will be liable to pay more than £500 in income tax.

Unemployment (Sheffield)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage unemployment has changed in each of the Sheffield parliamentary constituencies since July 1987. [40979]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested is given in the table:

Unadjusted claimant unemployment

Parliamentary constituency	Percentage change[1] July 1987–September 1995
Sheffield Central	–33.2
Sheffield Attercliffe	–35.2
Sheffield Brightside	–32.9
Sheffield Hallam	–31.8
Sheffield Heeley	–34.8
Sheffield Hillsborough	–30.9
Total Sheffield constituencies	–33.2

[1] The figures are based on unadjusted data and are therefore subject to seasonal influences as well as changes in the coverage of the count.

SCOTLAND

Ministerial Visits

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is the practice of his Department to give prior notice to right hon. and hon. Members when he or a Minister from his Department attends an official engagement or organises an official visit to their constituencies and if he will make a statement. [39156]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Arrangements are in place within my Department to give right hon. and hon. Members notice when I or any other Minister from my Department attends an official engagement or organises an official visit to their constituency.

Prisoners (Immigration Status)

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are in Scottish prisons for reasons related to immigration status. [38830]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Malcolm Chisholm, dated 2 November 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of people held in prison for reasons related to immigration status.

Information on the number of prisoners held in relation to immigration status is collected on a monthly basis. The average number in August 1995 was 27.

New Departmental Accommodation

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of land procurement, planning designing, constructing and fitting out the new Scottish Office building; how many additional jobs have been created, both directly and indirectly; what is his estimate of the additional accommodation costs or savings which will be achieved in each of the next 10 financial years; and if he will make a statement. [39165]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The building at Victoria quay was purchased by Property Holdings for incorporation into the government estate at a total cost of £46.925 million excluding VAT, which includes the site, construction and professional fees. Fitting-out costs of approximately £14.5 million for occupational services works are being met by the Scottish Office.

It is difficult to estimate the effect of the development on jobs. At the peak of construction activity, there was a work force of 600 on site and during fit-out, an average of 140. Fifteen hundred staff and contractors are working in the building and they and visitors to it will provide custom for local businesses.

My Department estimates that running cost savings of about £3 million a year will be achieved from lower opportunity cost rentals than were payable on the buildings given up, economies of scale, the energy efficient design of the building and its flexibility to respond to changing working patterns. There will also be considerable gains to the operational efficiency of the Department due to the co-location of a large number of staff on a single site.

Temazepam

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of deaths in each of the past five years which were related to the abuse of the drug Temazepam; what estimate he has made of the percentage of those which involved the gel formulation; and if he will make a statement. [39195]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of deaths certified as being due to drug misuse for the years 1990 to 1994 is as follows:

1990: 136
1991: 125
1992: 153
1993: 209
1994: 247

With regard to the number of deaths which were related to the abuse of the drug Temazepam, figures where Temazepam was the sole cause of death are not available. However, for the year 1994 the number of deaths where Temazepam was found was 52. Figures for previous years and the percentage of those which involved the gel formulation are not available.

All figures are contained in the report "Collection of Information on Drug Related Deaths by the General Register Office for Scotland", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of people who have had one or more limbs amputated as a result of injecting the gel formulation of the drug Temazepam during each of the past five years. [39183]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Because of the covert nature of the misuse, information on the precise extent of physical injury or damage resulting when Temazepam soft gelatin gel-filled capsules are injected is not held centrally.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39520]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the information requested is lengthy, I shall arrange for copies of the lists to be placed in the House Library.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now publish full constituency data for the new parliamentary constituencies in Scotland. [40207]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. The Parliamentary Constituencies (Scotland) Order 1995 gave effect to the proposals of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Scotland, copies of whose report have been placed in the House of Commons Library. The new constituencies do not come into effect, however, until the next general election. Until then, electoral registration officers have a statutory duty to publish registers according to the present constituencies, but they also make preparations to enable the registers to be adapted for use at the next general election.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of new electrically powered wheelchairs supplied by the national health service in Scotland over the past five years. [40260]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the overall number of powered chairs issued in the last five years is not held centrally. Details of the number of indoor/outdoor powered chairs and indoor powered chairs purchased since the provision of special funding in 1992 are set out.

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Indoor/Outdoor	313	267	286	[1]93
Indoor	497	409	[1]87

[1] For six months 1 April 1995 to 30 September 1995.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will review the current criteria for eligibility for electrically powered wheelchairs to be provided by the national health service; [40259]

(2) if he will relax the criteria to enable more national health service patients to qualify for electrically powered wheelchairs in Scotland in future. [40262]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The criteria to determine eligibility for the provision of electrically powered wheelchairs were established in September 1992 in consultation with the clinicians in the artificial limb and appliance centres. Following a review after practical experience of the arrangements, it was decided that these criteria had been too tightly drawn, and they were revised to embrace a wider range of patients. The revised criteria were agreed by all centres in 1994. In view of this recent revision, there are no plans for a further review at present.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of supplying electrically powered wheelchairs by the national health service in Scotland over the past five years; and what plans he has to provide finance for the next three-year period. [40261]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provision of patient-controlled electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs was announced in February 1992. Initial funding of £2.5 million was earmarked over the following three years to provide around 1,300 electrically powered wheelchairs for use both indoors and outdoors by severely disabled people. The level of funding to be provided in future years is still to be determined.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many category A prisoners are currently in the prison system in Scotland; and how many are in each sub-category. [38841]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 October 1995]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 2 November 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of category A prisoners held in prison; and the numbers in each sub-category.

As at 20 October 1995 there were 20 category A prisoners held in Scotland. Category A is not divided into sub-categories in Scotland.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40748]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cost to the Scottish Office of ministerial transport in each of the last five years is as follows:

1991–92: £234,803

1992–93: £224,163

1993–94: £256,270

1994–95: £292,143

1995–96: £150,723 (6 months)

No payments have been made to Ministers for the use of their own vehicles in the past five years.

Homelessness

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of which local authorities have benefited from the additional £29 million supplementary capital allocation issued in six bidding rounds between 1991 and 1994 to enable authorities to tackle homelessness; and if he will set out the individual initiatives funded through the allocations, indicating for each individual project (a) the local authority through which the allocation is channelled, (b) the target client group, (c) the number of units provided, (d) the physical type of accommodation, (e) whether the project provides temporary or permanent accommodation, (f) the capital cost of each project, (g) whether the project was funded through the housing revenue account or the non-housing revenue account and (h) which of the six bidding rounds the project is funded through. [40641]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Between 1991 and 1993, a total of £22.6 million additional capital allocations were made available to local authorities in response to specific bids made by them. In 1993–94 and 1994–95, further supplementary capital allocations of £4.35 million and £2.62 million respectively were provided to allow authorities to accelerate or enhance the investment plans for the homeless contained in their housing programmes. Information on the distribution of these resources is set out in the table which follows. Detailed information on individual projects in the form requested is not held centrally.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the health services that have been market tested by, or notified to, his Department and won by the private sector indicating (a) the location and (b) the organisation winning the tender. [40619]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The list of contracts won by the private sector following market testing in the NHS in Scotland is set out in the table:

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 1 November 1995]: Since the enactment of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985, there has only been one case of sequestration, in 1992, in which the Secretary of State for Scotland was the petitioning creditor.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individuals in (a) his Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies receive annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeding (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in each year since 1985–86. [40872]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1995]: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies and NDPBs. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme rules which have been deposited in the Library of the House.

No individual in my Department or its agencies has received over £100,000 annual remuneration in the specified period. One employee in a non-departmental public body will receive marginally in excess of £100,000 in the financial year 1995–96.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the (a) lowest (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40873]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1995]: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. On this basis, the information requested is as follows:

	Year	Highest full-time salary £	Lowest full-time salary £
Department	1994–95	95,000–99,999	4,000–4,999
	1995–96	95,000–99,999	4,000–4,999
Agencies	1994–95	55,000–59,999	4,000–4,999
	1995–96	75,000–79,999	4,000–4,999
NDPBs	1994–95	95,000–99,999	—
	1995–96	100,000–104,999	—

The lowest salaries in the table are given to 16-year-olds in the most junior grades. Information on the lowest-paid salary paid in an NDPB could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nurse Call Bell Systems

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines cover the operation of nurse call bell systems in NHS hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [39804]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for individual trusts in Scotland, in the light of local circumstances, to determine their operational arrangements for nurse call systems and to ensure that they are brought to the attention of their staff during training and ward orientation. Technical guidance on call systems is contained in health technical memoranda 2015 "Bed Head Services", a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is in a position to make a statement for a second round of bidding under the Scottish renewables obligation. [41845]

Mr. Kynoch: Following a consultation exercise earlier this year about the first order, the proposed second order would oblige ScottishPower and Hydro-Electric to secure more—about 70 to 80 MW—of their output from renewable sources. The consultation exercise showed broad support for the Government's approach to developing renewable energy.

The first order led to 30 quality renewables projects with a total capacity of 76 MW securing contracts with ScottishPower and Hydro-Electric. I am now minded to make a second order under the Scottish renewables obligation in 1996. I hope that this proposed second order will again attract technically sound and innovative projects which will be even more competitive on price. If so, the second order is likely to be about the same size as the first. I see this as an opportunity for the renewables industry to show that it is responding to the challenges which it faces.

My Department will be issuing further guidance shortly for prospective applicants. The two Scottish public electricity supply companies are currently assembling information and guidelines for parties interested in submitting schemes into SRO2. Applicants are invited to make contact now with the relevant Scottish company ie the one in whose area the development is proposed, to discuss any aspect of the process.

Electricity Supplies

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households in Scotland are estimated to be without a mains electricity supply. [41203]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend does not make such estimates.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electromagnetic Radiation (Power Lines)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research he has been informed of on the relationship between electromagnetic radiation from power lines and cancer; and if he will make a statement. [39809]

Mr. Eggar: The most recent advice received about the alleged link between electromagnetic fields from power lines and cancer is a statement issued in March 1994 by the National Radiological Protection Board, based on a set of Scandinavian studies. These studies did not establish that exposure to EMF was a cause of cancer, although they provided some evidence to suggest that the possibility exists in the case of childhood leukaemia. A five-year study of the incidence of childhood cancers, taking into account a range of possible causes, is being conducted by the UK Co-ordinating Committee on Cancer Research, the results of which are expected in 1997.

Trade Union Right Commissioner

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what overseas visits were carried out by the Commissioner for Rights of Trade Union Members and for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action during 1994–95; and what was the cost, duration and purpose of each visit. [40933]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None.

Renewable Energy

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he is yet able to make a statement on the outline arrangements for the fourth round of bidding for electricity from renewable sources of energy, known as NFFO-4. [41647]

Mr. Page: Following consultation earlier this year with over 50 associations and individual bodies with an interest in non-fossil fuel obligation orders in respect of renewable energy, I can now announce my outline policy proposals.

Government policy is to work towards 1,500 MW DNC—declared net capacity—of new renewables-based generation capacity in the UK by 2000—and I shall continue with this broad aim. From current assessments, my Department expects that a total of 900 MW will commission and generate electricity under the first three renewables NFFO orders in England and Wales, from current Scottish and Northern Ireland—Sottish renewable order and Northern Ireland NFFO—orders, from prospective future SRO and NI-NFFO orders, and from capacity built outside NFFO/SRO arrangements. On this basis, a further 600 MW would be required to deliver the 1,500 MW policy and it is likely that this will be met by future orders for England and Wales. However, the working assumption is that only about two-thirds of projects, and capacity contracted under future NFFO arrangements will proceed to commissioning, with the implication that the level of obligations set in future orders beyond NFFO-3 will need to be about 50 per cent. higher than the capacity likely to be commissioned. I therefore expect that new NFFO orders for England and Wales of about 900 MW will be required to deliver the 600 MW of operational capacity. To the extent that it appears in later years that more or less capacity will commission under earlier NFFO orders or outside NFFO arrangements, I shall take that into account in setting the policy for future NFFO arrangements.

I have considered the representations made to my Department on past and future arrangements, and have taken into account the practical considerations in making a series of further orders. I propose to make a fourth renewables order—NFFO-4—in early 1997 in respect of the 12 regional electricity companies in England and Wales in their capacity as public electricity suppliers, and one further order in 1998. I currently expect each of these orders to be for approximately 400 MW to 500 MW of new capacity, but will review these levels in the light of further estimates of capacity likely to come forward under the third order—NFFO-3—the quality and cost of the proposal received, and the expected degree of convergence towards the market price represented by those proposals, relative to average and marginal prices paid under NFFO-3. This new round of bidding for electricity from renewables, launched today, is expected to stimulate further convergence between electricity prices under NFFO and the market price for electricity—bringing electricity from renewables closer to the point where they can compete in the open market against conventional generation. I expect proposals to be even more competitive than under NFFO-3. I will be taking into account estimates of the percentage of projects in each technology band likely to go forward to commissioning in NFFO-4, but on the basis of past experience would expect the fourth order to lead to construction and operation of a total of 300 MW to 400 MW of new capacity from all technology bands.

In setting out the prospective technology bands, I have taken into account the extent to which available resources have or would be taken up by existing NFFO contracts, the extent of demonstration provided by those contracts, and the Department's priorities attached to demonstrating the use of other renewable energy fuels and technologies.

For the NFFO-4 order, I am considering separate bands for new generating stations, based on

> Wind power: split into two bands, ie large windframs and small-clusters/single-machines, but with the split point at less than the 1.6 MW DNC used for NFFO-3;
> Hydro: from stations with a total capacity of less than 5 MW DNC;
> Landfill gas: from licensed sites where tipping was being carried our prior to 22 July 1993;
>
> Energy crops and/or forestry waste: by gasification-by-partial-combustion or pyrolysis;
> Municipal and industrial waste by fluidised-bed combustion: including the use of non-gaseous sewage-matter (up to 10 per cent. on a dry-weight basis);
>
> Municipal and industrial waste with combined-heat-and-power technology: including the use of non-gaseous sewage-matter (up to 10 per cent. on a dry-weight basis)
> Agricultural and food-processing waste by anaerobic digestion: food-processing waste limited to a maximum of 20 per cent. on a dry-weight basis.

During the parliamentary passage of the Environment Bill, my right hon. Friend the then Minister for the Environment and Countryside stressed that the Government attached great importance to CHP schemes to help carry forward their energy efficiency policies. He explained that that was why the Government were seeking a power to include in a future NFFO/renewables order a technology band defined by reference to heat as well as electricity. The Environment Act, with the new power, became law before the summer recess. The new power enables me to consider a band based on municipal and industrial waste with combined heat and power. This gives generators with suitable schemes, with prospects of supplying substantial quantities of heat, the opportunity to bid into a specific CHP band. If suitable schemes come forward at a competitive price, I should be prepared to use the new power to include such a band.

In order to promote diversity among developers of renewable energy projects, I reserve the right, as in NFFO-3, to limit the number of projects or capacity for which any particular developer can gain contracts in this fourth round of bidding.

As with NFFO-3, my intention is that the NFFO-4 order should run for 15 to 20 years—as from early 1997. This would enable the RECs to offer generators premium payments for up to 15 years, with the difference between the NFFO contract price and the pool price being financed through the fossil fuel levy, paid by licensed electricity suppliers and reflected in electricity bills.

I understand that the regional electricity companies expect to select projects through a competitive tendering process and that contracts will be offered to successful bidders at their bid price.

I am discussing prospective arrangements with the Director General of Electricity Supply and the regional electricity companies, to whom I shall in due course provide further guidance about my proposals in respect of the proposed NFFO—4 order. Confirmation of my outline policy proposals on NFFO—4, and the details of that further guidance to the RECs, will be published shortly in "Renewable Energy Bulletin No 6"—REB—6. I understand that the RECs expect to initiate the competitive tendering process shortly thereafter.

Those project developers who have not already done so should contact:

Renewable Energy Enquiries Bureau, ETSU, Harwell, OX11 ORA

(tel 01235 432450 or 433601, fax 012335 433131 or 432923 to put their name on the mailing list for REB-6. In addition, those project developers who have not already done so should also register their interest in NFFO-4, by letter or fax to:

Non-Fossil Purchasing Agency Ltd
Bamburgh House
Market Street
Newcastle upon Tyne
NE1 6BH
(fax 0191 210 2888 or 0191 210 2887)

Generators with existing NFFO contracts need not register with the NFPA, as they will automatically be sent a copy of the information notes.

The Office of Electricity Regulation has considered what site-specific evidence of the extent of the renewable energy resource it will require from developers when making their technical submissions for NFFO-4. I understand that Offer has decided that:

> developers of wind projects will be required to submit evidence of site wind resource over a minimum period of 12 months, which must include at least 13 weeks continual measurement on site which shall include measurements made over a winter period;
> developers of hydro projects will be required to submit evidence of site hydro capacity based on:
> i) the mean flow data for the water course covering a period of at least 15 years, available from the Institute of Hydrology; or
> i) 15-year rainfall data from a given catchment area, making due allowance for adsorption, run-off and evaporation rates, to calculate the river flow at the off-take point for the generating station; or > iii) on-site data over a period of two years, normalised to the mean average rainfall over a period of at least ten years.
> developers of landfill gas projects will be required to submit evidence of on-site pumping trails over a period of not less than 30 days of continual measurement.

The municipal and industrial waste with combined heat and power—MIW/CHP—band is intended for schemes which are capable of delivering substantial qualities of heat. I understand that, to this end, Offer has decided that developers of MIW/CHP schemes will be required to provide evidence of conditional contracts to supply heat—such contracts to be conditional upon their schemes being awarded NFFO contracts and going forward to commissioning—when making their economic/commercial submissions to Offer. The existence of such contracts will form a part of Offer's will-secure test for CHP schemes.

Developers will wish to ensure that they can meet these resource-determination/heat-contract requirements, when preparing their submissions.

The document "Consultation on the NFFO Process—A Summary Report (1995)", which summarises the 53 written submissions, is available from the Renewable Energy Enquiries Bureau at ETSU, at the above address.

The Government expect to decide the policy for the proposed NFFO-5 order after making the NFFO-4 order, in the light of the circumstances at the time. The NFFO-5 order will not necessarily have the same size or technology bands as the proposed NFFO-4 order.

In line with my Department's policy of stimulating use of electronic communications, this statement is being made available via the Internet on the DTI world wide web "server" at "http://www.dti.gov.uk/nffo".

Covert Operational Procurement Exhibition

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what (a) financial and (b) other assistance is given by Her Majesty's Government to the COPEX arms exhibition. [40095]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 October 1995]: No Her Majesty's Government financial or other assistance was given to the covert operational procurement exhibition which was held between 31 October and 2 November 1995 at Sandown park.

Chemical Weapons Bill

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the outcome of the consultation on the draft Chemical Weapons Bill which was published by his Department on 19 July. [41649]

Mr. Lang: A revised draft taking account of the comments we have received has been published today and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

EU Industrial Regeneration Funds

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for allocation of funds from the EU's Resider II programme to United Kingdom steel regions, following his Department's announcement of the UK's share of the EU industrial regeneration funds; and if he will make a statement. [40834]

Mr. Eggar: The European Commission's proposals of 4 October for the use of the European structural funds community initiatives reserve include an extra 60 mecu for the United Kingdom, and Gibraltar, for Konver, Resider, Rechar and Retex together.

In accordance with articles 11 and 29a of Council regulations 4253/88, as amended by Council regulation 2082/93, the Commission's proposals and draft guidelines for the use of the reserve are to be submitted to the management committee for Community initiatives for an opinion, and for information to the European Parliament; and may then be amended. Only after that will member states be invited by the Commission to send applications for assistance. At that stage, which is unlikely to be reached for some months, the Government will decide how they propose to use whatever definitive allocations to the UK have been decided.

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff are currently employed in his Department and in related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work force, and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41114]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Breakdown by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—that is, normally those engaged for a period of up to 12 months, but exceptionally up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis for 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Lloyds Bank and Trustees Savings Bank Merger

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects a decision to be made on whether to refer the merger of Lloyds bank and the Trustees Savings bank to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he make a statement. [40948]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Director General of Fair Trading is currently considering the proposed merger and will advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in due course. A decision on whether or not it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be taken once that advice is received.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board Of Trade how many small businesses in each sector of the economy there were in each year since 1979. [40966]

Mr. Page: The most recent estimates of the number of small businesses by sector were published in "Small and Medium sized Enterprise (SME) Statistics for the United Kingdom, 1993" which is in the Library of the House. There are no comparable figures for earlier years.

Ethnic Minority Business Initiative

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to replace the ethnic minority business initiative. [40964]

Mr. Page: My Department has no plans to replace the ethnic minority business initiative following the transfer of funding from the Home Office to the single regeneration budget. Financial support for ethnic minority initiatives continues to be available within the single regeneration budget administered by the Department of the Environment via regional Government offices. Business links have been established to provide a range of help to individual businesses, including ethnic minority businesses.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money (a) in real terms and (b) when adjusted for inflation has been invested in the loan guarantee scheme in each year since 1982–83. [40967]

Mr. Page: The table gives Government expenditure for each year, net of premium income and recoveries, in actual value and adjusted for inflation.

Small firms loan guarantee scheme net expenditure

£ million

	Actual	Adjusted to 1994 values
1982–83	10.8	19.1
1983–84	27.2	46.2
1984–85	32.9	53.2
1985–86	27.1	41.3
1986–87	11.5	16.9
1987–88	3.5	5.0
1988–89	3.8	5.1
1989–90	5.6	7.0
1990–91	16.5	18.9
1991–92	27.5	29.7
1992–93	19.2	20.0
1993–94	12.8	13.1
1994–95	16.2	16.2

Cash and Running Cost Limits

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits and running cost limit for 1995–96. [41650]

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class IV, vote 1—programmes and administration—will be increased by £9,512,000 from £1,233,829,000 to £1,233,341,000. This net increase results from:

(i) the take up of running costs and capital end-year flexibility (£9,470,000, including £200,00 machinery of government transfer from class XVIII, vote 1);

(ii) expenditure relating to the privatisation of the National Engineering Laboratory (£1,633,000);

(iii) capital-related expenditure on videoconferencing (£1,000,000); and

(iv) other miscellaneous changes (£169,000);

offset by a reduction in provision to offset a corresponding increase on class IV, vote 4, £2,760,000. This increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Within this total, the gross running cost limit for the Department of Trade and Industry is being increased by £49,665,000 from £314,962,000 to £364,627,000. This change comprises:

(i) the take up of £6,157,000 in running costs end-year flexibility as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776–82 offset by £1,253,000 for an increase in VAT refunds (£53,000) and the reclassification of expenditure (£1,200,000).

(ii) £1,006,000 in respect of the contractorisation of the National Physical Laboratory.

(iii) machinery of government transfers from the former Employment Department (class V, vote 1) in respect of running costs (£38,849,000) and the Office of Manpower Economic (£1,573,000); and

(iv) machinery of government transfers from the Cabinet Office: Office of Public Service (class XVIII, vote 1) of £5,580,000 offset by transfers to class XVIII, vote 1 from class IV, Vote 1, of £2,247,000.

As a result of related machinery of government transfers, the DTI also becomes responsible for administering the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service running cost limit of £22,978,000.

In addition, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 10 (Office of Gas Supply), will be increased by £1,188,000 from £5,352,000 to £6,540,000 and the gross running cost limit by £1,054,000 from £5,136,000 to £6,190,000. The increase is required for additional staff and running costs—as reflected in the explanatory and financial memorandum of the Gas Bill—for the additional duties placed on the director general by the licensing provisions of the new gas legislation.

Additionally, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 2 (science programme) will be increased by £8,606,000 from £1,284,246,000 to £1,292,852,000. This increase results from the take up of £5,606,000 in capital end-year flexibility as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776-82 and of £3,000,000 which is sought to take forward initiatives to strengthen partnerships with industry. This latter increase will be offset by a reduction in the end-year flexibility entitlement on class XVIII, vote 1 (Cabinet Office: Office of Public Service) running costs.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many households in England and Wales are estimated to be without a mains electricity supply. [41202]

Mr. Page: According to the English house condition survey of 1991, some 2,000 dwellings were without a mains electricity supply. The Welsh Office estimates that in 1993, less than 0.1 per cent. of households in Wales had no mains electricity supply.

Patent Office

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the performance of the Patent Office since it became an agency. [41648]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Since the Patent Office became an agency in 1990, it has consistently met its financial objectives and has successfully introduced accruals accounting. It has reduced overhead costs—that is, the cost of common services, by 46 per cent. over five years—and has substantially reduced its overall cost base. Through savings passed on to the customer, fees have been held steady for the last three years. In addition to these financial improvements, it has focused heavily on quality and standards of service to its customers and was awarded a charter mark in 1993.

The Patent Office's performance as an agency has won recognition both within the UK and overseas. In recent years delegations from many different countries—Japan, China, Korea, the former Russian States, New Zealand, Canada and the USA—have visited the office to learn about its management and operational procedures. I therefore welcome the fact that Vice-President Gore referred specifically to the success of the British Patent Office as an executive agency in his decision to make the US Patent and Trademark Office the first of a series of agencies to be transformed into a performance-driven, customer-oriented organisation.

HEALTH

Contraception

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners have faxes; and what proportion of general practitioners were faxed with details of the warning on the seven brands of contraceptive pill. [39969]

Mr. Sackville: The Committee on Safety of Medicines' advice on oral contraceptives was sent by the Epinet electronic communication system to all directors of public health, who were asked to activate their established cascade arrangements to forward the message to: all family health services authorities to forward to all general practitioners; family planning doctors and nurses; medical directors of all hospital units within the district to cascade to appropriate hospital consultants in particular: obstetricians and gynaecologists; and the chief executive of the health authority. The detailed arrangements for cascading messages are determined locally. Precise information on the number of general practitioners who have faxes and the proportion who received details of the advice by fax is not available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Asthma

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has that asthma attacks increase with increases in car pollution, with particular reference to nitrogen dioxide. [39892]

Mr. Sackville: The latest report of the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants, "Asthma and Outdoor Air Pollution", was published on 19 October. One of the report's main conclusions was that most asthmatic patients are unaffected by exposure to such levels of non-biological air pollution as commonly occur in the United Kingdom. A small number of patients experience clinally significant effects which occasionally require an increase in medication or attention by a doctor. In commenting specifically on exposure to traffic, the report stated that there was a consistent, although modest, association between exposure to traffic and asthma prevalence in children. Traffic pollution was a plausible explanation though socio-economic and other environmental factors could also play important roles. The report also concluded that nitrogen dioxide levels are unlikely to be an important influence on daily variations in asthma occurrence.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many calls have been made to the NHS helpline in the Trent regional health authority area for each month since its establishment; and how much has been spent in establishing, publicising and administering the helpline. [39444]

Mr. Malone: The tables detail the number of calls which the Trent regional health information service have received since its inception in April 1992 to September 1995 and the full contract price paid to Nottingham community health national health service trust to provide the service.

The contract price includes the cost of publicising and administering the service. There was an established local health information service in Nottingham prior to the establishment of the national HIS network. The contract price for 1991–93 includes a sum of £66,000 to upgrade accommodation, furnishings and IT software prior to Nottingham community health NHS trust taking responsibility for providing the regional HIS.

Dental Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of active registrations of capitation patients for dental treatment in (a) Doncaster, (b) Barnsley, (c) Rotherham and (d) Sheffield family health services authorities in the age categories (i) nought to two years, (ii) three to five years, (iii) six to nine years, (iv) 10 to 14 years, (v) 15 to 17 years and (vi) under 18 years as at 30 June for each of the last four years; and what was the take-up for each age group per 100 local population for each of the years. [39469]

Mr. Malone: This information will be placed in the Library.

Salisbury National Health Service Trust

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration underlay the decision of Salisbury NHS trust to defer non-urgent elective admissions from Bath and Wiltshire health commission until April 1996; for what reasons it was able to admit similar patients referred by fundholding general practitioner practices; and what representations (a) his Department and (b) the NHS executive have made to the Salisbury trust about this issue. [40714]

Mr. Sackville: Non-urgent elective admissions from the health commission for Wiltshire and Bath have not been deferred until 1996. Patients from general practitioners whether fundholders or not are having routine operations at the trust. Routine admissions have been slowed to take account of an unexpected 15 per cent. increase in activity. The national health service executive is working closely with the trust to monitor progress.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40741]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table. Information for financial years 1991–92 and 1993–94 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. For the financial year 1990–91 I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) on 13 December 1993, Official Report, column 474. No allowances have been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles.

Financial year	Total amount (£)
1994–95	280,536
1993–94	281,174

Blood Service Staff

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the amounts awarded in each of the last three years in performance-related pay to management at the National Blood Authority's plasma fractionation centre; [40700]

(2) if he will list the amounts awarded in each of the last three years in performance-related pay to management at each of the National Blood Authority's establishment. [40701]

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the National Blood Authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. J. Adey, the chief executive of the authority, for details.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number and total year's experience there of employees who left the national blood transfusion service over the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [39810]

Mr. Sackville: A total of 496 staff left the national blood service in the year ending 31 March 1995. Their length of service with the national blood service was as follows:

	Number
Less than a year	136
At least 1 year, but less than 5 years	190
At least 5, but less than 10 years	90
At least 10, but less than 15 years	25
More than 15 years	55

I understand this staff turnover to be within the normal range in the service, in any one year.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on central functions of his Department on (a) staff salaries, (b) consultancy fees, (c) redundancies and (d) recruitment, in each of the last five years. [40695]

Mr. Sackville: Separately identifiable running cost expenditure by the Department of Health and its agencies on staff salaries, consultancy fees and recruitment is shown in the table.

£ million

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Staff salaries	103	114	127	117	113
Consultancy fees	18.4	24.3	18.4	15.9	18.5
Recruitment	—	—	0.80	0.53	0.37

The Department has had no compulsory redundancies. The cost of voluntary early requirements in 1994–95 was £700,000.

Cambridge Military Hospital

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for health what additional resources will be made available to (a) North Hampshire health commission or (b) Bath and Wiltshire health commission to take account of the cost of transferring care for NHS patients from the Cambridge military hospital, Aldershot, and the RAF hospital, Wroughton, to NHS provider units. [40715]

Mr. Sackville: I am aware of the difficulties faced by North and Mid Hampshire health commission following the decision by the Ministry of Defence to close the Cambridge military hospital. The health commission has kept me in close touch with its programme for reproviding the Cambridge military hospital services.

The implications for the NHS of the closure of the MOD hospitals are currently being discussed between the health commissions and the NHS executive.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of Cambridge military hospital and its present contribution to health services for NHS patients. [40433]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply given today by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces. The local health authorities are currently working closely with local national health service trusts and general practitioners to ensure that there is no break in local services and these services are provided to patients charter standards.

Conceptions and Births

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of (a) conceptions and (b) births by region and nationally, among girls under the age of 16 years in each of the last 10 years. [40683]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table. Full data for 1994 are not yet available.

Conceptions not leading to maternities or to abortions under the Abortion Act 1967 are not included in the statistics, as information about them is incomplete.

Burials and Cremations

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bodies were buried or cremated by local authorities under the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984 in each of the past five years. [40587]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Psychiatric Care

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been killed by someone who has recently had psychiatric care (a) in 1995 and (b) in each year since 1979. [41109]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Chilled Foods

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Ministry is taking to ensure that chilled foods are safe to eat when bought from retailers. [38928]

Mr. Sackville: We are committed to maintaining high standards of food safety. Revised Food Safety (Temperature Control) Regulations 1995 were brought into force on 15 September 1995. Under the regulations, chilled foods which are likely to be harmful to health, because they support either the growth of pathogenic micro-organisms or the formation of toxins, must be kept at a maximum chill temperature of 8 deg. C. This requirement applies to food retailers. The regulations are enforced at local level by environmental health officers employed by local authorities.

Neuroleptic Drugs

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the results of the prescription and use of neuroleptic drugs for mentally ill people. [39668]

Mr. Bowis: The introduction of neuroleptic drugs has been one of the most significant advances in psychiatry, facilitating the introduction of modern methods of care and enabling many mentally ill people to lead fuller and more productive lives.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died following inappropriate prescription or dosage of neuroleptic drugs in each year since 1992–93. [39669]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Dunfermline, West (Ms Squire) on 27 April, Official Report, column 621.

Neurosurgical Units

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of neurosurgical facilities in Sussex. [39801]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 8 June, Official Report, columns 307-308.

Power Lines

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what his assessment is of the risk to health of electromagnetic radiation from power lines; and if he will make a statement; [39800]

(2) what research has been performed on the relationship between electromagnetic radiation from power lines and cancer; and if he will make a statement. [39803]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) on 3 November 1994, Official Report, columns 1274-75.

Nurse Call Bell Systems

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines cover the operation of nurse call bell systems in NHS trust hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [39802]

Mr. Sackville: It is for individual trusts to determine operational policies for nurse call systems in the light of local circumstances. Technical guidance is published in health technical memoranda 2015 "Bed Head Services", a copy of which will be placed in the Library shortly.

NHS Management

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the average pay rise of NHS chief executives for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [39806]

(2) what guidelines are in effect concerning the salary and employment conditions of NHS trust chief executives; and if he will make a statement. [39807]

Mr. Malone: Information on average pay rises of national health service chief executives is not available centrally. For those staff employed on the national terms and conditions for general and senior managers, basic salaries were last increased by 2.2 per cent. from 1 September 1994. The effect on the pay scales is set out in health service guideline, HSG(95)7, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS trust boards are accountable for the proper appointment, appraisal and remuneration of their senior executives and, as in all their functions, boards must have regard to the public service values of accountability, probity and openness enshrined in the codes of conduct and accountability issued to NHS boards in April 1994. The code of accountability requires all national health service boards to establish a remuneration and terms of service committee to exercise proper control of executive board members' remuneration.

Needles

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make needles for the use of administering insulin available on prescription; and if he will make a statement. [39805]

Mr. Malone: Disposable syringes with attached needles are already available on general practitioner prescription.

Hospitals (Voluntary Fundraising)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the total income to the NHS from voluntary fundraising in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [40431]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Blood Products

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the final destinations of all blood products from United Kingdom donors which have been sold abroad; and if he will make a statement; [40435]

(2) if he will list all blood products by type, from United Kingdom donors, which have been sold by Bio-Products Laboratory; and if he will make a statement. [40436]

Mr. Sackville: The Bio-Products Laboratory, which is part of the National Blood Authority, offers surplus blood products for sale abroad only after national health service demand is satisfied. The only blood product where present availability significantly exceeds NHS demand is albumin, although small quantities of factor 8 and factor 9 are sometimes surplus to NHS requirements. The products are exported worldwide. This avoids waste of a valuable resource and keeps down costs to the NHS. The alternative would be destruction.

Medical Cost Inflation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will define medical cost inflation; and what has been the rate of medical cost inflation in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [40416]

Mr. Sackville: The Department has no measure of medical cost inflation. Health service specific inflation is calculated as a combination of hospital and community health services pay and price inflation. Pay inflation is defined as the change in units costs for HCHS staff weighted by the share of expenditure on each staff group. Price inflation is defined as the change in the prices of goods and services in the health service weighted according to the share of expenditure on each area.

The table shows HCHS inflation from 1984–85 to 1993–94.

Year	HCHS inflation estimate
1984–85	5.8
1985–86	4.9
1986–87	7.0
1987–88	8.5
1988–89	10.6
1989–90	6.3
1990–91	8.7
1991–92	10.1
1992–93	6.9
1993–94	3.4

GP Fundholding

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the regional variations in the percentage of general practitioners that have become fundholders. [40920]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby South (Mrs. Beckett) on 24 May, Official Report, column 597.

Anderson Fabry Disease

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what treatment is available through the national health service for patients with Anderson Fabry disease; at which NHS trusts treatment can be obtained; and if he will make a statement. [40921]

Mr. Sackville: Anderson Fabry disease is a rare inherited disorder of metabolism for which there is no known cure. Treatment of the various symptoms of the disease is a matter of clinical judgment and varies according to the individual case. The availability of services for such treatment is a matter for local determination.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly people of pensionable age have made formal complaints of wrongful detention under the mental health Acts in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [40922]

Mr. Bowis: We do not collect this information, but I am advised by the Mental Health Act Commission, which has the statutory duty of protecting the interests of patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983, that in its experience it is extremely rare for a patient to be detained illegally.

Bradford Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many orthopaedic operations will be subcontracted to other hospitals by Bradford Hospitals NHS trust; [41072]

(2) what has been the percentage change in funding available to Bradford hospital NHS trust in the current financial year; and what has been the increase in operations required to be carried out. [41071]

Mr. Sackville: There are matters for Bradford Hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Rodney Walker, chairman of the trust, for details.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are awaiting hip replacement operations in Bradford; and what is the average waiting time. [41075]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Bradford health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Zahida Manzoor, chairman of the authority, for details.

Orthopaedic Surgeons

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the timescale for recruitment of the target number of orthopaedic surgeons required by Bradford to meet the demand for orthopaedic operations. [41073]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Greetham CBE, chairman of the authority, for details.

GP Lists

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been removed from their doctor's list by decision of the doctor in each of the last five years. [37636]

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were removed from general practitioner lists by family health services authorities; and if he will indicate the reasons for their removal in 1993–94 and 1994–95. [40664]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Available data held centrally relate only to the years 1992–93 and 1993–94 and are contained in health service indicators, a copy of which is in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies. [41078]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 1 November by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 324.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000. [41077]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 1 November, Official Report, column 324 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

Regulations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimates he has made of the compliance costs for small businesses of regulations introduced since April 1992. [40480]

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available. As part of its approach to producing good regulation, the Government have adopted the deregulation task force's principle of "think small first" which means making sure that regulations will not have a disproportionate impact on small businesses. The Government have incorporated the "small business litmus test" as part of the compliance cost assessment procedure to give practical effect to this principle which is carried out on all regulatory proposals which impact on business. The results of the test are included in individual compliance cost assessments on regulatory proposals which are available in the House Libraries.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many regulations carried into law since 1979 have been identified by the deregulation unit as suitable for repeal. [39845]

Mr. Freeman: We have identified over 1,000 regulations for amendment or repeal, but information about the date each regulation was carried into law is not centrally held. By adopting the deregulation task force's principles of good regulation—"think small first", proportionality, and goal-based regulation—we aim to get regulation right first time. We believe that the effects of legislation should be regularly monitored and reviewed and changes made if they are justified.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38596]

Mr. Horam : I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage on 1 November, Official Report, columns 186–87.

Recruitment

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications have been received in the last five years for civil service posts at executive officer grade or above from applicants aged over 45 years; and how many of those were from women. [40212]

Mr. Horam: Since 1991 such departments and agencies have been responsible for their own recruitment, within the framework laid down by the civil service order in Council 1995 and the recruitment code issued by the Civil Service Commissioners. Figures on applicants are not centrally collected. However, in the past five years among external applicants to "fast stream" posts, the average proportion of women applicants has been 41 per cent., and in the last year women have made up 10 per cent. of external applicants for posts at the current grade 5 level and above. No figures are available about the number of applicants aged over 45 years.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many and what percentage of applications for civil service posts at executive officer grade or above in the last five years by persons aged 45 years or older were successful; and how many of those were from women. [40213]

Mr. Horam: Figures on applicants are not centrally collected. However in the last five years more than 18 per cent. of entrants to the civil service at executive officer level and above have been age 45 and over.

Year	All entrants at EO level and above	Of whom aged 45 and over	Of whom women
1990–91	8,524	1,344	173
1991–92	7,041	1,228	165
1992–93	5,845	1,037	163
1993–94	5,159	1,055	114
1994–95	4,322	998	139

I can add that over the last five years, in external recruitment to "fast stream" posts, women have formed an average of 41 per cent. of applicants and 37 per cent. of successful applicants. In the last four years, women have made up 45 per cent. of successful external applicants for senior appointments. Equivalent figures are not available about the number of applicants aged over 45 years.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

European Structural Funds

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been (a) applied for and (b) spent under objective 3 of the European structural fund. [40932]

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

1994:

(a) applied for from the Commission, final total - £352,842,016

(b) paid to applicants so far—£290,645,724

1995:

(a) applied for from the Commission so far—£207,949,790

(b) paid to applicants so far £139,068,016

Student Loans

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent discussions her Department has had with lending banks and building societies regarding the provision of student loans. [41131]

Mr. Forth: Such talks have taken place and are continuing. It would be premature to discuss the details now, but any announcement relating to them will be made to the House at the appropriate time.

Skill Needs Survey

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, what was the original date for intended publication of the "Skill Needs in Britain 1995" survey; and when it is now expected to be published. [40931]

Mr. Forth: It was originally planned that the work of this survey should be completed by the end of September. It is now expected that the contractor will publish the report in December.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Egg Production

7. Mr. Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in getting the Commission to move forward its review of the use of battery cages in egg production. [38927]

Mrs. Browning: My right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has pressed Commissioner Fischler to bring the matter forward during 1996. The Commissioner has indicated that he will try to do this.

Western Waters

14. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in securing adequate control measures for access to the western waters. [38937]

Mr. Baldry: The agreement at the Fisheries Council last week was a considerable negotiating success in which our essential concerns were met. The control arrangements which will operate in western waters from 1 January 1996 are realistic and will allow effective monitoring and control with a significantly reduced burden on fishermen compared with what would have resulted from the Commission's original proposals.

Fishing

15. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to involve United Kingdom fishermen in discussions on future developments in the industry. [38938]

Mr. Baldry: I hold frequent meetings with representatives of the fishing industry and it is my intention to meet the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations on a regular basis as well as visiting ports and meeting local fishermen.

Norwegian Territorial Waters

16. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels have fished in Norwegian territorial waters in the past three years; and what estimate he has made of the number of fishing vessels from other member states of the European Union fishing those grounds. [38940]

Mr. Baldry: The numbers of UK vessels that have fished in the Norwegian exclusive economic zone are:

284 in 1992
271 in 1993, and
248 in 1994.

We are seeking from the European Commission equivalent figures for other member states.

Mushrooms

17. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to promote British mushrooms. [38941]

Mr. Boswell: We promote mushrooms and all other British produce at every opportunity.

Common Agricultural Policy

18. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate the EU Commission has published about CAP spending in 1996; and what is the legal limit of such spending. [38943]

Mr. Baldry: The 1996 draft budget for common agricultural policy expenditure has been set at the level of the guideline of 40,828 million ecu or £34,069 million. This is the legally binding ceiling on CAP expenditure.

19. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of CAP fraud were recorded in the EU in 1994. [38945]

Mr. Baldry: In 1994, there were 1,610 cases, valued at £313 million, of CAP irregularities, which include fraud, reported across the Community.

24. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the total cost of the CAP in 1996. [38950]

Mr. Baldry: The 1996 draft budget for the common agricultural policy has been set at the level of the guideline of 40,828 million ecu, £34,069 million. The CAP also imposes a cost on consumers but the scale of this cannot be assessed in advance.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the average change in the price of foodstuffs arising from the common agricultural policy. [41448]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Recent reports that the prices of milk, sugar and beef are more than doubled by the common agricultural policy are exaggerated and misleading. They appear to be based on an inaccurate understanding of the OECD's consumer subsidy equivalent. This is a measure of the subsidy element in farm gate prices and relates to the degree to which farm gate prices exceed reference or "world" prices. The recently published estimates wrongly apply the CSE percentage for various commodities to retail prices instead of to farm gate prices. Because the farm gate price is only a fraction of the retail price, the effect of the CAP on the latter is necessarily considerably lower. This would be smaller still if it were possible to take account in calculating CSEs of the fact that world prices would be higher in the absence of the CAP.

We have placed in the Library a note demonstrating that overall costs of the CAP to United Kingdom citizens in 1993 were about £4 per person per week, of which about £3 is due to higher food prices. Even this estimate is likely to be on the high side because the effects of the CAP on world prices have not been taken into account. However the cost of the CAP, and its effect on food prices, is one of the reasons why the Government are pressing for its reform.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

20. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the level of hill livestock compensatory allowances. [38946]

Mr. Boswell: On 26 October, I met the members of the Hill Farm Advisory Committee. The level of hill livestock compensatory allowances was discussed. Later today, Agriculture Ministers will meet representatives of the farming unions in the context of the autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands which considers the rates of payment and conditions for the HLCA scheme in the approaching year. In addition, officials have met a number of other organisations whose members have an interest in the HLCA scheme to hear their views on this subject.

23. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement in the importance of hill livestock compensatory allowances to the maintenance of communities in remote areas. [38949]

Mr. Boswell: It is difficult to determine precisely the importance of hill livestock compensatory allowances to the maintenance of communities in remote areas. However, the deadline in the labour force on agricultural holdings in the less-favoured areas over recent years has been slower than the decline in other areas. The contribution which the HLCA scheme makes to hill farm output has declined from 9 per cent. in 1992–93 to 6 per cent. in 1994–95. Other direct subsidies are now much more significant than they were; direct headage payments to livestock farmers in the hills and uplands are expected to amount to £615 million, of which £107 million will come from HLCA payments.

Fish Conservation

21. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that control systems applicable to fish conservation measures are equally applicable throughout EU countries. [38947]

Mr. Baldry: The Commission is responsible for ensuring that member states have in place effective systems for monitoring compliance with the common fisheries policy. Its powers of audit were enhanced in 1993 and the Commission will shortly be reporting on the enforcement performance of member states during 1994.

Dairying

22. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the dairy industry to discuss employment levels in the industry. [38948]

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Minister regularly meets representatives of all sides of the agriculture industry, including the dairy sector, to discuss issues of importance to them.

Food Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are in place to prevent meat from animals with tuberculosis from entering the human food chain. [38931]

Mrs. Browning: The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 deal comprehensively with the meat supply aspects of this important issue of food safety and consumer protection in Great Britain.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of agricultural land is currently in food production; how many acres this represents; and if he will make a statement. [39340]

Mrs. Browning: The provisional results for England from the June 1995 agricultural census show an estimated 8,818,000 hectares, of land to be devoted to crop production, involving bare fallow, grassland and rough grazing. This is 90 per cent. of agricultural area. The remaining 10 per cent. 995,000 hectares is accounted for by set-aside scheme land, woodland and all other land on agricultural holdings.

Statistics of previous years are available in "The Digest of Agricultural Census Statistics" which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Fish Stocks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will apply to the structural fund for a subsidy for British fishermen for loss of fishing opportunities owing to inadequate quotas. [40601]

Mr. Baldry: Structural fund assistance may be used only to finance measures to offset the loss of income suffered as a result of a temporary cessation of fishing activities caused by unforeseen and non-repetitive events. Under the principle of relative stability, the UK has a guaranteed percentage share of the annual total allowable catches agreed in EU and north Atlantic waters. But the actual level of TACs reflects the pressure of fishing effort on available stocks. The UK is providing a total of £53 million for decommissioning to help reduce this pressure.

Forestry

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all Forestry Commission woods currently for sale in England; and if he will make a statement on the targets for the disposal of land by (a) area and (b) projected income. [40675]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 2 November 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend, the Under-Secretary for Scotland gave the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 25 October, Official Report, columns 685-87. As set out in the Government's expenditure plans 1995–96 to 1997–98, the Forestry Commission plans to sell about 15,000 hectares of forest land in each of the next three years, and expects to receive a total of about £60 million from the sale of forest land and surplus properties during that period. The Commission expects about 15 per cent. of these sales to be in England.

TRANSPORT

Road and Bridge Maintenance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the number of kilometres of motorway renewed, (b) the number of kilometres of trunk road renewed, (c) the number of bridges assessed for structural capacity and (d) the number of bridges strengthened by his Department in each of the financial years since 1989–90 including plans for the current year. [41194]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 2 November 1995:

> As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will list (a) the number of kilometres of motorway renewed, (b) the number of kilometres of trunk road renewed, (c) the number of bridges assessed for structural capacity and (d) the number of bridges strengthened by his Department in each of the financial years since 1989-90 including plans for the current year.
> The information requested for financial years 1989–90 to 1992–93 can be found in "Transport Report 1994–The Government's Expenditure Plans 1994–95 to 1996–97", Cm 2506, presented to Parliament in March 1994. For subsequent years the figures are as follows:-

	1993–94 outturn	1994–95 outturn	1995–96 plans
Motorway renewal (nlks[1])	234	277	134
Other Trunk Road renewal (nlks[1])	293	563	261
Bridges assessed	1,793	1,254	820
Bridges strengthened	46	164	86

Driving Tests

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 27 October 1995 to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice), Official Report, column 865, what percentage of people taking the driving test fail after the (a) first, (b) second, (c) third, (d) fourth, (e) fifth, or (f) at their sixth or subsequent attempts. [41058]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from B. L. Herdan to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the percentage of people taking the driving test who fail. We do not routinely collect this information as it does not directly affect the operation of the Agency.

For consistency of testing, and in fairness to the candidate, it is preferable if the examiner is not made aware of the number of previous attempts a candidate has made at a test. The overall failure rate on driving test in the last two financial years was:

1993–94: 52%

1994–95: 53%

As part of our third Customer Survey, completed in March this year—the results of which were published in July, we asked a random sample of all our customers whether it was their first test or a repeat attempt. Of 1,187 people in the sample who had recently taken their driving test, 29% (340) had just failed and of these failures 26% (88) were at the first attempt, 34% (114) at the second, 21% (72) at the third, 9% (30) at the fourth, 6% (19) at the fifth and 5% (17) were at their sixth or subsequent attempt.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the results of his survey on illegally operated heavy goods vehicles; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [41196]

Mr. Norris: A report on the Vehicle Inspectorate's survey of illegally operated heavy goods vehicles will be made available by the end of this year. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Artillery Ranges

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his answer of 19 July 1995, Official Report, column 1323, when he will write to his hon. Friend; [41034]

(2) when his research project at the Transport Research Laboratory on the effects on drivers of sudden noise from artillery ranges will be completed. [41132]

Mr. Watts: The Transport Research Laboratory has completed its research programme and expects to finalise its report shortly. The Highways Agency will provide my hon. Friend with a copy of the report as soon as it is available.

Road Improvement Schemes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of contracts awarded and their value for major improvement schemes on the trunk road and motorway network in each financial year since 1989–90, including plans for the current year. [41195]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 2 November 1995:

As you know, John Watts has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, to list the number of contracts awarded and their value for major improvement schemes on the trunk road and motorway network in each financial year since 1989–90 and our plans for the current year.

The number and value of contracts for major improvement schemes awarded in each of the past 5 financial years is shown in the table below. The contracts included are those worth in excess of £5m and the total contract values are those at the time of contract award.

Financial year	Number of contracts	Value of contracts
1990/91	27	£515m
1991/92	20	£500m
1992/93	14	£543m
1993/94	29	£762m
1994/95	13	£555m

Our plans for the current year are set out in Annex B of the Agency's Business Plan for 1995/96 a copy of which I enclose for your information.

I also enclose a copy of the first Annual Report of the Highways Agency which sets out the progress made in the first full year of its existence.

Shipping (Waste Audit)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce mandatory checks, by way of a waste audit, for all ships calling at British ports. [40412]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 1 November 1995]: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about mandatory checks, by way of a waste audit, for all ships calling at British Ports.

Internationally agreed regulations within the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 (MARPOL 73/78) require that properly maintained oil record books are available for inspection on ships. Oil tankers are required to carry records of their cargo and bilge pumping operations whilst other ships are required to have a record of bilge pumping. To ensure that these requirements and other safety measures are met, the United Kingdom (UK), in co-operation with European neighbours, has introduced port state control procedures. Under these procedures port state control inspectors can, by examining the book, trace the fate of all oils loaded on board ships.

Recent amendments to the international regulations (MARPOL 73/78) include a requirement for garbage record books. The UK has been at the forefront of that development and it is anticipated that requirements will be transposed into UK statute when they come into effect in 1997. Other recent amendments to MARPOL 73/78 will call for additional monitoring of potentially polluting shipboard operations. The effects of those amendments will be audited to establish whether further controls are necessary.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department,

(ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40869]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 1 November 1995]: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly the highest and lowest full time salaries fell within the following bands:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
Central Department
Highest	95,000 to 99,999	95,000 to 99,999
Lowest	under 5,000	5,000 to 9,999
Agencies
Highest	100,000 to 104,999	100,000 to 104,999
Lowest	under 5,000	under 5,000

Information for non-departmental public bodies is not immediately available and I will write to you separately with those figures.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many individuals in (a) his Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies received annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeding (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (iii) £300,000 in each year since 1985–86. [40868]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 1 November 1995]: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the department, agencies and NDPBs. As members of the principal civil service pension scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the scheme rules which have been deposited in the Library of the House. In the Department and its agencies only one person currently receives an annual remuneration above £100,000. This was also the case in 1994–95 and 1993–94. Before that no-one received £100,000 or more. No one has received £200,000 or above.

Information for non-departmental public bodies is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Member separately with those figures.

Oil Dumping at Sea

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take to prevent tankers dumping oil at sea following the recent pollution incident at Flamborough Head. [39337]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 27 October 1995]: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the recent pollution incident at Flamborough Head.

The UK operates routine aerial surveillance to detect and deter illegal discharges. This was identified by Lord Donaldson in his report on the prevention of pollution from merchant shipping as an important tool in deterring vessels from discharging illegally.

The UK, as a member of the Bonn Agreement, works closely with other contracting States to conduct joint surveillance of the North Sea. At the forth North Sea Conference in June, Ministers agreed to work on ways of making aerial surveillance a more effective deterrent against illegal discharges. The UK is also committed, together with other North Sea states, to the aim of designating the North Sea a special area for the purposes of oil pollution. Special area status will mean that all oil discharges in the North Sea will be illegal once the agreement is implemented.

Ferry Safety

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have been killed while travelling on board United Kingdom ferries over the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [40303]

Mr. Norris: Four.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff are employed on ferry safety inspections; and if he will make a statement. [40304]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of staff employed on ferry safety inspections.

All Marine Safety Agency (MSA) surveyors, with the exception of fishing vessel surveyors, are available to carry out port state and flag state inspections, but the number of surveyors engaged on inspections will vary from district to district according to the availability of ships for inspection and other duties. Surveyors are not restricted to carrying out inspections within one district. Concentrated inspections involve surveyors from outside the region in which the inspection takes place and the team inspecting fish factory ships anchored off Lerwick may be comprised of surveyors from regions outside Scotland. For this reason, it is more accurate to give figures not by district, but for the MSA as a whole.

In 1994/95, 75 MSA surveyors were engaged in survey and inspection work, out of a total of 129 surveyors in post.

Night Flights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has taken to limit night flights in the south-east; what is (a) the current and (b) the proposed fine for flying at the wrong hours and on the wrong course. [40712]

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend may specify restrictions on aircraft taking off or landing at aerodromes designated for the purposes of section 78 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. The only airports so designated are Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted. For all other airports, such as Luton and London City, night restrictions may be imposed voluntarily by the airport operator or may be imposed by planning conditions.

Since 24 October 1993, night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted have comprised a maximum number of movements which can be made at each airport each season with a quota, related to an aircraft's noise classification on take-off or landing, as a supplementary control designed to encourage the use of quieter aircraft. The movements limits and quotas apply during the night quota period from 2330 to 0600. There are also restrictions on the noisiest types of aircraft from 2300 to 2330 and from 0600 to 0700 to provide further protection. Further details are set out in the annex to my announcement of 16 August 1995, a copy of which was placed in the House Library. Monitoring returns are provided by the airport companies to their respective airport consultative committees.

At the designated airports, my right hon. Friend also prescribes noise preferential departure routes and sets noise limits for departing aircraft. There are no statutory powers to penalise poor track keeping on the noise preferential routes. Financial penalties for infringements of the noise limits are imposed by the airport companies under their charging powers. The financial penalties for breaches of the night noise limit—102 PNdB, 89 dBA—are £500 for exceeding the limit by 3dB or less and £1,000 for breaches of more than 3dB. On 3 October, we published a consultation paper proposing a 2dB reduction in the night limit and a 3dB reduction in the daytime limit plus an improvement in monitoring efficiency by increasing the number of noise monitors and improving their location.

City of Nottingham Authority

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes will take place on transport matters when the city of Nottingham becomes a unitary authority; and if he will make a statement. [40914]

Mr. Norris: On becoming a unitary authority, the city of Nottingham would become a highway and traffic authority, with direct responsibility for the local roads in its area. In exercising these and its existing responsibilities we would expect the new authority to work closely with its neighbours at the strategic level to deliver improved local transport services.

Robin Hood Railway Line

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect on the Robin Hood railway line of price competition between bus companies covering the route; and if he will make a statement. [40913]

Mr. Norris: I am aware of the very keen price competition between bus operators covering the route of the Robin Hood line, in particular between Hucknall and Nottingham. Nottinghamshire county council, which has sponsored the reopening of the Robin Hood line, is closely monitoring the position.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money (a) his Department, (b) the EC, (c) the county council, (d) local councils and (e) other partners have put into the Robin Hood line to date; and what amounts will have been paid by the completion of the line. [40987]

Mr. Norris: The capital cost of constructing stages 1 and 2 of the Robin Hood line has been around £23 million. My Department has so far provided £6.5 million from the coal regeneration fund towards the construction of stage 2 and £367,000 towards the construction of Bulwell station in stage 1. Around £4.5 million is expected from the EC and the majority of the remainder has been provided by Nottinghamshire county council, which is the sponsor of the scheme, with contributions from the district councils. My Department is currently considering the case for further resources to cover capital cost increases on stage 2.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what policies exist or are proposed to transfer the functions of traffic wardens to local authorities. [40983]

Mr. Norris: The Road Traffic Act 1991 provided for the decriminalisation of most non-endorsable on-street parking offences and for local authorities to take over enforcement responsibilities from traffic wardens. The new arrangements apply in all London boroughs, although traffic wardens continue to enforce parking controls on red routes. The Government published guidance in May this year for local authorities outside London on how to apply to the Secretary of State to take on this responsibility.

Local Authority Transport Policy Funding

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes have taken place in the Government's policy on financing local authority transport policies since 1979. [40981]

Mr. Norris: The most recent change in the Government's approach to the financing of local transport was the introduction of the package approach to funding in 1994–95. This enables local authorities to submit bids for packages of measures covering all forms of transport, and to do so in partnership with each other if they wish.

Information on earlier changes to the local transport financing system could be produced only at disproportionate cost. My Department publishes guidance on funding to local authorities in its annual transport policies and programme circulars, copies of which are deposited in the Library of the House.

Nottingham Light Rapid Transit System

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions are outstanding by his Department that are delaying the building of the light rapid transit system in Nottingham. [40984]

Mr. Norris: My Department has, at present, no outstanding decisions to make on the Nottingham express transit scheme. DOT officials have provisionally agreed Nottingham's section 56 appraisal and look forward to working closely with the recently appointed NET project development group over the coming year. Government funding for this scheme will of course depend on confirmation of the case for funding, the resources available at the time and the quality of competing bids for other local transport schemes.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38610]

Mr. Norris: I refer to the answer given by the Minister for National Heritage on 31 October 1995, Official Report, columns 186–87.

Severn Bridge

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring is in place to ensure that any fracturing of the strata due to compressive forces, or from other causes, as a result of the construction and subsequent use of the new Severn bridge is brought to (a) his Department's and (b) public attention; what investigations were undertaken prior to its construction to determine the risk of damage to underlying strata and fresh water resources; and what indemnity has been agreed to cover any such damage and for the Government to undertake corrective measures. [40139]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. William Ross, dated 2 November 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, what guarantees or undertakings for compensation where given by the Government to (a) contractors, (b) companies and (c) consultants involved with the construction and use of the new Severn Bridge crossing in respect of (i) pollution and (ii) future pollution to the supply of fresh water from the aquafissure Big Spring Severn Tunnel for supply to industrial and commercial undertakings.

No guarantees or undertakings for compensation were given by Government to any of the contractors, companies or consultants involved in the construction and use of the new Severn Bridge in respect of pollution or future pollution to the supply of fresh water from the Great Spring.

Any claims for compensation arising out of a breach of the Concessionaire's obligations under the Concession Agreement would be met by the Concession Company, Severn River Crossing Plc, under the terms of its Concession Agreement with the Secretary of State.

This situation applies both during the construction period and for the duration of the subsequent operation period which under the terms of the Concession Agreement is for a maximum of 30 years from April 1992.

Guarantees, undertakings and assurances in relation to monitoring and/or compensation were however given during the passage of the enabling legislation, the Severn Bridges Act 1992, to third parties who could be adversely affected by any pollution to the fresh water in the Great Spring that was attributed the construction of the new Severn Bridge. Such parties included British Rail, Welsh Water, NRA and Messrs Whitbreads.

Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what guarantees or undertakings for compensation were given by the Government to (a) contractors, (b) companies and (c) consultants involved with the construction and use of the new Severn bridge crossing in respect of (i) pollution and (ii) future pollution to the supply of fresh water from the aquafissure Big Spring Severn tunnel for supply to industrial and commercial undertakings. [40142]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. William Ross, dated 2 November 1995:

As you know, John Watts has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring is in place to ensure that any fracturing of the strata due to compressive forces, or from other causes, as a result of the construction of, and the subsequent use of the new Severn Bridge is brought to (a) his Department's and (b) public attention; what investigations were undertaken prior to its construction to determine the risk of damage to underlying strata and fresh water resources; and what indemnity has been agreed to cover any such damage and for the Government to undertake corrective measures.

Monitoring systems are in place to monitor the effects of the new bridge on both the Severn Rail Tunnel and the Great Spring. These are provided by Severn River Crossing (SRC) Plc under the terms of the Concession Agreement. The regular and frequent results of the monitoring exercise are provided to all parties concerned including their Government Agent on behalf of the Secretary of State. There are no specific arrangements to bring the results of the monitoring to the attention of the public.

The Government commissioned consultants to report on the risks and likelihood of damage to the Great Spring prior to the project being put out to tender. The Consultant's view that the risks would be minimal was accepted.

It would be for SRC to take corrective action should any damage occur as a result of a breach of their obligations under the Concession Agreement. The Concessionaire is required to hold the Secretary of State fully protected and indemnified in respect of any such damage.

If no breach was involved then the onus and cost would fall on the Government.

Traffic Generation Report

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road schemes evaluated or re-evaluated so far in the light of the traffic appraisal unit's guidance following the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report on traffic generation have been treated as complex or less complex in terms of guidance. [40588]

Mr. Watts: So far, the Highways Agency has considered 56 schemes in the light of the SACTRA report on induced traffic. The provisional assessments indicate that 12 are complex, 26 are intermediate and 18 are simple.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many schemes currently in the national road programme he expects to categorise as complex when they are evaluated in the light of the guidance from the traffic appraisal unit following the SACTRA report on traffic generation. [40590]

Mr. Watts: In respect of the national road programme as a whole, the Highways Agency is undertaking SACTRA-induced traffic assessments for all schemes at the appropriate stage in their preparation. So far, 12 of the 56 schemes considered have been provisionally assessed by the agency as complex. But it would not be right to extrapolate that trend to the whole programme, in which there are approximately 300 active schemes. The induced traffic assessments have to be done on a scheme-by-scheme basis and we will not know the overall picture until this work has been completed.

Solent Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers the inspector considering the Western Solent inquiry has, if the Western Solent comes under the control of a competent harbour authority, to direct that authority to make arrangements for the transfer of buoyage and the waiving of light dues for Isle of Wight ferries and other vessels. [40369]

Mr. Norris: The inspector would have no powers to direct any harbour authority to arrange for the transfer of buoyage responsibilities or the waiving of light dues for any vessel.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vessels on the United Kingdom register of fishing vessels are owned by interests based in the Netherlands. [39364]

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Dr. Gavin Strang, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about he number of UK registered fishing vessels owned by interests based in the Netherlands.

Unfortunately this information is not available. When the Merchant Shipping (Registration of Ships) Regulations 1993 came into force on 21 March 1994, the only eligibility requirement for companies wishing to register fishing vessels on the UK register was that they be incorporated in a member state of the European Economic Area with a place of business in the UK. It is therefore no longer necessary for the Register of Shipping and Seamen to know the nationality of shareholders and thus the information you require is not collected.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will respond to the sixth report from the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, "The Channel Tunnel Rail Link and Exceptional Hardship", HC270. [41506]

Sir George Young: The Government responded yesterday to the Chairman of the Committee. A copy of the response has been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Policy Guidance

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the revised guidance paper No. 6 will be published. [40684]

Sir Paul Beresford: There have now been over 500 responses to the draft revised planning policy guidance note on town centres and retail developments. These are now being considered carefully. I hope to publish the final version on PPG6 early next year.

Local Government Debt, Manchester

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of debt for each local authority in Greater Manchester; what was the figure for each year since 1988–89; and what are the equivalent figures for the whole of the Greater Manchester metropolitan area. [41099]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information from 1991 to 1995 is as follows:

Level of debt for each local authority in Greater Manchester

£ million

	At 31 March 1991	At 31 March 1992	At 31 March 1993	At 31 March 1994	At 31 March 1995
Bolton	215	216	146	152	157
Bury	117	115	82	80	87
Manchester	1,275	1,382	1,326	1,277	1,173
Oldham	274	274	242	242	258
Rochdale	248	278	212	204	209
Salford	450	467	403	376	425
Stockport	165	156	116	104	123
Tameside	248	262	186	183	188
Trafford	113	109	81	82	89
Wigan	276	278	250	237	244
Greater Manchester	3,381	3,538	3,045	2,937	2,953

1. The amounts include long-term borrowing undertaken in accordance with approvals issued under local authority capital finance legislation, and also temporary debt (less than one-year) to cover cash flow shortages.
2. Outstanding amounts for longer term borrowing are not collected regularly. There have been three surveys—in 1991, 1993 and 1994. Figures for 1992 and 1995 have been estimated using data on flows of longer term borrowing collected quarterly.
3. Part of the decrease in debt between 1992 and 1993 can be attributed to the commutation of the PWLB debt which took place in October 1992.

Trust Councils

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to introduce trust councils into local authority management. [41013]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have no plans for a trust councils initiative.

English Nature

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which members of the council of English Nature have management agreements with English Nature; and where. [41475]

Mr. Clappison: None of them.

DEFENCE

Laser Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many laser weapons that (a) have the potential to blind enemy troops and (b) the potential to disrupt their eyesight temporarily are possessed by the United Kingdom forces; and what development plans his Department has in this area.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the information contained in the letter from my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Member dated 17 August 1995, a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40737]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40865]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 1 November 1995]: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time civilian salaries in the Department, agencies and NDPBs fell within the band:

1994–95: Less than £5,000
1995–96: Less than £5,000

The highest full-time civilian salary in the Department fell within the band:

1994–95: £95,000—£99,999
1995–96: £95,000—£99,999

The highest full-time civilian salary in agencies fell within the band:

1994–95: £145,000—£149,999
1995–96: £145,000—£149,999

The highest full-time civilian salary in NDPBs fell within the band:

1994–95: £85,000—£89,999
1995–96: £85,000—£89,999

The highest military salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £115,000—£119,999
1995–96: £120,000—£124,999

and the lowest military salary fell within the band:

1994–95: £5,000—£9,999
1995–96: £5,000—£9,999

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals in (a) his Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies received annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeding (i) 100,000, (ii) 200,000 and (iii) 300,000 in each year since 1985–86. [40864]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 1 November 1995]: Those who received annual remuneration above the sums specified, excluding pension benefits, in the years in question were:

(i) Exceeding £100,000

	Department	Agencies	NDPBs	Military
1985–86 to
1990–91	0	0	0	0
1991–92	0	1	0	1
1992–93	0	1	0	2
1993–94	0	1	0	2
1994–95	0	1	0	2

(ii) and (iii)—no staff in the Department, agencies, NDPBs or the armed forces received remuneration in excess of £200,000 in the years in question.

Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the Department, agencies and NDPBs. As members of the principal civil service pensions scheme or armed forces pensions scheme, staff receive benefits in accordance with the rules which have been deposited in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Opposition Parties (Civil Service)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what are the conventions whereby civil service Departments take steps to consult the Opposition about their policies towards the end of a Parliament; and when such steps are planned to be taken before the end of the current Parliament. [40883]

The Prime Minister: The convention has been that, by authority of the Prime Minister, towards the end of a Parliament or when a general election has been called, Opposition parties may arrange, with the authority of their party leaders and through the head of the civil service, contacts with senior civil servants. These arrangements are designed to allow briefing on factual questions on departmental organisational changes which Opposition parties have in mind or which may result from Opposition party policies. Any exchanges would be confidential. Following the last general election, I told the leader of the Opposition that I would be content to authorise confidential exchanges between senior civil servants and Opposition spokesmen from January 1996.

Copex Arms Exhibition

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister what (a) financial and (b) other assistance is given by Her Majesty's Government to the Copex arms exhibition. [40094]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 November 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given yesterday by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board Trade.

Duke of Windsor (Papers)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 747, how many other documents relating to the conduct of the Duke of Windsor during world war two are held by Her Majesty's Government. [40678]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 November 1995]: British official papers in question have been released to the Public Record Office with the exception of a few items, which will be re-reviewed under the open government initiative and released at the appropriate time.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have received from the Arab League in relation to Libyan sanctions and Lockerbie. [39290]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 November 1995]: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are currently employed in his Department and in related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work force; and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41123]

Mr. Hanley: Breakdowns by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—normally those engaged for a period of up to 12 months, but exceptionally up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis for 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Hong Kong Overseas Public Servants

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Hong Kong overseas public servants. [41764]

Mr. Hanley: We plan to introduce legislation as soon as time allows. Copies of a draft Hong Kong (Overseas Public Servants) Bill are being made available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 30 October. [41696]

Mr. David Davis: The A points listed in document 11057/95, which will be deposited in the Library of the House as soon as it is available, were adopted unanimously.

The Council took note of resolutions in documents 9914/95 (PE-RE 61) and 10679/95 (PR-RE 67). A copy of these documents will be deposited in the Library of the House as soon as they are available.

An Association Council with Turkey took place. The Council decided on the implementation of the EU/Turkey Customs Union agreement.

The presidency noted Latvia's application to join the EU, lodged in Madrid on 27 October. The Council agreed on a formal acknowledgment referring to the procedure laid down in article 0 of the treaty.

The Council reached agreement on participation in the Euro-Mediterranean conference at Barcelona on 27 November.

The Council discussed a draft association agreement with Morocco. A special Foreign Affairs Council is to be convened on 10 November with the aim of reaching final agreement, preceded by discussion in the Committee of Permanent Representatives.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Official Solicitor

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the present Official Solicitor commenced his appointment; by what mechanism the appointment is (a) made and (b) terminated; and what is the official address of the post. [40702]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The present Official Solicitor commenced his appointment on 1 August 1993, following an open competition. The appointment is statutory and is made by the Lord Chancellor under section 90 of the Supreme Court Act 1981. Under the provisions of the 1981 Act, as amended by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990, the postholder has tenure until the completed year of service in which he or she attains the age of 62. In addition, the 1981 Act provides that the Lord Chancellor may remove the appointee from office on account of misbehaviour or on account of inability to perform the duties of the office. The official address of the post is:

The Official Solicitor to the Supreme Court
Official Solicitor's Department
81 Chancery Lane
London WC2 1DD

Acts of Parliament

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those Acts of Parliament since 1979 which have not been brought into force either fully or in part. [40481]

Mr. John M. Taylor: On the basis of information available up to 27 October 1995, the following are the Public General Acts of Parliament since 1979, which, as at 1 November 1995, have not been brought into force either fully or in part:

Antarctic Minerals Act 1989 (c.21)
Smoke Detectors Act 1991 (c.37)
Osteopaths Act 1993 (c.21)
Road Traffic (Driving Instruction by Disabled Persons) Act 1993 (c.31)
Civil Evidence (family Mediation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.6)
Home Energy Conservation Act 1995 (c.10)
Road Traffic (New Drivers) Act 1995 (c.13)
Land Registers (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.14)
Geneva Conventions (Amendment) Act 1995 (c.27)
Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995 (c.30)

The following Acts are not yet in force but are due to come into force fully or in part on fixed dates in 1996:

Motor Cycle Noise Act 1987 (c.34)

Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995 (c.12)

Merchant Shipping Act 1995 (c.21)

Shipping and Trading Interests (Protection) Act 1995 (c.22)

Goods Vehicles (Licensing of Operators) Act 1995 (c.23)

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Afghanistan

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assistance he proposes to give to Afghanistan, in light of recent developments in that country and following the new inter-agency consolidated appeal from the United Nations. [41959]

Mr. Hanley: Following a detailed review of aid to Afghanistan by an ODA-led mission earlier this summer and in light of the UN appeal launched in October, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has approved a package of further assistance amounting to £3.5 million, which will be provided through a number of UN agencies, as well as the International Red Cross and some UK-based non governmental organisations.

HEALTH

Retirement Ages

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average retirement age of national health service employees, per professional group, in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [40437]

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. and learned Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 3 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

Data is held centrally on the average age at retirement for the members of the NHS Pension Scheme in England and Wales over the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1994, split by broad professional groups. A more detailed breakdown by year of retirement is only available at disproportionate cost. The first table shows the average age at retirement in normal health excluding redundancies; the second table shows the average age on retirement in ill-health only.

Average age on normal retirement 1989–1994, excluding redundancies

GP Fundholding

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount of money being held on behalf of fundholders at regional level by region for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95. [36797]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is shown in the table. By 1994–95 there were 8,889 general practitioner fundholders covering 34 per cent. of the population, with budgets totalling £2.8 billion. Savings available for spending totalling £84 million—equivalent to 3 per cent. of 1994–95 budgets.

In any one year, a large proportion of the retained savings will date from the previous year and will not therefore be available for use until the final audit of fundholders' accounts has been completed. Savings may be retained for up to four years to be used for the benefit of patients of the practice.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38601]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of National Heritage on 31 October, Official Report, columns 186-87.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each NHS trust in the Trent region, those (a) chairmen and (b) non-executive directors who currently reside outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated. [38975]

Mr. Malone: For the latest information I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) and the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 2 November 1994, Official Report, columns 1231-32. This information is not routinely collected. In order to provide the answers given on 2 November 1994, a special exercise was conduced. To update this information would mean repeating that exercise and incurring a disproportionate cost of approximately £7,000.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to collate centrally the names of NHS trust chief executives who resign, or whose contracts are terminated together with the name of the trust involved and the amounts paid for loss of office; and if he will make a statement; [39545]

(2) if he will make it his policy to hold centrally records on how many employees of NHS trusts have been (a) dismissed, (b) made redundant, (c) given early retirement and (d) had their contracts revoked with compensation in excess of (i) the NHS redundancy provision, (ii) £100,000 gross and (iii) £250,000 gross; and if he will make a statement. [39543]

Mr. Malone: No.

Royal Hallamshire Hospital

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current research the Royal Hallamshire hospital, Sheffield is carrying out for his Department; and what research it has carried out during the last 12 months. [39568]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 October, Official Report, columns 35-37.

Prescription Drugs

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the 50 most expensive and 50 least expensive prescription drugs available in the NHS; what is the cost of each to the NHS; and how many prescriptions for each have been issued during the last 12 months for which records are available; [40698]

(2) what was the cost to the National Health Service of each of the 50 most commonly prescribed drugs for the latest available 12-month period; and how many prescriptions for each drug were issued. [40697]

Mr. Malone: The information requested cannot be supplied as it contains data which are confidential.

Cancer Specialists

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time cancer specialists are working in the NHS; in what specialties; and what were the corresponding numbers in each of the last five years. [40699]

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table by grade for cancer specialties in England at 30 September each year.

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many new beds have become available for psychiatric patients in NHS hospitals in 1995 and in each year since 1979; [41107]

(2) how many psychiatric patients have been moved from hospitals that have been closed down to alternative NHS hospitals in 1995 and in each year since 1979; [41105]

(3) how many psychiatric patients have moved from hospitals that have closed down to private psychiatric hospitals in 1995 and in each year since 1979. [41104]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current number of beds in private psychiatric hospitals; and what is was in each year since 1979. [41106]

Mr. Bowis: Information on the current number of beds in private hospitals in 1993–94 designated for mental illness and people with learning disabilities is published in "Private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984", copies of which are available in the Library.

Prior to 1993–94, the data did not differentiate between hospitals/clinics and nursing homes.

Ballon Angioplasty

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has participated in the research carried out by Dr. Julian Gunn, Professor David Cumberland and Professor David Crossman in respect of patients suffering from angina after receiving balloon angioplasty; and if he will make a statement. [40952]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 October, Official Report, columns 35–37.

Ecstasy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has commissioned to discover whether the drug Ecstasy is demethylenated by human cytochrome P.4502D6 (CYP 2D6); and if he will make a statement; [41004]

(2) what research his Department has commissioned to discover whether the drug Ecstasy is a substitute for human CYP 2D6; and if he will make a statement. [41005]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 October, Official Report, columns 35–37.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent to which the conditions imposed on private residential homes and nursing homes in Coventry are within the scope of legal requirements or his Department's guidelines. [40897]

Mr. Bowis: Responsibility for the regulation of private residential care homes and nursing homes lies with the local authority and health authority respectively. It is for them to ensure that homes comply with statutory requirements and to develop local standards for registration. Guidance issued recently to authorities promotes sensible, pragmatic and consistent approaches in setting standards.

Individual Treatments

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning his intention to remove grommets from the list of approved treatments; and what reasons were given for their removal. [41110]

Mr. Malone: No list of approved treatments exists. Health authorities and general practitioner fundholders are responsible for assessing the needs of the people they serve and deciding what treatments and services are required to meet those needs, within the framework of national priorities. Decisions about individual treatments are a matter for the individual clinician together with the patient, based on an assessment of clinical need, and taking account of available evidence of effectiveness.

Laryngectomies and Tracheotomies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will create a body that is able to answer questions and concerns from people who have undergone laryngectomies and tracheotomies. [39679]

Mr. Sackville: Surgeons and other professional staff in hospital ear, nose and throat departments are available to answer questions and address the concerns of patients undergoing this treatment. The National Association of Laryngectomy Clubs also provides advice and has branches attached to a number of hospitals which specialise in laryngectomies.

NHS Administration Costs

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the change in administration costs in the NHS since 1989–90; and how he intends to achieve the 5 per cent. cut in health authority spending on administration he announced on 11 October. [41516]

Mr. Malone: The table sets out health authority administration expenditure from 1989–90 to 1993–94, the latest year available. I expect the national health service executive regional offices to agree with individual authorities figures for the cost of running the authority for 1996–97 which will, in aggregate, deliver the 5 per cent. cash savings my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 11 October 1995.

Health authority administration expenditure 1989–90 to 1993–94

	£ million
1989–90	691

1992–93	900
1993–94	1,069

Source:
Summarised annual accounts of regional health authorities, district health authorities, special health authorities for the London postgraduate hospitals and family health services authorities/family practitioner committees.

Notes:
1. The figures represent the total revenue expenditure on pay and accommodation costs of staff of all disciplines and their support staff employed at headquarters levels.

2. RHA, DHA and SHA costs are reported in the accounts as "Authority administration and purchasing expenses". This includes capital charges from 1991–92. FHSA/FPC administration costs are those reported in the accounts as revenue administration costs and represent that part of the total expenditure which is not medical, dental, ophthalmic or pharmaceutical.

3. Changes in the years in the roles and responsibilities of family practitioner committees, which became family health services authorities in 1990, RHAs and DHAs, which started to transfer provider functions to NHS trusts in 1991–92, together with changes in accounting policies, particularly the inclusion of capital charges in health authorities' administration and purchasing expenditure, mean that the figures are not comparable.

Employment of Children

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his announcement of 30 October Official Report column 42-43 regarding changes in child employment law, if he will publish details of the representations he has received recommending that the limit on children's work of two hours on a Sunday be increased to between five and eight hours; and if he will list the organisations and their papers submitted in support of this proposed change to the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, as amended. [41388]

Mr. Bowis: The consultation I announced on 30 October is intended to provide us with the views of others on what in our view would be a sensible change to the current law.

Public Health Link

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what procedure general practitioners will be notified in the case of immediate category of notification procedure on the public health link system being activated. [41512]

Mr. Sackville: Following consultation with the profession, the chief medical officer wrote to all doctors on 24 February 1994 setting out the new arrangements for communications with the profession (PL CMO(94)3). Where there is a need to send information very quickly to doctors, the public health link system is activated. The message is transmitted electronically to district directors of public health who have the responsibility for forwarding it, with the minimum of delay, to the relevant health professionals. Every district has set up its own locally determined mechanisms for cascading the information. For example, some general practitioners would receive the information electronically via a local e-mail system, others by fax, others by courier, and in some instances the message could be conveyed by a telephone call.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of whether the public health link system of communications which uses the EPINET system will operate satisfactorily if the immediate category of notification procedure needs to be activated. [41511]

Mr. Sackville: The public health link system was set up in February 1994, following consultation with the profession and in response to a recognised need to get important urgent information to doctors. The system was first tested on 6 July 1994 when a test message was sent to district directors of public health to cascade to all doctors. This test message enabled districts to assess their local arrangements.

Since then the cascade system has been activated a further seven times, for example to provide information about Ebola virus and plague. The system has generally been welcomed and has worked well, though it is recognised that it is very difficult for each district to get information to each and every doctor within a few hours. Each use of the cascade has provided a valuable opportunity to assess and revise the local and central arrangements for cascading information. A list of the cascade messages, and chief medical officer letters and updates, is included in the annual report "On the State of the Public Health", copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whom he intends to consult in his review of the public health link procedure for notifying general practitioners that he announced in his statement to the House of 23 October, Official Report, columns 701–10, when he expects to conclude the review; and if he will publish the results. [41513]

Mr. Sackville: The review of arrangements for communicating urgent information to all doctors has already started. The results of the review will be discussed with the profession. We shall ensure that the conclusions from that review will be acted upon.

Dental Services

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by family health services authority the number of people registered with NHS dentists in England in (a) December 1993, (b) July 1994, (c) December 1994 and (d) July 1995. [41514]

Mr. Malone: This information will be placed in the Library.

Waiting Times

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement regarding the waiting times for patients of general practitioner fundholders and the patients of general practitioners who are not fundholders in the North and Mid-Hampshire health commission area. [41515]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

WALES

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40749]

Mr. Hague: The information is not readily available in respect of all transport and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The cost of ministerial use of the official car service, a significant element of ministerial travel arrangements, over the five years is as follows:

1990–91: £144,209

1991–92: £158,535

1992–93: £170,062

1993–94: £174,069

1994–95: £176,452

Ministers who use their own vehicles are paid normal civil service rates. The cost in 1994–95 was £1,020 and in 1995–96 to date, £915. The cost of the previous three years is not readily available.

Council House Sales

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales he will list by local housing authority, (a) the amount each authority has used from the sale of council houses since April 1981 to pay off its debts, (b) the amount each authority currently has on deposit from the sale of council houses and (c) the amount saved in interest payments on debts in the case of (a) and the amount received in interest in the case of (b). [40689]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is given in the following tables.

Local authority returns.

Failure to use sale proceeds to redeem existing debt would have resulted in correspondingly higher outstanding loan debt and correspondingly increased interest charges paid by council taxpayers in Wales.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the technical meeting between his officials and those of the regional development directorate of the European Commission in relation to the supply of information material to the Welsh Office reduced grant in aid to the Welsh Development Agency and the additionality principle. [37814]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 19 October 1995]: I am pleased to say that the Commission has now accepted that European structural funds are properly spent in Wales and has released all previously blocked resources. Agreement has also been reached on improving the presentation of European regional development fund support made to the WDA and other public bodies in Wales.

Veterinary Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the availability of Welsh Office veterinary services in mid Wales. [39808]

Mr. Hague: The Government's veterinary field service provides veterinary services throughout Great Britain. VFS officers are employed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, but on a wide range of subjects, state veterinary service officers working in Wales do so on my behalf, in view of my responsibilities for matters such as farm animal health, welfare and meat hygiene.

A review of the VFS earlier this year recommended an improved and streamlined management structure, and the Government announced on 4 May a number of changes to the VFS. In future there will be fewer, larger VFS divisions, altering from four to three in Wales. The future VFS divisional offices in Wales will be located at Cardiff, Carmarthen and Caernarfon. The present VFS divisional office at Llandrindod Wells will remain as an area office, as will the current area office at Ruthin. The number of front-line veterinary and technical staff will stay the same.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost of the assisted places scheme in Wales for each of the last three years for which figures are available. [40466]

Mr. Hague: Expenditure in Wales on the assisted places scheme for each of the financial years 1992–93 to 1994–95 was £2,457,230, £2,621,261 and £2,771,504 respectively.

Primary School Pupils

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many primary school pupils were taught in classes of more than 30 pupils, in total and as a percentage of all pupils, in each local authority in (a) January 1994 and (b) January 1995. [40429]

Mr. Hague: On the basis of provisional January 1995 schools census figures, there were some 67,800 pupils in ordinary classes of more than 30 in maintained primary schools in Wales in January 1994 and approximately 72,500 in January 1995; these pupils represented 26.5 per cent. of all pupils in ordinary classes in January 1994 and 28.0 per cent. in January 1995.

Information on the basis of individual local authorities is not currently available.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average annual cost of educating a primary school pupil in a class of 30 pupils. [40430]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

AGCO-Massey Ferguson Merger

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he or his officials have had regarding the AGCO takeover of certain Massey Ferguson operations in Coventry; and what notification he has received of expected job losses. [41284]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None. In the first instance, it is for the Director General of Fair Trading to consider and advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on all qualifying mergers under the Fair Trading Act 1973. That advice would take into account all relevant factors.

Investment (United States)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives he has taken to attract United Kingdom firms to invest in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement. [40576]

Mr. Nelson: United Kingdom companies have a long history of investing in the United States. It is the most popular destination for direct investment overseas and the United Kingdom is the largest foreign investor in the United States.

My Department encourages British companies to consider the investment option in drawing up strategies for doing business with American companies. As one element of the "North America Now" trade promotion campaign we have a programme of help for United Kingdom companies seeking strategic partners in north America.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000, (iii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–86, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93, (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96. [40815]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 1 November 1995]: Other than pension contributions, benefits in kind are not normally paid to staff in the department, agencies and NDPBs. No individual—in the Department, its agencies or its NDPBs has received remuneration, excluding pension benefits, above £100,000 in any of the years specified.

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96. [40816]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 1 November 1995]: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary in all three organisations fell within the band:

1994–95: £4,000–£8,999
1995–96: £4,000–£8,999

The highest full-time salary relating to civil servants in agencies fell within the bands:

1994–95: £65,000–£69,999
1995–96: £70,000–£74,999

and in the Department:

1994–95: £95,000–£99,999
1995–96: £95,000–£99,999

The highest full-time salary relating to non-civil servants in NDPB's fell within the band:

1994–95: £95,000–£99,999
1995–96: £95,000–£99,999

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 460, what percentage of existing contracts have gone to British firms; when he expects the award of the cladding contract to be announced; and how many (a) UK cladding firms and (b) other firms have been invited to tender for the cladding contract. [40682]

Mr. Ray Powell: Many of the companies which are invited to tender for the new parliamentary building contracts are multi-national in either their ownership or their operations, or both. Consequently it is not possible to provide a precise answer about the use of "British firms".

Of the three major contracts let to date, two went to a British-based company. Numerous smaller contracts have been awarded for work which has been carried out almost entirely in the UK although the companies may not have been UK owned.

The tender list for the fenestration units reflected the fact that the cladding industry tends to be dominated by continental European companies. Initially, five companies were invited to tender at least two of which have a significant UK presence. Negotiations are still underway to determine which of the offers is the most competitive in terms of both time and cost. An announcement is not expected this year.

SCOTLAND

Waverley Court, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his best estimate of the total cost to the public purse of keeping Waverley court at Foxbar in Paisley empty for six years following a decision by Scottish Homes to dispose of it to the private sector; what were the costs in terms of (a) lost rental income, (b) resettlement allowances, (c) decoration payments, (d) removal expenses, (e) furniture storage expenses, (f) other rehousing payments and costs, (g) staff time in developing the package, (h) staff time in consultation with individual tenants or groups of tenants, (i) staff time in briefing, consulting, guiding and instructing outside bodies, (j) staff time in working with potential developers, (k) loss of rental income for the whole period, (l) all consultancy fees relating to the building during the whole period and (m) other costs; what will be the cost of demolishing the building and clearing the site; what action he intends to take to ensure such events cannot occur again; and if he will make a statement. [39188]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes and I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will seek a meeting with the chairman of Scottish Homes to discuss the cost to the public purse of its decision to evacuate Waverley court at Foxbar in Paisley six years ago; if he will instruct an investigation into the circumstances which caused Scottish Homes to seek disposal of the building to the private sector without first checking that private sector financiers were willing to lend or enter into mortgages on the property or its component parts; if he will instruct the board of Scottish Homes to instruct disciplinary investigations arising from the performance of its officials in this episode; and if he will launch a full-scale investigation into the loss of public funds; [39189]

(2) if he will launch a public inquiry into the possible misuse of public funds, maladministration and negligence of Scottish Homes in relation to Waverley court at Foxbar in Paisley. [39173]

Mr. Robertson: My right hon. Friend is aware of the corrrespondence between the hon. Member and the chairman of Scottish Homes and has no plans to initiate any inquiry into the matter.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list visits made by him and each of his Ministers since they were appointed to the Scottish Office, and if he will make a statement. [39207]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since taking up my present appointment I have made one visit overseas. This was to the Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 26 October. Details of visits undertaken by other Scottish Office Ministers are given in the table.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants or other financial assistance have been awarded by the Scottish Office, in the financial year 1995–96, to organisations representing children with specific speech or language disorders; and what assistance has been given to organisations representing children with other physical disadvantages. [40170]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: A range of organisations represent children with special educational needs, including children with physical disadvantages and also speech and language disorders. Funding has been given by the Scottish Office to the following organisations in this area in the current financial year.

Organisation	Amount £
Children in Scotland	170,000
Disability Scotland	275,592
*en*ABLE	25,755

Royal National Institute for the Blind	27,000
Scottish Association for the Deaf	7,993
Sense Scotland	47,083
Scottish Council for Spastics	24,000
Spinal Injuries Scotland	15,372

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the organisations listed as useful contacts in the Scottish Office parents' guide to special educational needs (a) provide a helpline to families on record of needs, (b) provide written guidance or advice to supplement the official literature on record of needs arrangements and procedures and (c) provide support or speak for parents of children at record of needs meetings or appeals. [40169]

Mr. Robertson: The 27 organisations listed in the parents' guide to special educational needs provide a variety of advice and assistance to parents of children and young persons with special educational needs. Detailed information on the services offered by each of the organisations listed is not held centrally; however, their telephone numbers are listed.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants or other financial assistance have been awarded by the Scottish Office, in the financial year 1995–96, to organisations currently listed in the Scottish Office parents' guide to special educational needs to enable them to equip themselves with the necessary information to offer appropriate advice or guidance to parents. [40173]

Mr. Robertson: Of the organisations listed in the current edition of a parents' guide to special educational needs, those shown have received funding from the Scottish Office in the current financial year. It is not possible to say what proportion of the funding shown is used by the organisations for provisions of advice or guidance to parents of children with special educational needs. Detailed information on that aspect is a matter for the individual organisation concerned.

Organisation	Amount (£)

New Homes

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new homes have been started by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in each year since 1974; and what is his estimate of the likely number of starts in 1995–96 and 1996–97. [39929]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) on 24 October, Official Report, column 510.

Beaufort Dyke

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the full nature and extent of the independent marine survey of the Beaufort dyke area announced by his Department on 24 October with particular reference to (a) sonary soundings, (b) investigation by divers, (c) other physical checks and (d) video investigations; if he will undertake to publish the report in full; and if he will make a statement. [40221]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 30 October 1995]: The Under-Secretary with responsibility for industry—my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch)—told the House on 24 October, that the routine monitoring survey, planned for next spring by the Department's marine laboratory, Aberdeen to determine the effect on the marine environment of the munitions dump sites in the Beaufort dyke area, would be brought forward to mid-November this year. In view of the Government's concern for public safety over the arrival of large quantities of phosphorus canisters on the foreshore of the Clyde estuary and surrounding islands, the survey has been extended in an attempt to identify their source and whether they were disturbed by recent pipeline trenching operations in the area. The fisheries research vessel Clupea will undertake the survey in mid-November. The work will comprise:

> analysis of sea bed sediment samples and a trawl survey to confirm that there has been no environmental contamination resulting from munitions dumping; > exploratory under-water television studies and side-scan sonar investigations to confirm the distribution of any dumped munitions;
> analysis of commercially exploited fish and shellfish species to ascertain the presence of contaminants that may be related to dumping activity;

The survey will not include investigation by divers.

The results of the survey will be published when available.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are employed by the Forestry Commission on (a) a part-time and (b) a full-time basis in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland. [40670]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 1 November 1995]: The number of people employed by the Forestry Commission is:

Country	Part-time employees	Full-time employees
Scotland	166	1,859
England	161	1,315
Wales	45	474

These figures do not include contractors working in Forestry Commission forests.

The Forestry Commission does not operate in Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much land (a) in acres and (b) in percentage terms is owned by the Forestry Commission in (i) Scotland (ii) England (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland. [40671]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 1 November 1995]: The information is as follows:

Country	Forestry Commission land (acres)	Percentage of total land in each country
England	660,000	2.1
Scotland	1,700,000	8.9
Wales	331,000	6.5

The Forestry Commission does not manage land in Northern Ireland.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Higher Education

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the proportion of young people from Northern Ireland entering higher education in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [29023]

Mr. Ancram: The proportion of young people from Northern Ireland entering higher education was 36.4 in 1993–94 and 37.2—provisional—in 1994–95.

Fold Housing Association

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extend the figure in the Department of the Environment approved rules of 15 per cent. to 20 per cent. of tenants in the Fold Housing Association being actively able to help its fellow tenants is being met; and what assessment he had made of the adequacy of the target figure. [40559]

Mr. Moss: Information on Fold Housing Association's target balance between active and less active tenants in sheltered housing is not collated or monitored by the Department. The need for such a balance is currently being considered in a review of the social housing needs of older people which is jointly being carried out by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the Northern Ireland Federation of Housing Associations. It is hoped that the report will be produced before the end of this year. I will arrange for copies to be forwarded to the hon. and learned Member and placed in the Library.

Tuition Fees (Grants)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many students from Northern Ireland have their tuition fees paid while attending educational institutions in the Irish Republic; [40560]

(2) what are the estimated savings to the Northern Ireland budget from the 1996–97 academic year onwards arising from students from Northern Ireland at public sector educational institutions in the Irish Republic no longer being required to have their tuition fees paid by education and library boards in Northern Ireland; and how many students in the last year have been paid grants in respect of their applications meeting the eligibility requirement of United Kingdom residence and schooling in the Irish Republic during the last three years. [40561]

Mr. Ancram: In the 1994–95 academic year tuition fees were paid for 1,622 students from Northern Ireland attending education institutions in the republic of Ireland. Final figures are not available for the current academic year.

The savings referred to are estimated at £1.7 million in the 1996–97 financial year and at £2 million in both the 1997–98 and 1998–99 financial year.

Some 583, 891 and 1,370 Northern Ireland students attending institutions of higher education in the Republic of Ireland were in receipt of maintenance grant in the last three academic years.

Graduates

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the number of Northern Ireland graduates, (b) the number and proportion of graduates recruited in the Northern Ireland civil service, (c) the number of recruits overall, (d) the number and proportion of the total who were graduates and were taken on in jobs where a degree was an eligibility requirement, (e) the number and proportion of recruits to the general and administrative grades where a degree was a requirement and (f) the number of graduates recruited to grades where a degree was not an eligibility requirement in each of the last three years. [40562]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of Northern Ireland graduates for 1992–93 and 1993–94, and the number of recruits overall and details of graduates recruited to permanent non-industrial posts in the Northern Ireland civil service for 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 are set out in the following table:

	1992–93	Per cent.	1993–94	Per cent.	1994–95	Per cent.
(a) Number of NI graduates[1]	3,843	—	4,220	—	n/a	—
(b) Number and proportion of graduates recruited to NI Civil Service	277	7.2	102	2.4	99	n/a
(c) Number of recruits overall to NI Civil Service[2]	1,554	—	633	—	540	—
(d) Number and proportion of recruits where degree required	132	47.6	36	35.3	40	40.4
(e) Number and proportion of recruits to general and administrative grades where degree required	6	2.2	6	5.9	1	1.0
(f) Number of graduates recruited where degree not required	142	—	66	—	54	—

[1] Northern Ireland domiciled graduates from Northern Ireland universities. Figures not yet available for 1994–95.

[2] Non-industrial permanent recruits. Includes recruits who obtained a degree since appointment.

Community Alarms

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultation he had with health and social services boards or trusts prior to issuing guidance to social security offices which led to applicants requiring community alarms being refused community care grants to purchase them; and when he intends to rectify the situation. [41474]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Clifford Forsythe, dated 3 November 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the provision of Community Care Grants for Community Alarm Systems.

I should first of all assure you that there has been no recent change in policy regarding the provision of grants from the Social Fund for Community Alarm systems. The position is that the Health and Social Service Boards/Trusts (HSSB/Ts) are responsible for the provision of a wide range of services under the government's community care policies. This provision can include community alarm systems, but it is a matter for the individual Boards to decide what resources should be made available from their overall budget for any particular form of help.

Social Fund Community Care Grants complement these provisions and a person who is getting Income Support may be entitled to a grant for the purchase of a Community Alarm System. In considering awards, Social Fund Officers must look carefully at all the circumstances of each individual case including the possibility that help may be available from another source such as the HSSB/Ts. Thus the need for close liaison between the Social Security Agency and the local social services departments.

Internal procedural guidance on this subject was issued earlier in the year but unfortunately some offices did not interpret this correctly and applicants were wrongly advised to contact the HSSB/Ts for help. Steps have already been taken to ensure that all applications for Community Care Grants for community alarms are handled correctly. In addition, offices have been asked to identify and review those cases which were incorrectly handled.

I hope this helps explain the position for you.

Bankruptcy Petitions

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many petitions for bankruptcy have been begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years. [40514]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 1 November 1995]: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Rate Collection Agency under its chief executive, Mr. D. W. Gallagher. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. W. Gallagher to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 2 November 1995:

You asked the Secretary of State how many Petitions for Bankruptcy have begun by his Department for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years.

The numbers of Petitions for Bankruptcy and Winding-Up actions begun by the Rate Collection Agency for businesses with under 500 employees in each of the last five years is as follows:

1991–92: 27

1992–93: 147

1993–94: 92

1994–95: 94

1995–96: 60

I hope you find this information helpful.

TREASURY

Unemployment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of unemployment among 16 to 24-year-olds from ethnic minority backgrounds in each year since 1992–93. [39677]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Estimates from the labour force survey are shown in the table.

ILO unemployed persons aged 16 to 24 from ethnic minority groups Great Britain

Spring	Number
1992	76,000
1993	77,000
1994	74,000
1995	76,000

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of unemployment among 16 to 24-year-olds in each year since 1992–93. [39676]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 2 November 1995]: Claimant unemployment by age, for the months of January, April, July and October, and ILO unemployment by age, for the quarters spring, summer, autumn and winter, can be obtained from the NOMIS database accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the progress of litigation between the liquidators of BCCI and the Bank of England. [41332]

Mrs. Knight: The matter is before the court and it is not possible to comment further in these circumstances.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss the liquidation of BCCI and the issue of the liquidators' writ against the Bank of England. [41333]

Mrs. Knight: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor and the Governor meet regularly to discuss a range of issues.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many full-time equivalent staff were employed by the Inland Revenue on tax evasion investigations and at what cost in each of the last five years. [37923]

Mr. Jack: Approximate numbers of staff units—full-time equivalent staff—and their cost, are as follows:

	Staff units	Cost £m
1990–91	3,200	103
1991–92	3,400	115
1992–93	3,500	124
1993–94	3,800	137
1994–95	4,400	166

The figures for 1994–95 cannot be compiled on a basis exactly comparable with earlier years, owing to a change in the way these figures are maintained. Unlike previous years, they include details of staff employed on all employer compliance work.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average contribution to personal or occupational pension schemes by employees (a) under 40 years old, (b) between 40 and 50 years old and (c) over 50 years old, expressing the figures both in cash terms and as a percentage of gross income. [39092]

Mr. Jack: Latest provisional information for 1995–96 is as follows:

Age	Average contribution to a personal or occupational pension scheme £	As a percentage of Gross income	Income from employment
Under 40	800	4.5	4.5
Between 40 and 50	1,100	5.0	5.5
Over 50	1,200	5.5	6.5

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary; [39431]

(2) if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his office makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, with the total annual budget of each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39468]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Chancellor's Departments and agencies make no appointments to non-departmental public bodies in the county of South Yorkshire.

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are currently employed in his Department and in related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work force; and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41111]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Breakdowns by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—normally those engaged for a period of up to 12 months, but exceptionally up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis for 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Child Benefit

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of employment changes each year to parents of children eligible to child benefit. [41139]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The latest available estimates from the labour force survey show that in spring 1994 there were 9.3 million parents in Great Britain who were eligible to claim child benefit—with a child aged zero to 15 or 18 or under full-time education. Among those in this group who were in employment in both spring 1993 and spring 1994, 757,000 changed their employment at least once during the intervening period.

Regional Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown for the current financial year for each standard planning region in England, for expenditure on (a) agriculture, fisheries, food and forestry, (b) trade, industry, energy and employment, (c) road and transport, (d) housing, (e) other environmental services, (f) law, order and protection services, (g) education, (h) national heritage, (i) health and personal social services and (j) social security. [41050]

Mr. Waldegrave: No information is currently available on expenditure in 1995–96 attributed to each English standard planning region. An annual exercise to collect regional figures for general Government expenditure for one outturn year only is carried out annually. A functional breakdown of regional expenditure will be given for financial year 1993–94 in the statistical supplement to the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", which will be published in March 1996.

Michael Allcock

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Ministers have signed public interest immunity certificates in the case of Inland Revenue v. Michael Allcock. [38195]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 October 1995]: No Treasury Minister has signed public interest immunity certificates in connection with the prosecution of the Inland Revenue employee, Michael Allcock, which is being conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the cost of tax relief in the latest available year for capital allowances to businesses with gross profits of (a) £1 million, (b) £2 million, (c) £3 million, (d) £4 million, (e) £5 million and (f) £10 million. [40770]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The latest estimates for 1995–96 are:

£ million

Business with gross profits (lower limit)	Cost of Tax relief for capital allowances
[1]0	3,500
1	500
2	500
3	300
4	300
5	1,100
10	9,000
Total	15,200

[1] Includes businesses with current year losses.

Economic and Finance Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU ECOFIN Council of 23 October. [40114]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 1 November 1995]: I represented the United Kingdom at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Union in Luxembourg on 23 October.

The Council welcomed Finland's convergence programme.

The Council agreed, in principle, that a single, short report on employment prepared by representatives of the Economic Policy Committee, the Commission and the Social Affairs Council be submitted to the Madrid European Council.

The Council considered a communication from the Commission on the approximation of excise duty rates, in which all that is proposed is further detailed consultation.

The Council discussed the loan guarantee fund and specifically the level of the guarantee from the Community budget for European investment banks external lending. Most member states agreed that the level of the guarantee should be reduced from 100 per cent. to 75 per cent. It was decided that further work was required on the conditions of the guarantee.

The Council mandated the Committee of Perparent Representatives and the financial questions working group to continue work on a Commission proposal for a directive on a carbon/energy tax, providing a framework for those member states wishing to levy such a tax.

There were discussions with the Finance and Economic Ministers of the central and east European countries on banking and financial issues.

National Lottery

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if it is his policy to review the 12 per cent. tax rate set in relation to expenditure on the national lottery; and if he will make a statement; [40831]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect on the annual total tax yield as a consequence of the establishment and tax treatment of the national lottery; if he will publish his Departments assessment; and if he will make a statement. [40826]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 1 November 1995]: The then Chancellor, the right hon. Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont), said in his Budget statement on 16 March 1993, Official Report column 192:

> "I have taken into account the level of tax on other forms of gambling and the extent to which spending is likely to be diverted from other taxed activities. Much, of course, will depend on how the lottery develops and I shall keep the position under review, but for the first year of its operation, I propose that national lottery tickets should be taxed at a rate of 12 per cent.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor has kept the position under review, but I cannot anticipate his Budget statement.

Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when (a) the recommendations of the pay review bodies and (b) the Government's conclusions on the pay review bodies will be published. [40732]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 2 November 1995]: We expect to publish the pay review body reports by early February as usual, and to give the Government's response at the same time.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Fisheries Council of 26 October. [40116]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 1 November 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Medway (Dame P. Fenner) on 31 October, Official Report, columns 213–14.

Late Payment (Small Businesses)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how often his Department and each agency within it has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. [40535]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 1 November 1995]: The information is not available in the format requested. From 1991 to 1994 prompt payment performance was measured by a manual sampling process, not restricted to small businesses. This sampling established MAFF's overall payment performance including payments to farm businesses, many of which will be small businesses, as:

1990–91: not recorded

1991–92: 77 per cent.

1992–93: 85 per cent.

1993–94: 85 per cent.

1994–95: n/a—see below

During 1994 MAFF was in the process of installing a computerised payments system and as a result consistent, statistically valid data on prompt payment performance could not be collected. Data emerging from the new system indicate 85.41 per cent. of all payments made by MAFF in the first quarter of 1995–96 were made by the due date. Strategies are in place to provide more refined data from 1 April 1996, including performance on payments to small business; and to use these data to secure further improvements in MAFF's prompt payment record.

Responsibility for this matter is delegated to agencies, and I have asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 3 November 1995:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your question regarding payment of invoices has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency. As you may know, the MHS was established on 1 April this year. Therefore, we do not have sufficient data to provide you with an answer, such information would be collated after a full year of operation. [40535]

I can advise you, however, that the MHS is committed to payment of all invoices within timescales agreed with our suppliers. We have procedures in place to monitor payments to ensure that this is adhered to. In particular, we pay careful attention to the payment of our veterinary contractors. We have 176 practices supplying the majority of our veterinary services in meat plants. It is important to us that we maintain good working relations with these practices, many of which are small firms. We realise that one of the best ways of doing this is through prompt payment of their bills and ensure that this is done.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 3 November 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on the timing of invoice payments to small businesses. [40535]

Over the last five years, the policy of the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (known as the Central Veterinary Laboratory until 30 September 1995) has been to pay all invoices within 30 days. Where we know that we are dealing with a small business, we aim to pay within 5 to 10 days. We are not aware of any failures to apply this policy although, clearly, in cases of disputes with suppliers, settlement will tend to take a little longer.

Letter from Professor P. I. Stanley to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 3 November 1995:

You asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about the number of times his Department and Agencies have failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days in each of the last five years. The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) became a MAFF executive agency in April 1992 and the Minister has asked me to reply to you in respect of the period since then, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible. [40535]

When CSL invoices are paid no differentiation is made between the size of businesses and so, the information is not available in the form you have requested. However since 1993 the Agency has measured overall prompt payment performance by manual sampling of supplier invoices. This sampling indicates that the percentage of invoices paid within 30 days of the invoice date has been as follows:

1993/94: 80%

1994/95: 90%

1995/96: 86%

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 3 November 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question about payment of invoices to small businesses. [40535]

The Pesticides Safety Directorate was established as an Agency on 1 April 1993. We continue to rely on the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to effect our payments and up to the time of our relocation to York in October 1994 it was not possible to identify our payment processing performance separately from that of our core Department. Since our relocation we have put in place a system to monitor performance on a sample basis. Our records show that so far during 1995/96, 98% of all valid invoices and 100% of invoices to small businesses have been paid within 30 days of receipt.

Letter from Phillip Needham to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 3 November 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question (Number 1953) in which you asked how often each Agency has failed to pay invoices due to small businesses within 30 days for the last five years. [40535]

ADAS was formed as a Next Steps Agency in 1992. In our Report and Accounts 1994/95 (which is lodged in the library of the House of Commons), we state that it is our policy to pay suppliers against invoice within agreed trading terms.

Unfortunately, we could not extract the information you require without disproportionate costs to this agency.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter, to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 3 November 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the time taken by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) to pay invoices due to small businesses, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

In arranging payment of invoices, we make no distinction between those due to small or large businesses, but aim to pay them all within 30 days or the terms of the invoice if less. Since the VMD was established as a Next Steps Agency in April 1990, payment of invoices has been carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on our behalf. Information on core MAFF payment performance contained in the reply to your question from the Minister, therefore also embraces that for the VMD.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been relocated to Doncaster because of disturbances at other establishments since Doncaster prison was opened; what was their grade; and if he will make a statement. [40950]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners who have been relocated to Doncaster because of disturbances at other establishments since Doncaster prison was opened; their grade, and if he will make a statement.

Doncaster prison received a number of convicted prisoners from Everthorpe prison after a disturbance there on 2/3 January 1995. Doncaster has also received other individual prisoners involved in disturbances at other prisons, but these figures are not recorded locally or at Prison Service headquarters.

Clacton Police Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department was notified by Essex police force that a time capsule was being buried beneath Clacton police station on 23 August; what was the cost of the operation; what was placed in the capsules; and if he will make a statement. [40951]

Mr. Maclean: Neither I nor my Department would expect to be notified about such a local matter. I understand that the capsule, which cost £50, was buried in the foundations of the new police station now being constructed in Clacton at no additional cost to the building project. It contains some 29 items among which are a photograph album of the old station, handcuffs, fingerprinting kit, custody record and a book of comments by serving staff. Although the decision is an entirely local one, it seems to me an entirely suitable and inexpensive way of preserving for posterity the hard work and endeavours of these local police officers who serve their community so well.

Boot Camps

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the planned regimes for the proposed boot camps. [40639]

Miss Widdecombe: On 18 September, my right hon. and learned Friend announced details of the new high intensity training regime to be introduced next June at Thorn Cross young offender institution. The regime will have discipline and hard work as its foundation and the emphasis will be on personal responsibility underlined throughout by very strict standards of behaviour. A typical day will begin at 6 am sharp with drill followed by an intensive schedule of training, education, work and other physical activity. The day will end with lights out at 10 pm.

Discussions are taking place between officials from the Prison Service and Ministry of Defence about the possibility of establishing a young offender institution at the military corrective training centre at Colchester.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimates he has made of the proportion of asylum seekers originating from (a) Sri Lanka and (b) Nigeria who reached the United Kingdom via a last point of departure in the European continent in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement on the practice of interrupted travel to the final destination; [40708]

(2) what proportion of applications for asylum from nationals of (a) Sri Lanka, (b) Nigeria and (c) Algeria are made by persons already resident in the United Kingdom as visitors, tourists and students; and if he will make a statement. [40707]

Mr. Kirkhope: The number of applications made by nationals of Sri Lanka, Nigeria and Algeria and the percentages of when the application was made is given in the table.

Information on the number of applications for asylum from people who reached the United Kingdom via another European country is not separately identifiable.

Asylum applications of nationals of Sri Lanka, Nigeria and Algeria, January to September 1995

	Sri Lanka	Nigeria	Algeria
Total asylum applications	1,510	4,550	1,409
Applied in-country of which:
those with leave to remain	7 per cent.	14 per cent.	12 per cent.
out-of-time applications	4 per cent.	20 per cent.	8 per cent.
illegal entrants and means of entry unknown	38 per cent.	47 per cent.	68 per cent.
Applied at port of entry	51 per cent.	19 per cent.	12 per cent.

Female Prison Escapees

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prisoners have (a) escaped from an establishment, (b) escaped from an escort, (c) attempted to escape from an establishment, (d) attempted to escape from an escort, (e) absconded from an establishment and (f) absconded from an escort, in each of the last three years. [40640]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 3 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many female prisoners have (a) escaped from an establishment; (b) escaped from an escort; (c) attempted to escape from an establishment; (d) attempted to escape from an escort; (e) absconded from an establishment; and (f) absconded from an escort, in each of the last three years.

The information is given in the attached table. There are no absconds from escort—only escapes.

	Escapes from establishment	Escapes from escort[1]	Attempted escape from escort	Attempted escape from escort	Abscond from establishment
1 April 1992–31 March 1993	6	9	—	4	126
1 April 1993–31 March 1994	1	8	—	2	126
1 April 1994–31 March 1995	5	6	2	6	174
1 April 1995–30 September 1995	—	2	—	1	54

[1] Includes escapes from the court escort service which would have been the responsibility of the police service in previous years (1 in 1993).

1. Figures for escapes from escort exclude recaptures within 15 minutes provided that no further offence has been committed.

2. Figures for attempted escapes and attempted escapes from escort include those recaptured within 15 minutes where no further offence was committed.

Prison Officers

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total numbers of (a) prison officers, (b) senior officers, (c) principal officers and (d) prisoner custody officers, in the Prison Service; if he will list the number and percentage of each grade who are identified as of ethnic minority origin; and if he will make a statement. [40455]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 3 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of staff in the prison officer grades and equivalents in the Prison Service and the number of those who are of ethnic minority origin.

The information for 3 October 1995 is given in the following table.

Grade	Total number	Number from ethnic minorities	Per cent of total
Prison Officer	19,539	476	2.4
Senior Officer	3,531	43	1.2
Principal Officer	1,332	8	0.6

On the same date there were 728 prisoner custody officers at contractually managed prisons, of whom 23 (3.16%) were from ethnic minorities.

DNA Samples

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 11,000 DNA samples referred to in his speech of 12 October and held by the national centre were taken from (a) persons suspected of crime, (b) persons subsequently convicted of crime and (c) other persons; how many of these persons have been notified that their samples continue to be held; and for how long they will be held. [39957]

Mr. Maclean: A precise breakdown of the samples held on the national DNA database on 12 October is not available.

The database currently contains approximately 11,200 profiles from samples taken from individuals under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, as amended, and approximately 600 profiles from crime scene samples. Profiles derived from samples taken from people who are not suspected of crime but who volunteer to participate in mass screenings are not held on the database.

On the retention of samples, I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to his question on 31 October, Official Report, column 166.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is not allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38602]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister of State, Department of National Heritage on 31 October, Official Report, columns 186–87.

African National Congress Office (Bombing)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of Thursday 22 June, Official Report, column 471, if he will give a progress report on the investigation into the bombing of the London office of the ANC in 1982; and he will place a copy of the report, when complete, in the Library. [41133]

Mr. Howard: I understand that, as part of this continuing investigation, officers from the Metropolitan police service hope to travel to South Africa this month to interview several people, after which they would submit a further report to the Crown Prosecution Service. Such reports cannot be made public for legal reasons, but the police will write to the hon. Member on conclusion of the investigation.

Football Clubs (Police Charges)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons football clubs in different parts of the country are charged different hourly rates for police officers of comparable rank; [41177]

(2) what was the hourly rate charged to (a) Manchester United FC and (b) Chelsea FC for the presence of (i) a chief superintendent, (ii) a superintendent, (iii) a chief inspector, (iv) an inspector, (v) a police sergeant, and (vi) a police constable; and if he will give the reasons for the differences between (a) and (b). [41205]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 November 1995]: The Police Act 1964 gives discretion over charging for police special services to the local police authority. Home Office guidance, based on Audit Commission recommendations, is that charges should be set at the level which will enable full cost recovery to be achieved. We would therefore expect charges to vary where the force incurs higher costs, for example in paying London weighting and London allowance or in paying rest-day rates to officers who are deployed on overtime.

The charges currently payable by Manchester United FC and by Chelsea FC are set out in the table:

Rank	Hourly charge payable[1]
	By Manchester United FC to Greater Manchester Police[2] £	By Chelsea FC to the Metropolitan Police £
Constable	29.91	28.63
Sergeant	35.17	34.75
Inspector	43.34	43.88
Chief Inspector	46.96	47.25
Superintendent	58.36	53.50
Chief Superintendent	63.33	57.50

[1] Charges (exclusive of VAT) as at 1 September 1995. Rates may vary on public holidays or if the force is given reduced notice that the match is to be played.

[2] Greater Manchester police have recently revised their estimates of the full cost of their special services. Better estimates of central overheads (together with the recent police pay rises) have resulted in a 20 per cent. increase in charging rates.

TRANSPORT

Marine Safety Agency

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the Marine Safety Agency's budget has been over the last five years; what it is for 1996–97 and if he will make a statement. [40305]

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency was established on 1 April 1994 and the gross budgets for the first two years of operation are as follows:

1994–95: £31.7 million

1995–96: £30.8 million

The budget for 1996–97 has not yet been settled.

Flags of Convenience

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the trends in the use of flags of convenience. [40366]

Mr. Norris: Shipowners are free to choose the flag under which their ships operate and will be influenced in their choice by a number of factors. Internationally, there has been a trend over the last 25 years for greater use of open registers. We are aiming to improve the competitive position of British shipping and to make the use of the Red Ensign more attractive through a range of positive measures outlined to the House by the then Secretary of State on 21 April 1994, Official Report, columns 1077–78. However, while flag states may legitimately seek to encourage ships onto their registers, we do not believe that it is acceptable for shipowners to register ships with flag states which do not have the capability of supervising the safety of their ships, or which do not do so effectively.

The Government are determined to take a strong line against substandard shipping whatever flag it flies. Accordingly, the Marine Safety Agency inspects 30 per cent. of foreign ships visiting UK ports and also publishes monthly lists of those ships which are detained. We also fully support work in the International Maritime Organisation to improve compliance with international conventions.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40743]

Mr. Norris: The cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years has been :

1995–96: £125,000 (First 6 months of current financial year)

1994–95: £288,000

1993–94: £286,000

1992–93: £280,000

1991–92: £219,000

1990–91: £186,000

Motor mileage allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles. The cost in the current and previous two financial years is as follows. Information before that is not available.

1995–96: None to date

1994–95: £43.26

1993–94: £56.12

Transport Policies and Programmes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on allowing unspent TPP to be carried over into the next financial year. [41003]

Mr. Norris: Under the TPP system, the Department of Transport makes capital allocations for local transport infrastructure by means of transport supplementary grant, grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968, annual capital guideline, and supplementary credit approval. The allocation of TSG in the annual local transport settlement is adjusted to take account of the amount underspent in past years. As section 56 grant is paid in arrears, the question of unspent resources does not arise. ACG is a borrowing approval that can be used on any local authority service. It is not recoverable and authorities have wide discretion over its use. SCA is allocated for a specific financial year. Local authorities are required to surrender the unused portion of their allocation.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are taken by his Department to ensure that sites of special scientific interest are not damaged by road development. [40990]

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 3 November 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, what measures are taken by his Department to ensure that Sites of Special Scientific Interest are not damaged by road development.

My Department has a long standing policy of keeping trunk roads away from protected areas such as Sites for Special Scientific Interest (SSSIs), so far as is reasonable possible. When it is not possible to avoid such areas, every effort is taken on minimise landtake from the affected site and, where possible, measures are provided to reduce adverse effects.

Bus Stop Information Displays

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the experiments known to his Department on bus stop information displays using satellite links; and what his Department is doing to promote them. [40999]

Mr. Norris: My Department is aware of experiments using satellite-based systems in Birmingham, Ipswich and Nottingham. Passenger information systems sponsored by local authorities are eligible for funding through the transport policies and programme system.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the budget for his departmental expenditure and the percentage of gross domestic product spent on transport. [40994]

Mr. Norris: The information required on departmental expenditure can be found in the relevant "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Gross domestic product is a measure of output while much transport expenditure is intermediate. Total transport expenditure is thus not calculated as a component of GDP. However, a separate exercise has estimated total expenditure on transport including intermediate expenditure. The estimated expenditures expressed as a percentage of GDP, at market prices, for 1990 to 1994, are as follows:

1990: 18 Per cent.
1991: 17 Per cent.
1992: 18 Per cent.
1993: 18 Per cent.
1994: 17 Per cent.

Spending Decisions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proposals he has to devolve spending decisions on transport to (a) local authorities and (b) regions; [41008]

(2) what transport decisions are taken at regional level rather than at central or local government levels. [40982]

Mr. Norris: We take full account of advice from the Government offices for the regions on transport decisions relevant to them, for example on the allocation of transport resources for capital investment by local authorities. There are no plans further to devolve decisions to the regional offices.

Local authorities have a wide range of transport powers and responsibilities. They are responsible for taking their own decisions on transport spending priorities within the total resources available to them.

Rail Charges

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rights of appeal exist when a rolling stock company or Railtrack imposes large increases on rail operators. [41002]

Mr. Watts: Initial leases for vehicle fleets, agreed between the passenger rolling stock companies and the train operators, are in place and are at a fixed price. Renewals will be negotiated between the parties in a competitive market.

Access contracts between Railtrack and train operators are approved by the Rail Regulator. The operators can appeal to the regulator if they consider that the charges proposed by Railtrack are unreasonable.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the Barton/Metten compromise agreed between motor cyclists' representatives and the European Parliament, at the Council of Ministers meeting in November relating to the European multi-directive COM (93) 449-COD 470 of 30 November 1993. [41224]

Mr. Norris: We expect to be considering the amendments to the motor cycle multi-directive proposed by the European Parliament at the November Council of Ministers.

The Government have made clear their view that anti-tampering measures should be required only for mopeds and learner motor cycles. The Government consider that the noise and emission standards contained in the draft directive generally represent the appropriate levels for all categories of mopeds and motor cycles.

Passenger Transport Executives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which are the five largest cities in the United Kingdom without a passenger transport executive. [41330]

Mr. Norris: Measured by population, the five largest cities in the United Kingdom without a passenger transport executive are Edinburgh, Bristol, Cardiff, Belfast and Leicester.

Buses

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the average age of the bus fleet operated by (a) private bus companies and (b) municipal undertakings. [41283]

Mr. Norris: The records held by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency show that, at the end of 1994, public service vehicles in the bus taxation class having nine or more seats had an average age of just under 10 years. The split of the average age of the fleet between private bus companies and municipal undertakings is not readily available.

M66 Manchester Outer Ring Road

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when tenders will be let for construction of the main carriageway of the M66 Manchester Outer Ring Road; and what is the reason for the delay. [39987]

Mr. Watts [holding reply 30 October 1995]: There has been no unexpected delay. I hope to be in a position to award a contract for the first part of the remaining main carriageway, (Contract 1) around the turn of the year. Tenders for the second part (Contract 3) are yet to be sought.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils qualified for NVQs in (a) retail, (b) manufacturing, (c) the car industry, (d) fast fit cars, (e) golf, (f) restaurants, (g) travel agents, (h) tailoring, and (i) equine activities in each of the last five years. [38795]

Mr. Paice: Data are not available in the form requested. The following table shows the number of full national vocational qualification certificates, including expired NVQs, awarded in each of NCVQs framework areas up to the end of 1994.

Table 1: Numbers of full NVO certifications: awards by framework area

NCVQ.

Note:

[1]— Less than 500.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary for State for Education and Employment what is the percentage of the relevant age group in each EU country which has passed a national vocational qualification type qualification in each of the past five years. [38797]

Mr. Paice: The total number of national vocational qualifications awarded in the UK between their launch and the end of 1994 is about 758,000 according to figures supplied by NCVQ. Data are not available on the number of individuals gaining such awards; nor are data available in a comparable form for other EU member countries.

Total NVQs awarded in the United Kingdom to 31 December 1990: 58,294; total awarded in 1991: 111,235; total awarded in 1992: 152,114; total awarded in 1993: 202,426; and total awarded in 1994: 239,780.

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the reason given by Barnsley and Doncaster TEC for making an operating loss for the financial year 1993–94, and if she will make a statement. [38631]

Mr. Paice: The information relating to the operating surplus/deficit made by Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council is available in the TEC's annual report for 1993–94. A copy of this report is held in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, how many (a) adults and (b) young people on average participated in the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC training scheme in each month in the past two years; and if she will indicate the average percentage of those who gained qualifications. [38981]

Mr. Paice: The number participating in youth training and training for work in the Barnsley and Doncaster Training Enterprise Council area are given in the following table. The table also includes information on those gaining qualifications.

Barnsley and Doncaster TEC

	1993–94	1994–95
Youth Training
Average number in-training	4,040	3,710
Percentage of leavers gaining a qualification or credit towards one:	52 per cent.	(January–December 1994) 53 per cent.
Training for Work
Average number in-training	3,460	3,130
Percentage of leavers gaining a qualification or credit towards one:	39 per cent.	(January–December 1994) 45 per cent.

TEC management information returns, YT and TFW national follow-up surveys.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to what extent Barnsley and Doncaster TEC is involved in (a) the open learning credits initiative and (b) the skill choice initiatives; what achievements have been made under the programme; what yearly funding it has received to date; and when the initiative will end. [39011]

Mr. Paice: Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council did not take part in either the open learning credits pilots or the skill choice initiative.

The open learning credits pilots were run in 1993–94 to trial the use of open learning for unemployed people. There were 14 pilots involving 17 TECs and two local enterprise councils. Total funding for the pilots was £2.97 million. The purpose of the pilots was to trial the use of open learning for unemployed people. The pilots were fully evaluated and identified a number of benefits including choice, flexibility, high levels of client satisfaction and the opportunity to target particular client groups.

Skill choice was a two-year initiative run in 1993–94 and 1994–95. There were 14 TECs and three local enterprise companies involved and total expenditure was £19. 5 million. The aim of the initiative was to help individuals, mainly those in employment, to purchase the vocational guidance and assessment services of their choice. The total number of individuals helped over two years was 250,000, and employers participating in the initiative reported significant economic benefits.

Evaluation reports for both programmes have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions she has had with her colleagues in increasing the funding of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC. [38982]

Mr. Paice: There are no plans to increase the allocation of funds to Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council in the current financial year. However, the TEC along with others, may benefit from additional resources available through funds already committed for national/regional competitions between TECs. These include performance-related funding, skills challenge and the achievement of additional qualifications through youth training.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to extend or amalgamate the boundaries of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, and if she will make a statement. [39048]

Mr. Paice: I am not aware of any plans to extend or amalgamate the boundaries of Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council. It is for TECs themselves to propose any structural change.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if Barnsley and Doncaster TEC uses adult training credits within its training for work provision; and if she will make a statement. [39451]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is operational information on the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council and the question would be best addressed to the TEC to answer.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated number of people who have found permanent work during the last 12 months as a result of training at the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC. [39453]

Mr. Paice: In 1994, 43 per cent. of those leaving training for work from Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council were in a job six months after leaving. In the same period, 50 per cent. of youth training leavers were in a job.

As the information comes from surveys, it is possible to give only percentages not actual numbers.

School Buildings

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 19 October concerning amendments to the regulations to school buildings, which of the bodies she lists favoured removal of any regulatory standard; which provisions she now proposes to remove and when; and by what means she announced her own views. [39319]

Mrs. Gillan: The Department issued a consultation letter on 14 August 1995. Responses were requested by 18 October 1995 and are now being analysed. We will, of course, give careful consideration to respondents' views before making any decisions on the final shape of the regulations.

Nursery Education

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the number and percentage of (a) three-year-olds and (b) four-year-olds in local education authority maintained pre-school provision in each authority, at the latest date for which figures are available. [39118]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on pupils aged three and four in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in each local education authority in England in January 1995 is shown in the following table. The Department does not publish information on participation rates of individual age cohorts by local education authority.

Funding, Dorset

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the (a) increase in Government funding on education in Dorset and (b) the inflation rate since (i) 1979 and (ii) 1990; and if she will make a statement. [38973]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not available in the form in which it has been requested. I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average point on the teachers' pay scale at which teachers were appointed in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools, for each year since 1988. [39115]

Mr. Robin Squire: The points on the qualified teachers' pay scale at which new entrant classroom teachers were typically appointed in England for the financial years 1988–89 and 1993–94 are shown in the following table:

Typical scale or spine point[1] [2] to which new entrants were appointed in:

Financial Year	Primary schools Point	Secondary schools Value £	Point	Value £
1988–89	4	8,859	4	8,859
1989–90	4	9,390	4	9,390
1990–91	4	10,503	4	10,503
1991–92	3	11,502	4	12,051
1992–93	3	12,366	3	12,366
1993–94[3]	2	12,633	2	12,633

[1] At least 50 per cent. of new appointees are placed either on or below this point.

[2] In the academic years 1988–89 to 1990–91 teachers, other than head teachers and deputies, were paid on an 11 point incremental main scale. From 1 December 1991 the main scale was shortened to 10 points. From 1 September 1993 the Government introduced a new common 18-point pay spine for classroom teachers. In the academic years 1988–89, 1989–90 and 1990–91 the point of entry for a teacher with a good honours degree was point 4; and ordinary degree was point 2; a non-graduate was point 1.The point of entry in 1991–92 and 1992–93 for a teacher with a good honours degree was point 3; others were point 1. The point of entry in 1993–94 for a teacher with a good honours degree was point 2; others were point 0. For each of the years shown further discretionary points could be gained for various reasons, eg recruitment and retention.

[3] Data for 1993–94 are estimated.

Public Appointments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which her Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39422]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State for Education and Employment makes appointments to:

(a) The Committee for the Employment of People with Disabilities (Sheffield and Rotherham)

(b) The Committee for the Employment of People with Disabilities (Wakefield, Barnsley and Doncaster)

CEPDs do not hold budgets. Their functions are financed by the Employment Service out of regionally held budgets.

The press committees were constituted in April 1994 and will run for three years. Each committee consists of a chairman and up to 13 members.

(c) The Further Education Funding Council regional committee (Yorkshire and Humberside)

The FEFC regional committee has no separate budgets. Its functions are financed from the FEFC's central budget.

The committee consists of 11 members and a chairman. The current chairman was appointed in April 1993 and the 11 members in October 1993.

Temporary Teachers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy to collate centrally the number of temporary teachers paid on a daily rate who are employed by each (a) college and (b) university in England for longer than 26 weeks during each year; and if she will make a statement. [39506]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to collate such information.

Nursery Education Vouchers

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response she has had from the Metropolitan borough of Stockport about taking up the voucher scheme for nursery education. [39609]

Mr. Paice: The Metropolitan borough of Stockport has responded to the consultation papers which cover elements of the nursery education voucher scheme. The council has resolved not to participate in phase 1 of the scheme.

Local Education Authority Administration

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the level of administrative or overheads expenditure per pupil in the local education authorities in (a) Suffolk, (b) Cambridgeshire and (c) Norfolk for the last three years available. [39615]

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows, at 1994–95 prices, the gross costs per pupils of expenditure on central administration recorded by (a) Suffolk, (b) Cambridgeshire and (c) Norfolk education authorities for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94, the latest year for which figures are available. These figures have not been adjusted for any changes of function. The figures may not be comparable between LEAs of differing local accounting practices.

Free School Meals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many assisted pupils qualified for free school meals for the most recent years for which figures are available. [40484]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is shown in the table and relates to the last three academic years and to England only.

Assisted places scheme

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total amount paid under the assisted places scheme for (a) uniform grant, (b) school travel grant and (c) travel grant for visiting universities for the most recent years for which figures are available. [40483]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is given in the following table and relates to participating schools' expenditure in the last three academic years in England only. Figures for travel grant to enable assisted pupils visit universities for the purpose of interviews are not collected separately: they are subsumed in the total for school travel grants.

Assisted places scheme

School Governors

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in encouraging parents to become school governors, and if she will make a statement. [40573]

Mr. Robin Squire: The governing bodies of all maintained schools must include parents governors, elected by the parents of pupils at the school, as one means of giving parents power to influence the nature and quality of the education their children receive. It is increasingly recognised that governors, including parent governors, play a key part in deciding the conduct and development of their school. The available evidence suggests that most schools are able to find sufficient parent and other governors to serve. The Government are grateful for the time, effort and commitment which governors devote, and we will continue to encourage parents and other members of the local community to undertake this demanding but rewarding task.

Employment Service Client Advisers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if performance-related management of client advisers in the Employment Service is related to the number of unemployed within the area of their work. [39673]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. J. Lifton to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 3 November 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your question about the performance management of client advisers in the Employment Service (ES).

It may help if I briefly outline the performance management system which operates in the ES. Effective performance management is vital if we are to achieve our business objectives as set out in the Annual Performance Agreement between the Secretary of State and the ES. Agreement and achievement of performance and development objectives for everyone in the ES, including client advisers, plays a critical part in our performance management arrangements and the achievement of these business objectives.

Client advisers, like all other people in the ES, need to understand what they are required to achieve throughout the year. Performance targets and standards are set and used to ensure that our business objectives are met, value for money is delivered and individuals are properly rewarded for their performance.

Each client adviser:

has key responsibilities and operational objectives based on the Agency's and the individual Jobcentre's operational plans. These operational plans are derived from the Annual Performance Agreement and take account of the number of unemployed people nationally and within the locality; agrees with their line manager how their performance is to be measured; agrees personal development objectives where necessary to sustain and enhance their performance; and has regular reviews with their line manager to assess achievement against operational and developmental objectives. During these reviews external factors, notably changes in their local labour market will be taken into account.

I hope this is helpful and assures you that the performance management of our advisers is part of a comprehensive system which takes into account all the factors that are likely to be relevant.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what circumstances unemployed volunteers claiming the jobseeker's allowance are able to continue their voluntary employment; and what benefits they will be entitled to between ending voluntary work and starting paid employment. [39681]

Mr. Forth: Claimants will be able to undertake voluntary work while in receipt of a jobseeker's allowance as long as they are actively seeking work and available for work at 48 hours' notice. If they decide to stop undertaking voluntary work, they will have to be immediately available for work; in other respects, their benefit entitlement will not be affected. On starting paid employment of more than 16 hours a week, they may be eligible for a range of in-work benefits, depending on their individual circumstances.

Area Cost Adjustments

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the level of area cost adjustment expressed as a percentage add on to the primary and secondary standard spending assessments that receive area cost adjustment, the value of the London weighting as a percentage of average teacher and pay, and the amounts of any other qualifiable costs taken into account in determining the area cost adjustment in each authority that receives area cost adjustment. [38171]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 20 October 1995]: The information requested on the level of the area cost adjustment is set out in the "Local Government Finance Report (England) 1995–96", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Some care must be taken in drawing conclusions about the area cost adjustment using information on teachers' salaries and London weightings.

All the employment groups relevant to the local authority labour market for education have to be taken into account—not just teachers—since the area cost adjustment has to take off non-teaching costs, which account for about a third of education labour costs.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications his Department's Benefits Agency offices in the Doncaster and Mexborough area have received during the last 12 months in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema; of those how many have (a) been accepted on first application, (b) been refused, (c) gone to appeal and (d) been accepted following an appeal; and what were the figures for the previous 12 months. [39439]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of industrial injuries disablement benefit is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many applications the Benefits Agency offices in the Doncaster and Mexborough area have received during the last 12 months in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema; of those how many have (a) been accepted on first application, (b) been refused, (c) gone to appeal and (d) been accepted following an appeal; and what were the figures for the previous 12 months.

Not all the information requested is available. This is because figures for the number of claims made for chronic bronchitis and emphysema, also known as PD D12, since the end of the initial twelve month take-on period have been collected separately and in a slightly different format. The take-on period lasted from September 1993 to October 1994.

It is also not possible to provide specific information about the number of appeals against decisions on PD D12 claims as these are not kept separate from other prescribed diseases.

The available information is shown in the enclosed tables. The information in the first three columns of Table 1 was collected at Area Directorate level. The information in columns four and five was collected at the Disability Benefit Centre (DBC) at Leeds. Table 1 covers the South Yorkshire and Humberside areas which include Doncaster and Mexborough.

From 3 October 1994, the number of claims for PD D12 has been recorded at District Office level. The offices at Doncaster East and Doncaster West form the Doncaster District. Mexborough, Rotherham, Goldthorpe and Wath-on-Dearne offices form the Rother and Dearne District. Table 2 shows the information for those two Districts.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Table 1: September 1993–October 1994

Benefits Agencies, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each Benefits Agency office in South Yorkshire indicating (a) the number of employees and (b) the number of claimants receiving benefit through these offices; and how many each office had paid out by way of (i) crisis loans and (ii) community care grants under the social fund in each of the last four years. [39443]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for a list of the Benefit Agency offices in South Yorkshire indicating (a) the number of employees and (b) the number of claimants receiving benefit through these offices; and how many each office had paid by way of (i) Crisis Loans and (ii) Community Care Grants under the Social Fund in each of the last four years.

With the formation of the Benefits Agency in April 1991, offices were grouped into Districts and figures for each branch office cannot be given separately. Annex A - C gives information for each District in South Yorkshire.

The latest available data for the number of employees in South Yorkshire is provided at Annex A at District level.

Annex B gives the latest available number of customers receiving benefits as at 30 September 1995 and the latest available figures for Income Support as at 31 August 1995. You should note that a customer may receive more than one of the benefits listed.

The number of customers in each office that had been paid a Crisis Loan or a Community Care Grant during the last four years is not available. This is because information on the Social Fund is not kept by customer but by applications made to the Fund. Annex C provides details of the number of successful applications.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by location each of his Department's benefit agencies (a) districts and (b) directorates that cover the postcode areas of (i) Doncaster and (ii) Mexborough; and if he will indicate in his answer the postcodes concerned. [39558]

Mr. Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 November 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the postcodes covered by the Benefit Agency's districts and directorates in Doncaster and Mexborough.

The enclosed Appendix A lists the names and addresses of the offices in Doncaster and Mexborough and the postcodes they cover. This should, however, only be used as a general guide because local offices are not organised by postcode but on a geographical basis. In some instances postcode areas are covered by more than one District.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the maintenance claimed as new maintenance by the Child Support Agency would have been due under pre-CSA agreements. [40315]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 2 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about child maintenance.

Between launch in April 1993, and August 1995, as a direct result of Child Support assessments, the Agency has collected or arranged maintenance totalling £300m. It is not possible to say how much of this maintenance would have been due under pre-CSA agreements.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the Child Support Agency's outstanding debt is attributable to type A interim assessments. [40318]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 2 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about how much of the Child Support Agency's outstanding debt is attributable to Category A interim maintenance assessments (IMAs).

Of a total outstanding debt of £700m at the end of August 1995, it is estimated that £456m was the result of IMAs.

It is not possible to further break down the £456m debt by category of IMA, but the vast majority of this debt can be attributed to category A IMAs. This is because the other types of IMAs (Category B, C and D) are used in circumstances where the absent parent is most likely to be cooperating with the Agency.

Since 18 April 1995, IMAs have been converted to full maintenance assessments (FMAs) from the effective date of the assessment, as soon as the absent parent provides sufficient information for this to be done. FMAs are generally much lower than IMAs and it follows that much of the IMA debt is provisional.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the child maintenance assessments issued to absent parents who have previously paid no maintenance including nil and minimum assessments. [40319]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 2 November 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security requesting a breakdown of child maintenance assessments. This information is available for parents with care receiving Income Support.

Whilst it is not possible to provide a breakdown relating to absent parents, an estimated figure for parents with care is available and is set out in the table attached. This is produced based on five percent samples of Income Support and Child Support Agency cases, taken in February 1993 and August 1995 respectively.

Most of the cases included in these samples will be Income Support taken on in the first year of the Agency, when it was estimated that around 50 per cent of those cases taken on were not already receiving maintenance. This proportion has increased to an estimated 77 per cent. since April 1994. We would expect the percentage assessed who were not previously receiving maintenance (38.95%) to increase in future samples as Income Support data for 1994 and 1995 becomes available.

I hope this is helpful.

Maintenance assessed at August 1995 for parents with care who received no maintenance whilst on Income Support in February 1993	Number of cases (000s)	As a percentage of the 333,500 cases assessed at August 1995 who were in receipt of Income Support in 1993
(a) £0 to £2.35	60	17.97
(b) £2.36 to £4.99	1	0.30
(c) £5 to £9.99	2	0.60

Number of cases include interim and full maintenance assessments.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the proposed legislation by the Law Commission on mental incapacity; and if he will make a statement. [41357]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government have welcomed the Law Commission's report on mental incapacity as an important contribution to the debate on decision making where a person lacks capacity to make decisions for themselves. The Government recognise, however, that the report raises important and sensitive issues of principle. We set up an interdepartmental working group to co-ordinate consideration of the report on 15 March 1995. The group produced an initial report for Ministers by its target date of 1 September. Ministers are considering the group's report with that of the Law Commission.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to complete his consideration of the draft Mental Incapacity Bill; and if he will make a statement. [41589]

Mr. Taylor: The Government set up an interdepartmental working group to co-ordinate consideration of the Law Commission report on 15 March 1995. The group produced an initial report for Ministers by its target date of 1 September. Ministers are now considering the group's report with that of the Law Commission.

Frederick West (Memoirs)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received regarding the proposals by the Official Solicitor (a) for the publication of the memoirs based on the confession of the late Frederick West and (b) for the proceeds of such publication to go to the West family. [40691]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has received five separate representations regarding proposals by the Official Solicitor (a) for the publication of the memoirs based on the confessions of the late Frederick West and (b) for the proceeds of such publication to go to the West family. In addition, an early-day motion on this subject has been tabled.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Electro-shock Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 76, what further progress has been made in the investigation into matters relating to British Aerospace and the export of electro-shock equipment. [41482]

The Solicitor-General: The police have submitted a report to the Crown Prosecution Service which has been considered. No decision will be made regarding the institution of criminal proceedings until the conclusion of the separate inquiries being conducted by the Strathclyde police.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his Department's letter of 11 September, if the Strathclyde police have completed their investigations into the allegations made in the Dispatches programme in respect of the export of electro-shock equipment involving ICL Technical Plastics Ltd. of Glasgow. [41434]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply since the question relates to a Scottish police investigation. The inquiries being conducted by Strathclyde Police into these allegations are being pursued with due expedition but are not, as yet, concluded.

TREASURY

Inflation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average inflation rate between October 1974 and May 1979 and May 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement. [40679]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Between October 1974 and May 1979 the average rate of inflation, as measured by the retail prices index, was 15.1 per cent. per annum. This compares with 6.4 per cent. for the period May 1979 to September 1995, the latest month for which information is available.

Pensioners

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners in each standard region of the United Kingdom, in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, and for the United Kingdom as a whole, are exclusively or very largely dependent on state pension; and if he will express that figure as a percentage of the overall number of pensioners. [40456]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Data on the number of pensioners mainly dependent on state pension are not available. The figures show, for the standard regions, England, Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom as a whole, the number of retired households mainly dependent on state pensions and other state benefits as a percentage of all retired households, as estimated from the 1994–95 family expenditure survey. The figures are subject to sampling variations.

Capital Gains Tax (National Grid)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much capital gains tax he expects to receive in connection with the demerger of the national grid. [41392]

Mr. Jack: The tax affairs of particular companies are a confidential matter between those companies and the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to release a figure for the amount of capital gains tax levied in connection with the demerger of the national grid. [41393]

Mr. Jack: I am unable to release such a figure because the tax affairs of particular companies is a confidential matter between those companies and the Inland Revenue.

Unquoted Shares

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the value of unquoted shares sold in the latest year available, including shares in wholly owned companies and (b) the taxable gains on these shares before allowing for any (i) reliefs or (ii) exemptions claimed. [41394]

Mr. Jack: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Tax Relief

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for the latest available year (a) the number of people and (b) the value of tax relief given under capital gains tax (i) retirement relief and (ii) re-investment relief. [41391]

Mr. Jack: The latest estimates for the costs of capital gains tax retirement and re-investment reliefs are given in table 1.6 in the 1995 edition of "Inland Revenue Statistics". Reliable estimates for the numbers of people claiming these reliefs are not available.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total amount of capital gains tax that (a) has been deferred and (b) is still deferred through use of the various reliefs afforded to capital taxpayers. [41395]

Mr. Jack: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the rules and regulations he proposes to repeal or amend by means of a reference to the Deregulation Committee before the end of 1995; and if he will make a statement. [41542]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I refer to the answer that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave to my hon. Friend earlier today.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Inland Revenue's business plan and the way it will now work on deregulation policy with the Department of Social Security. [41519]

Mr. Jack: The Inland Revenue management plan for 1995–96 to 1997–98 foreshadowed plans for the Inland Revenue and the Contributions Agency of the Department of Social Security to work more closely together with a view to providing a better service to customers and lifting the burdens on business. Details of the joint working programme were announced on 19 September 1995.

The joint working programme is an important part of each Department's deregulation initiative. It has been drawn up with small businesses particularly in mind and should help to make their dealings with the government machine more straightforward and less burdensome.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer by the repeal of each rule and regulation which has so far been the subject of a reference to the Deregulation Committee from his Department; and in how many cases a compliance cost assessment has been carried out. [41543]

Mrs. Knight: The Treasury has laid three draft deregulation proposals to date. The Deregulation (Building Societies) Order was laid on 9 May, the Deregulation (Credit Unions) Order on 11 July and the Deregulation (Friendly Societies) Order on 17 July. The draft orders will not lead to any significant cost savings for the Exchequer.

The explanatory documents which were presented to the committee alongside each of the draft orders contain an assessment of the cost savings to business and any other persons whom the draft orders are intended to benefit.

Inquiries (Small Firms)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many compulsory inquiries are issued by the Central Statistical Office to small firms each year; how many Prodcom quarterly inquiries are sent out to small firms each year; and what is the estimated total cost of these inquiries to (a) each small business and (b) the Exchequer. [41548]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Information on the number of forms to the level of detail requested is currently held only for those inquiries included in the interdepartmental business register. Out of a total of 663,000, 304,500 forms were sent to businesses with fewer than 25 employees between July 1994 and June 1995. Some 1,170 small firms with fewer than 25 employees were included in the Prodcom quarterly inquiry, resulting in 4,680 forms in that year.

In July 1995 the Central Statistical Office took over responsibility for the former Employment Department's employer surveys. Including the inquiries conducted by the former Employment Department, there were in total some 1,743,000 forms sent to businesses in the 1994 calendar year. This figure includes an estimate for the former Employment Department's biennial census of employment based on an average of the number of forms sent out for that inquiry in 1993 and 1994. The 1994 costs on the same basis were estimated at £22 million to business and £23 million to the Exchequer. Information which would enable a breakdown of these costs between smaller and larger businesses is currently not available in respect of all the inquiries. The Central Statistical Office is in the process of developing a compliance plan which will provide more detailed breakdowns of the costs of all the inquiries. This will be available in April 1996 and a copy placed in the House of Commons Library.

Grants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what grant-giving funds his Department is responsible, requiring a private sector contribution, where the use of national lottery funds is now allowed to count towards that private sector portion. [38611]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for National Heritage on 31 October, columns 186–87.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) of 11 February 1992, Official Report, column 430, on average tax allowances and reliefs for those with gross earnings up to £120,000, differentiating between reliefs and allowances claimed at the marginal rate and reliefs and allowances claimed at other rates. [39107]

Mr. Jack: Available estimates for taxpayers in 1995–96 are in the table. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for the specified bands above £100,000.

Gross income range £ per year	Average amount of tax reliefs and allowances claimed at marginal rates set against income	Average amount of tax reliefs and allowances claimed at other rates, set against income
0–10,000	3,900	650
10,000–20,000	4,100	1,550
20,000–30,000	4,600	2,250
30,000–40,000	5,100	2,600
40,000–50,000	5,900	2,800
50,000–60,000	6,500	2,850
60,000–70,000	7,100	2,900
70,000–80,000	7,800	2,900
80,000–90,000	7,900	2,700
90,000–100,000	9,000	2,700
Over 100,000	13,800	2,750
Average	4,300	1,400

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list figures for the donations and cost of tax relief on (a) covenants to charities and (b) gift aid for taxpayers with gross income of over (i) £40,000, (ii) £60,000, (iii) £80,000 and (iv) £100,000. [39110]

Mr. Jack: Provisional estimates for individual taxpayers in 1995–96 are as follows:

Covenants to charities

Total income	Donors	Gross donations £ million	Cost of tax relief £ million
Over £40,000	156,000	150	60
Over £60,000	70,000	80	30
Over £80,000	40,000	50	20
Over £100,000	27,000	40	15

Gift aid

Total income	Donors	Gross donations £ million	Cost of tax relief £ million
Over £40,000	20,000	90	35
Over £60,000	11,000	65	25
Over £80,000	6,500	55	20
Over £100,000	5,000	50	20

Gilts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking in respect of sharp movements in gilts prior to the impact day of the new tax regime; and if he will make a statement. [40961]

Mr. Jack: Gilt prices respond to a variety of influences, of which prospective tax change is only one. My right hon. and learned Friend has already announced his proposals for tax reform in this field in broad outline, and the date on which it should come into effect. He does not believe any special measures are needed as these plans move towards implementation.

Housing Benefit Payments

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impediments exist to details of payment of housing benefit to private landlords being made available to the tax authorities. [40904]

Mr. Jack: There are no impediments to the Inland Revenue's powers to require returns from local authorities of housing benefit payments made to private landlords.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions exemption from inheritance tax has been granted for bequests to political parties since 1988; and how much revenue was forgone. [40777]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: I regret that this information is not available.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue yield from restricting relief on profit-related pay to relief at the marginal rate of (a) 25 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. giving in each case the number of people affected and the average loss per taxpayer. [40783]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Information about profit-related pay schemes is derived from annual returns provided by employers. These show the total amounts of profit-related pay and the numbers of participants but do not include information about the distribution of earnings. The total revenue cost of the scheme is tentatively estimated on the assumption that the distribution of participants by marginal tax rate is similar to that for employees generally. On this basis, the revenue yield from restriction to 25 per cent. and 20 per cent. might be about £90 million and £230 million respectively at 1995–96 levels. But it would be misleading to provide estimates about numbers of losers and average amounts of loss on the basis of very general assumptions.

Personal Allowances

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Darby v. Sweden case which was considered by the European Court of Human Rights in 1990 and its implication for the eligibility of women with disabled husbands for additional personal allowance. [40841]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 1 November 1995]: The case of Darby v. Sweden concerned a Finnish resident who worked in Sweden and was required to pay the Swedish church tax simply because he was not registered as a resident of Sweden. Dr. Darby's complaint, which was upheld by the court, was brought under article 1 of protocol 1 of the European convention on human rights which concerns the peaceful enjoyment of possessions. That article has no relevance to the eligibility of claimants to additional personal allowance.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the duty on tobacco products; what the nature of such representations has been; what response he has given to any such representations; and if he will make a statement. [41294]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 3 November 1995]: We have received a number or representations. The majority of these asked that tobacco taxation not be increased in the forthcoming Budget. All representations concerning tobacco taxation will be considered very carefully in the period leading up to the Budget, but it would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this stage.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the percentage of those working in domestic service are (a) of ethnic minority origin and (b) female. [39945]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The labour force survey for spring 1995 shows that of an estimated 151,000 people employed as domestic personnel in private households, 76 per cent. were female. The LFS sample of people of ethnic minority origin in this group is too small to provide a reliable estimate.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many 20 to 24-year-olds were employed (a) at the latest date for which information is available and (b) 12 months earlier. [41822]

Mrs. Knight: Information from the labour force survey shows there were 2.637 million persons aged 20 to 24 years in employment in Great Britain at summer 1995 and 2.657 million at summer 1994.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

School Milk Subsidies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to alter the current subsidy arrangements for school milk. [40918]

Mr. Baldry: Our participation in the discretionary elements of the EC school milk subsidy scheme is kept under review.

Fishing Licences

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reached a decision on the National River's Authority's Anglian Coast (Limitation of Net Licences) Order 1994. [41882]

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend has previously drawn my attention to the views expressed by his constituents on this issue. I am now pleased to tell him that I have received the inspector's report on the public inquiry into this order. It recommends that the order be confirmed, provided that a number of amendments are made. The most significant amendment proposed by the inspector is that licences for this fishery should not be limited to those dependent on fishing for their livelihood. I have accepted these recommendations, and, provided the NRA consents to the amendments, intend to confirm the order on this basis. All existing licence holders will therefore continue to be eligible to hold licences. No new licences will be issued, however, and the fishery will gradually be phased out.

People's Dispensary for Sick Animals

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the additional cost of treating various kinds of sick animals by PDSA dispensaries as a result of European Union legislation. [39360]

Mrs. Browning: The PDSA has represented that changes to United Kingdom law made by the Medicines (Restrictions on the Administration of Veterinary Medicinal Products) Regulations 1994 to implement EC legislation will increase the cost of treating companion animals. These regulations contain provisions which had already passed into good veterinary practice in the UK, by means of the British Veterinary Association's code of practice for the prescribing of medicinal products, introduced in 1991. Following a recent meeting between officials from the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the director general of the PDSA at which these issues were discussed and clarified, we have been able to give assurances which should ensure that that the PDSA does not incur additional costs as a result of the application of the regulations.

Public Appointments, South Yorkshire

Mr. Martin Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the county of South Yorkshire, indicating the total annual budget and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last four years. [39424]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the county of South Yorkshire there are three non-departmental public bodies to which the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food makes appointments.

The Yorkshire regional flood defence committee is a statutory executive committee of the National Rivers Authority, which meets its administrative costs. Expenditure is accounted for by the National Rivers Authority. In 1994, four appointments were made or renewed. There have been no other appointments in the last four years.

The appointments of two MAFF appointed members of the South and West Yorkshire agricultural wages committee were renewed in each of the years 1993 and 1994. No other appointments have been made in the last four years. There is no separate regional budget for agricultural wages committee work.

Appointments are made to the regional panel for the Ministry's north-east region which includes the county of South Yorkshire. Regional panel members do not receive a fee for their services but may claim travel and subsistence allowances.

Year	New/renewed appointments	Total annual budget £
1992–93	13	2,900
1993–94	3	2,100
1994–95	3	3,300
1995–96	2	[1]4,000

[1] Estimate.

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are currently employed in his Department and in related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work force; and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41113]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Breakdown by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—normally those engaged for a period of up to 12 months, but exceptionally up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis on 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

EC Agriculture Council

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, North-East (Mr. Congdon), of 18 October 1995, Official Report, columns 285–86, what was the voting record of each member state on items agreed at the meeting of the European Community's Agriculture Council held on 25 September; and if he will make it his practice to list all votes, including where there have been no votes, in the future. [41090]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The answer referred to makes clear that the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 25 September 1995 took two decisions, both by qualified majority, Portugal voting against in one instance and the United Kingdom opposing in the other. The affirmative vote by all other member states, in each case, is implicit.

Peanut Allergy

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to raise awareness in catering establishments and takeaways of the dangers of peanut allergy. [41136]

Mrs. Browning: Following the publicity about the dangers to allergic individuals of severe reactions to peanuts and other nuts, my officials met various sectors of the food industry, including the catering sector, to discuss what could be done. We are continuing to explore ways of improving awareness and encouraging information exchange and we are also in touch with consumer groups including the Anaphylaxis Campaign which has itself done much to alert sufferers to the dangers and to heighten awareness in the industry. In addition, the Ministry is investing £500,000 per year in research on food allergies to help elucidate the nature of the problem.

Dimetridazole

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the ban of the use of dimetridazole and its effect on the United Kingdom bird industry. [41625]

Mrs. Browning: We are aware of the concerns about this ban and a number of options to assist the game bird industry are under active consideration.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Co-operative Organisations (Central and Eastern Europe)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the British organisations delivering consultancy to co-operatives in central and eastern Europe are themselves co-operatives; and what is the extent to which co-operative organisations are on the tender lists for such co-operative projects in central and eastern Europe. [40916]

Mr. Hanley: There are no co-operatives on the ODA's register of organisations interested in know-how fund work. Nor is there any record of co-operatives having been awarded contracts for KHF work.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of funds is allocated to developing and restructuring the co-operative sectors of the countries in central and eastern Europe as a proportion of private sector projects; how many projects make up the allocation to the co-operative sector in central and eastern Europe; and what percentage of such projects has been awarded to British organisations to deliver the consultancy requirements. [40917]

Mr. Hanley: The know-how fund does not allocate funds specifically to the co-operative sectors of the countries in central and eastern Europe. Nor does it keep statistics specifically on the amount of money spent on the co-operative sector, but if a proposal to support co-operatives is received and it meets the criteria applied by the know-how fund it will be considered on its merits.

The know-how fund awards all its contracts to British organisations.

Poverty

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that any proposals for a reduction in the overseas budget shall not affect those programmes aimed at fighting poverty in the developing world. [39936]

Mr. Hanley: The overriding goal of the British aid programme is to improve the quality of life of people in poorer countries by contributing to sustainable development and reducing poverty and suffering. Her Majesty's Government will maintain a substantial and effective programme increasingly focused on the poorest countries.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has had from the president of the World bank about the priority to be accorded to fighting poverty in the developing world by the developed nations. [39962]

Mr. Hanley: At the annual meetings of the World bank and IMF in October, the president made a strong appeal for adequate funding of the International Development Association to ensure that global efforts to support poverty reduction in the poorest countries are not set back.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Secretary of State for Defence about the reduction of arms sales as a contribution to fighting poverty in the developing world. [39938]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has made no representations to the Secretary of State for Defence on this matter.

The United Kingdom actively supports the emphasis placed by the donor community, including the International Monetary Fund and the World bank, in their relations with developing countries on the implications for economic and social development of an excessive level of military expenditure. We have made it clear that we consider the setting of an appropriate level of military expenditure to be an important part of good government. It is one of the factors we take into account when deciding our allocations of bilateral aid.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitment Her Majesty's Government have made to encouraging economic and social development in the world's poorest nations as recommended in the 1980 Brandt report. [39942]

Mr. Hanley: Sustainable economic and social development is at the heart of the United Kingdom's overseas aid programme. Many of the recommendations of the 1980 Brandt report have been incorporated into policy making. Around two thirds of our bilateral aid allocatable by income group goes to the world's poorest countries.

Aid Expenditure

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the United States authorities about overseas aid expenditure. [39937]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has not held such discussions. However, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development last held discussions about overseas aid expenditure with the US authorities when she visited Washington in June this year.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government plan a reduction in the proportion of gross national product currently spent on overseas aid. [39940]

Mr. Hanley: Future levels of aid will depend on the outcome of the public expenditure survey, which is currently under way.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what comparison he has made between the proportion of gross national product spent on foreign aid by the United Kingdom and (a) Denmark and (b) Sweden. [39941]

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom, Denmark and Sweden spent the following proportions of gross national product on aid in the last three years.

Percentage

	1992	1993	1994
(a) United Kingdom	0.31	0.31	0.31
(b) Denmark	1.02	1.03	1.03
(c) Sweden	1.03	0.99	0.90

Women's Programmes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Government's recent proposals for the overseas aid budget will affect those programmes aimed at helping women in the developing world to which the Government committed itself at the UN women's conference in Beijing. [39939]

Mr. Hanley: Programmes aimed at helping women in the developing world will continue to be an important priority for ODA. Future spending plans are currently under discussion.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will issue guidance on entrance charges to the proposed millennium exhibition. [40082]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Funding

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what study or consideration she has given to the relative income generation potential of the bids for millennium funding in Wales from the Welsh national stadium and the Cardiff Bay opera house. [38048]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what consultations she has had in relation to the compliance with the publicly stated conditions for funding from the Millennium Commission of (a) the redevelopment of the Welsh national rugby stadium and (b) the Cardiff Bay opera house; [37819]

(2) if she will list the reports prepared for the Millennium Commission in relation to the bids for funding (a) the Cardiff Bay opera house and (b) redevelopment of the Welsh national rugby stadium; and what were the main positive and negative recommendations contained in each report with respect to the project under review; [37823]

(3) what estimate she has of the level of matching private funds available corresponding to the bids for assistance from the Millennium Commission for (a) the Cardiff Bay opera house and (b) the redevelopment of the Welsh national rugby stadium; [37821]

(4) what estimates she has made of the relative levels of public support in Wales for the proposals to obtain Millennium Commission funding for (a) the redevelopment of the Welsh national rugby stadium and (b) the Cardiff Bay opera house; and if she will make a statement; [37820]

(5) what deadline she has given for the determination of the bids for funding from the Millennium Commission of (a) the Cardiff Bay opera house and (b) the redevelopment of the Welsh national rugby Stadium. [37822]

Mrs. Bottomley [holding answer 19 October 1995]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations she has had with the organisations applying to the Millennium Commission for funding; and what guidance she has issued to them concerning their eligibility or otherwise for funding where geographically applicable from (a) the European regional development fund, (b) the Wales tourist board, (c) the Welsh Development Agency and Development Board for Rural Wales and (d) other public grant-aiding bodies; and what proposals she has to issue further clarification in the guidelines. [38416]

Mrs. Bottomley [holding answer 20 October 1995]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what special measures she proposes for ensuring that appropriate tests of public support are carried out in respect of millennium fund projects submitted from Wales; and if she will make a statement. [40724]

Mrs. Bottomley [holding answer 31 October 1995]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Remploy Consortium

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has had from the trade union side secretary of the Remploy Consortium; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement. [40934]

The Prime Minister: I have received one such representation, which will be responded to in due course by my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Education and Employment.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister (1) pursuant to his oral answer of 2 May, Official Report, columns 167-68, what progress is being made towards repealing those regulations identified as unnecessary burdens to business; [41569]

(2) if a compliance cost assessment has been completed on each regulation to be repealed; and what is the estimated saving to (a) small businesses and (b) the public funds from the repeal of each regulation. [41570]

The Prime Minister: We have identified over 1,000 regulations for repeal or amendment and are on target to have dealt with over half of those by the end of the year. The requirement to carry out a compliance cost assessment applies to regulations imposing additional burdens on business while the programme of repeals and amendments is concerned with reducing the burden. However, to take an example, simplification of the food temperature control regulations will help small businesses and generate savings of about £40 million a year for the industry as a whole without removing any necessary public health protection.

Overseas Aid Budget

Ms Lestor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many letters about the size of the overseas aid budget he has received from hon. Members since 1 September; and what was the comparable figure for the same period in the previous year; [41664]

(2) how many letters about the size of the overseas aid budget he has received from non-governmental organisations since 1 September; and what was the comparable figure for the same period in the previous year; [41662]

(3) how many letters about the size of the overseas aid budget he has received from members of the public since 1 September; and what was the comparable figure for the same period in the previous year. [41663]

The Prime Minister: I have received a substantial number of representations on this matter over the past 12 months.

President Chirac

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library (a) a copy of the memorandum on defence and security co-operation agreed with President Chirac of France on 30 October and (b) the text of the press conference he jointly hosted with President Chirac on 30 October. [41473]

The Prime Minister: I have already done so.

Quebec (Ex-premier's Remarks)

Mr. Mates: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it clear to the ex-premier of Quebec Her Majesty's displeasure at his remarks about ethnic minority groups and the recent referendum. [41327]

The Prime Minister: The outcome of the referendum is a matter for Canadians in Canada. The Canadian Prime Minister has called for reconciliation. We wish the Canadian people well in the task of working together to this end.

Official Inquiries

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all the official inquiries he and his department have undertaken over the last five years indicating the dates they were initiated and the date when the findings were released to the public. [41450]

The Prime Minister: I have set up no further inquiries since my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster answered a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on 25 May, Official Report, columns 717-20.

Marriage

Mr. Patten: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to help married families since April 1992; [40898]

(2) what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to strengthen the institution of marriage since April 1992. [40899]

The Prime Minister: The Government are fully committed to supporting the institution of marriage. Marriage is the bedrock of family life. Stable families are good for our children. They are a source of love and discipline, and of support for weaker members. However, we recognise that marriage is also a personal matter. We have taken several steps to support marriage, while at the same time respecting the privacy of personal relationships and choice.

This Government believe that married couples should receive recognition in the tax system. Married couples therefore receive tax treatment on both income and capital. They pay nearly £260 per year less in tax than most single people on the same income, at a total cost of £2.7 billion in 1995, and are treated more favourably for capital gains and inheritance tax. Inheritance tax reliefs for married couples are alone worth around £950 million in 1995–96.

We also believe that people should have access to help to overcome problems in their marriages. The Government have therefore given £8.5 million to marriage guidance and research organisations since April 1992.

To take this further, an interdepartmental group on marriage was set up in April this year to identify how Government can develop additional services to help couples who are considering marriage or whose marriages are in difficulty.

Housing is a crucial issue for married families. Our White Paper "Our Future Homes" sets out the aim of ensuring that a decent home is in reach of every family. We want to make sure that the allocation of social housing includes the need to support married couples who take a responsible approach to family life as an important objective.

We want to take away as many barriers to marriage as possible. For this reason, the Government supported a private Member's Bill in 1994 which widened the choice of venues for couples wishing to marry by civil ceremony.

Government Ministers meet representatives from the Churches and other organisations supporting marriage on an on–going basis to discuss the scope for further initiatives.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Executive Agencies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by grade the numbers of staff and their cost for (a) the financial year 1994–95 and (b) the estimated figures for the financial year 1995–96, for each executive agency for which he is responsible. [39479]

Mr. Hanley: The FCO diplomatic wing has one agency, Wilton Park, for which the information requested is given in the table. For the ODA, the chief executive of the Natural Resources Institute will write shortly to the hon. Member with the details requested.

Letter from Anthony Beattie to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 November 1995:

NATURAL RESOURCES INSTITUTE—STAFFING

In his reply of 30 October to your question to the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs about staffing in executive agencies, Mr Hanley indicated that I would write to you separately about the position in the Natural Resources Institute (NRI). I now attach the information which you require. It needs some explanation.

The first point is that staffing levels in NRI are highly variable. They reflect day to day changes in the large number of individual projects and contracts which make up our business. It is therefore not meaningful to speak in terms of absolute numbers in a particular grade for a complete year as the numbers will change significantly over that period.

We have therefore based the data on the number of man-years of employment in each grade over the two years about which you have asked.

There is a further complication in respect of the estimated figures for 1995/96. We are currently in the process of implementing a voluntary redundancy programme which has as its aim the reduction of staffing levels to 360 by 1 April 1996. We do not know - and cannot reasonably speculate about - the identity of the staff who will volunteer to accept redundancy or when precisely they might be released. We have therefore compiled the 1995/96 estimate on the assumption that the volunteers will be evenly distributed across all grades and that the timing of their departures will occur on a straight-line basis between the end of September (when the first departures began to occur) and 31 March 1996.

All this does mean, I am afraid, that the 1995/96 estimate is subject to a considerably greater degree of uncertainty that might ordinarily be the case.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information Her Majesty's Government had received on activities conducted since 1985 in connection with (a) the BADR–2000 missile, (b) project 144 on missile modification, (c) project 1728 on liquid propellant rocket engines and (d) the Karama project on production of missile guidance and control by Iraq, prior to the publication of the eighth biannual United Nations Special Commission report on the visits of the UN Special Commission on Iraq, pursuant to UN Security Council resolution 687 of 1991; [41505]

(2) what information Her Majesty's Government had received on activities conducted since 1985 at (a) the Muthanna state establishment, (b) the Al Hakan facility, (c) the Al Hazen Ibn Al Haythan Institute in Al Salman, (d) the single cell protein plant at Tajis, (e) the Sammarra drug factory and (f) the Muhammadiyat weapons test range in Iraq, in regard to development of biological and chemical weapon or precursor agent development, prior to the publication on 11th October of the UNSCOM eight biannual report on its mission to Iraq. [41504]

Mr. David Davis: It is not our practice to comment in detail on information given to us in confidence by UNSCOM. Nor do we comment on intelligence matters.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional assistance has been offered by Her Majesty's Government to meet the acute shortage of funds detailed at page 35 of the UNSCOM eighth biannual report on its mission in Iraq pursuant to UN Security Council resolution 687 of 1991. [41472]

Mr. Davis: We strongly support the work on UNSCOM and make a major effort to supply personnel, equipment and expertise. The funds which the United Kingdom commits to this have been about £1 million per annum. We have no plans to increase this.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 862, if he is following up any evidence that British companies have supplied materials relevant to Iraqi programmes to acquire weapons of mass destruction; and if he will make a statement. [41433]

Mr. Davis: Inspections by the UN Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have revealed the names of many companies from Britain and other countries which have traded with Iraq. UNSCOM and the IAEA inform us in confidence of British equipment found in order to help verify Iraqi statements. However, it is not our practice to comment on information passed to us by these organisations or to publish the names of the companies. Any evidence of wrong-doing will be investigated and, if appropriate, will be a matter for the courts.

Crown Colonies (Governors)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Bishop Auckland (Mr. Foster) of 30 October, Official Report, columns 10–11, if the obligation to restrict political activities also applies to governors of Crown colonies. [41280]

Mr. Hanley: Most governors of our dependent territories are diplomatic service officers and are therefore subject to diplomatic service regulations which restrict political activities. Where politicians are appointed as governors, on contract, these regulations do not apply and they may make political statements in their personal capacity.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Sri Lanka and on reports of the recent massacres of civilians in the north and east. [42020]

Mr. Hanley: We condemn the recent brutal massacres of civilians which have taken place, especially those in villages in the north and east of Sri Lanka. These outrages bear all the hallmarks of operations carried out by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam—LTTE—and deserve the condemnation of the entire international community. We deplore the loss of life and destruction resulting from this conflict, and urge both the Government and the LTTE to take all possible steps to avoid further civilian casualties.

We continue to believe that a lasting solution to the ethnic conflict in Sri Lanka can be achieved only through a sustainable political settlement, reached through peaceful negotiation. The Government of Sri Lanka have put forward wide-ranging proposals for constitutional reform, which we believe could provide the basis for a negotiated settlement acceptable to all Sri Lankans. We urge all who are concerned to see a lasting and peaceful settlement to the conflict to make every effort to persuade the LTTE to respond positively to the constitutional opportunities now emerging.

Arms Sales (Peru and Equador)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on arms sales to Peru and Ecuador following the outbreak of fighting in January in the long-standing border dispute. [42021]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The Government's policy is to support sales of UK defence equipment where this is compatible with our political, strategic and security interests. At all times, we have followed our established and public practice of considering individual sales to Peru and Ecuador on a case-by-case basis, in accordance with the international guidelines to which we are committed. We shall continue to process applications on a case-by-case basis. Some licence applications for the export of military equipment were not approved during the period of heightened tension between Peru and Ecuador. The recent reduction in tension between the two countries is encouraging.

Bosnia

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning requests to UN headquarters in Zagreb in July for air strikes to protect Srebrenica; and if he will make a statement. [41220]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary in the House on 12 July 1995, Official Report, columns 947–66.

Immigration

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce a system whereby a reference number is allocated to each individual who contacts entry clearance staff about an application for a visitor's visa, who is advised not to proceed, and then acts upon the advice, and if he will make a statement. [41396]

Mr. Hanley: Some entry clearance issuing posts operate a preliminary assessment system whereby an applicant may be advised by an entry clearance officer that his application is unlikely to succeed, should he choose to proceed with the application. A fee is not taken unless an application is formally lodged. It is made clear to applicants that they are not obliged to follow this advice.

Posts are required to maintain a record of the number of those who accept preliminary assessment advice. Additionally, posts are required to retain a record of those individuals who accept this advice for a period of six months after their inquiry to help deal with any subsequent inquiries.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many potential applicants in (a) 1994 and (b) January to June 1995 seeking visitors' visas at (i) Islamabad, (ii) Delhi, (iii) Bombay and (iv) Lagos have been advised not to pursue their application; and if he will make a statement. [41397]

Mr. Hanley: The number of potential applicants for non-settlement visas who were offered and accepted advice that their application was unlikely to succeed before they had paid their (non-refundable fee) in;

(a) 1994 was:

(i) Islamabad 10803

(ii) New Delhi 8179

(iii) Bombay 1689

(iv) Lagos 916

(b) January to June 1995 was:

(i) Islamabad 4853

(ii) New Delhi 3125

(iii) Bombay 2231

(iv) Lagos 165

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out, for the most recently available 12-month period, the figures of applications for settlement in the United Kingdom from each country in the world, categorised by reasons for application and, in each case, the number and percentage of acceptance and refusals with, where available, reasons for rejection; and if he will, as appropriate, provide the same information with regard to applications for visits. [41712]

Mr. Hanley: Information on visas granted and refused by country of application is published in table 2.1 of the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration Statistics United Kingdom 1994" issued on 10 August 1995, Cm HMSO, a copy of which is in the Library.

Figures are not available in any format categorised by reasons for application or reasons for refusal in either settlement or visit cases. To compile such statistics would incur disproportionate cost.

Brazil

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts have been made by Her Majesty's embassy in Brazil to meet representatives of the Makuxi people in Roraima concerning their land rights and the implementation of the Group of Seven policies. [41824]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: A British embassy official met representatives of the Makuxi people in Roraima between 8 and 15 October.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to him recently on behalf of the Makuxi Indians in Brazil; and what was his response. [41812]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Representatives of the Makuxi had discussions with officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 1 November.

United Arab Emirates

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's ambassador has made to the Government of the United Arab Emirates about the proposed flogging of a 16-year-old Filipina girl; and if he will make a statement. [41628]

Mr. Hanley: The UAE Government are well aware of the international concern over Sahara Balabagan. The judicial process has still not been exhausted, and we will continue to follow the case.

Afghanistan

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for Her Majesty's Government's policy of the recent attack on the Pakistan embassy in Kabul. [41711]

Mr. Hanley: We condemn the attack by demonstrators on the Pakistan embassy in Kabul in September. We continue to support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General's special representative to broker a peace agreement. Permanent peace in Afghanistan will be achieved only if the major Afghan leaders and their supporters genuinely want it.

Peru

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held by her Majesty's embassy in Peru with the Government of Peru to discuss the operation of the emergency provisions and human rights; and if he will make a statement. [41825]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Meetings are held regularly, most recently on 25 October with the director general for human rights in the Peruvian Foreign Ministry.

Correspondence

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his letter of 14 July, ref. 132969, when he expects to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Ealing, North of 13 July relating to the case of Mr. Neil McGowan. [41710]

Mr. Hanley: An interim reply has been sent to the hon. Member for Ealing, North from the migration and visa correspondence unit. A substantive reply will follow as soon as possible. The delay is regretted.

SCOTLAND

Pollution (Loch Lomond)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reduce pollution in Loch Lomond. [40478]

Mr. Kynoch: The Clyde River Purification Board is responsible for monitoring and controlling pollution in Loch Lomond.

Scottish Natural Heritage

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amounts awarded by SNH in 1994 under section 15 agreements for each owner and occupier. [40311]

Mr. Kynoch: This is a matter for Scottish Natural Heritage. I have asked the chief executive to reply to the hon. Member.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the current review of SNH to be completed; if he will make a statement on its remit; and if its findings will be published. [40312]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend will make a statement on the conclusions of the study group on SNH shortly.

Incapable Adults (Legislation)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the legislation proposed by the Scottish Law Commission on incapable adults. [41356]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend welcomes the publication of this very important report, which contains a number of far-reaching proposals in relation to incapable adults. He is giving careful consideration to these proposals.

Forestry Grants

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current recipients of forest access grants, the value of the grant for each year and the total value for Scotland. [41704]

Mr. Kynoch: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of the signed letter in the Libraries of the House.

Respite and Continuing Care Beds

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) NHS and (b) private respite care beds were available (i) by region and (ii) by health authority in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [41406]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS continuing care beds have been available in each (a) region and (b) district in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [41421]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is available for regions only and is shown in the table.

Financial Reserves

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what financial reserves have been held (a) by trusts and (b) health authorities in each region in each of the last three years; [41418]

(2) if he will itemise the financial reserves of each (a) trust and (b) health authority in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [41425]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: NHS trusts and health boards, in the interests of sound financial planning and management, do maintain financial reserves, for use in year. The total involved will vary throughout the year. Detailed information on these constantly changing amounts is not held centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fireworks

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Kanash Ltd. imported consignments of Red Lion fireworks to the United Kingdom; how many container loads were included; what checks were undertaken at the port of entry; and the number of container loads the location of which the Health and Safety Executive is now aware. [41726]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I understand from Customs and Excise and the Health and Safety Executive that the fireworks in question were imported through Southampton in September 1995. A total of seven container loads were brought in. Existing arrangements do not specifically require analytical tests to be carried out on each consignment of fireworks at the port of entry and none was undertaken in this instance. Such tests do, of course, require specialised equipment and facilities. I understand that some fireworks remain at the importer's leased deport at Chorley but the bulk were distributed to various parts of the United Kingdom. The importer is co-operating with the Health and Safety Executive in providing full details and is recalling all its imported fireworks.

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision of the Explosives Act 1875 may be enforced by trading standards officers in metropolitan areas. [41767]

Mr. Evans: Enforcement of the majority of the provisions of the Explosives Act 1875 is provided for by the Health and Safety (Enforcing Authority) Regulations 1989. In metropolitan counties, enforcement is a matter for fire authorities or, depending upon the provision in question, the Health and Safety Executive. The regulations do not, however, provide for enforcement of a number of specific provisions of the 1875 Act. These include, for example, section 31—sale of gunpowder and explosives to children. My Department takes the view that trading standards departments are able to bring prosecutions under this section in cases where the police have not become involved or have decided not to proceed.

My Department draws no distinction between metropolitan and other areas in this respect.

Research Councils

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will name the members of the two appointments panels set up to select the new chief executives of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council and the Medical Research Council. [41883]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The membership of the recruitment boards for the appointment of new chief executives to the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council and the Medical Research Council is as follows:

The permanent secretary, Department of Trade and Industry (board chairman);

The chief scientific adviser, Office of Science and Technology;

The Director General of Research Councils, Office of Science and Technology;

The chairman of the relevant research council;

Two independent members—one from academe, and one from the relevant industry.

Campbell's Soups

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet representatives of Campbell's Soups to discuss competition in the production of soup. [39715]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have no such plans.

Dounreay (Reprocessing of Nuclear Fuel)

Mr. Chisholm: to ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to hold consultation exercises to assess the opinion of the Scottish people with regard to the reprocessing of American spent fuel rods at Dounreay. [41627]

Mr. Page: Reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at Dounreay is an established industrial process which has been undertaken at Dounreay for more than 30 years. It is carried out subject to nuclear installations inspectorate and Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate regulation. There is no reason to engage in public consultation about the continuation of such a well-established and well-regulated activity.

Commercial reprocessing will be an important factor in maintaining employment levels in the Dounreay area. The DTI will continue to support it provided that the appropriate regulatory requirements continue to be met and there is a commercial return.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what correspondence he has received from the United States Government concerning opposition to the reprocessing of American spent fuel rods at Dounreay. [41626]

Mr. Page: The US Department of Energy has sent my officials two copies of letters they have received opposing reprocessing at Dounreay.

Home Brewery, Nottingham

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has received on the future of the Home Brewery, Nottingham; [41963]

(2) what information he has on the effect the merger of Scottish and Newcastle Ltd. and Courage Ltd. will have on Home Brewery, Nottingham. [41969]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Department received a number of representations about the Scottish and Newcastle/Courage merger including the future of the Home Brewery in Nottingham. In giving his advice to me on the merger, the Director General of Fair Trading took account of all relevant factors, as I did in making my decision on the case. Any information about the commercial operations of the parties supplied to the DGFT or myself under merger control procedures, including about the future of the Home Brewery, must remain confidential.

Brewery Mergers

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many public houses Scottish and

Newcastle Ltd. owned or supplied before the merger with Courage Ltd.; [41967]

(2) how many public houses Scottish Courage currently own; and how many Scottish Courage will own or supply after fulfilling the undertakings given to prevent reference of the merger between Scottish and Newcastle Ltd. and Courage Ltd. to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [41968]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: At the time of giving his advice to me on the Scottish and Newcastle/Courage merger, the Director General of Fair Trading estimated that the parties would between them have owned or supplied about 7,500 pubs, which included some 4,350 pubs owned by Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. and supplied by Courage. This figure is not complete as it does not include all supply agreements entered into by the parties as part of their normal commercial activities. The undertakings provide for the reduction in Scottish and Newcastle's tied estate to a maximum of 2,624—115 pubs fewer than its maximum permitted tied estate under the beer orders—and for the early release of 1,000 pubs from the supply agreement with IEL. It is not possible to say how many public houses the merged company, Scottish Courage, will supply in total in the future since that will depend on how successful the company is in competing for supply agreements in the competitive beer market.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what percentage of the United Kingdom's final beer sales is Scottish Courage's share after the merger of Scottish and Newcastle Ltd. and Courage Ltd.; [41965]

(2) what percentage of the United Kingdom's beer sales was Scottish and Newcastle Brewery Ltd.'s share before the merger with Courage Ltd.; [41964]

(3) what percentage of the United Kingdom's final beer sales will be Scottish Courage's share after the merger of Scottish and Newcastle Ltd. and Courage Ltd. [41966]

Mr. Evans: At the time of giving his advice to me on the Scottish and Newcastle/Courage merger, the Director General of Fair Trading estimated the parties' combined share of final beer sales in the UK to be about 30 per cent., of which Scottish and Newcastle had 11 per cent.

Walker Wingsail Systems, Plymouth

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance has been given by his Department to Walter Wingsail, Plymouth, since 1987. [41336]

Mr. Page: I believe that the hon. Member is referring to Walker Wingsail Systems plc. My Department has not provided any financial assistance to the company in question since 1987, with the exception of a small contribution of some £4,000 towards some consultancy work under the enterprise initiative.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40734]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The total cost, excluding VAT, of ministerial transport provided from the government car service and under private contract for the financial years:

1990–91: £165,724

1991–92: £178,982

1992–93: £272,524

1993–94: £349,520

1994–95: £362,167

These figures reflect structural and ministerial changes within the Department resulting from machinery of government changes. Ministers who use their own vehicles on official business are entitled to claim the standard motor mileage allowance, which currently ranges from 19p to 46p depending on engine size and distance travelled. A breakdown of such claims could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest outturn forecast for regional selective assistance offers and expenditure in England in 1995–96; and how it relates to planned expenditure. [41784]

Mr. Eggar: The forecast outturn for offers of RSA in 1995–96, in England, is £140 million. Expenditure in 1995–96 is expected to be close to our estimate of £103.7 million. Grants are paid in instalments against progress on the project, typically over a period of three to five years. Most of the expenditure on grants offered in 1995–96 will be spread over future years.

Small Firms Conference

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the organisations which have been invited to participate in next year's conference on small firms; [41518]

(2) when he expects next year's UK conference on small firms to take place; who will fund it; how much he expects it to cost; how much of the cost will be met from public funds; and what topics he expects it to cover. [41517]

Mr. Page: The "Your Business Matters" series of conferences, the majority of which will take place in 1995, are being run by a team of leading business organisations—the Institute of Business Directors, the CBI, the British chambers of commerce, the TEC National Council, the Federation of Small Businesses and the Forum of Private Business. The timing and funding of the conferences is the responsibility of the organisers.

I understand that the topics likely to be covered will be a reflection of the issues raised at the regional conferences.

Total Access Communications System

Mr. William Ross: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library copies of all issues of his specifications for a total access communications system including extended total access communications system and BABT—British Approvals Board for Telecommunications—six special investigation test schedules and relevant specifications for authentication. [41386]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 3 November 1995]: I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Library of the House. Detailed specifications for authentication are subject to commercial confidentiality provisions.

3-Dimensional Pharmaceuticals

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect that granting a patent upon combinatorial chemistry 3–Dimensional Pharmaceuticals will have on restricting the scope and availability of basic science research. [41980]

Mr. Ian Taylor: My officials in the Patent Office have been unable to identify any patent granted to an organisation called 3-Dimensional Pharmaceuticals. However, the grant of a patent would not prevent others from doing acts for experimental purposes relating to the subject matter of the invention. If that research were to lead to a new invention which fell within the scope of the patent, it would be necessary to obtain a licence under the patent before it could be commercialised. If the invention were such as to make a substantial contribution to the art and three years had elapsed since the grant of the patent, a licence could not be refused.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what regulations his Department proposes to repeal by the end of 1995; if he proposes to conduct a compliance cost assessment on each regulation repealed; and what is the estimated cost of undertaking a compliance cost assessment to assess the advantages or disadvantages of such a repeal. [41562]

Mr. Lang: There are no plans to repeal any further regulations by the end of 1995. However, four proposals for deregulatory amendments to company and competition law are currently before the Select Committee on Deregulation.

The requirement to carry out a compliance cost assessment applies to regulations which impose additional burdens on business while the programme of repeals and amendments is concerned with reducing the burden. However, it is estimated that cost savings of at least £100,000 a year will result from the amendments currently proposed.

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer by the repeal of each rule and regulation which has so far been the subject of a reference to the Deregulation Committee from his Department; and in how many cases a compliance cost assessment has been carried out. [41547]

Mr. Lang: My Department has laid four draft deregulation proposals to date. The savings to the Exchequer as a result of these orders are virtually impossible to quantify but are likely to be very small. However, it is estimated that they will result in savings to business of at least £100,000 a year.

The explanatory document which is presented to the Committee alongside each draft order is required to contain an assessment of the cost savings to business and any other persons whom the draft order is intended to benefit.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Deportations

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if M15 is to work with the immigration service in respect of deportations. [39934]

Mr. Howard: It remains the case that the Security Service may provide information to assist in the exercise of powers under immigration legislation in cases involving national security.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the regulations regarding deportation of those who leave their employers because of mistreatment and abuse. [39947]

Mr. Kirkhope: None. The immigration laws are applied firmly but fairly to all persons liable to deportation. However, full consideration is always given to the compassionate circumstances of each case before any decision is taken.

Foreign Workers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the possible outcome for foreign domestic workers suffering abuse from their employers. [39933]

Mr. Kirkhope: Domestic workers who are abused by their employers are advised to contact the police. Information about this is set out in the leaflet issued to domestic workers before arrival in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to act vigorously against employers who mistreat foreign domestic employees. [39935]

Mr. Kirkhope: The Government deplore all abuse of foreign domestic workers. The procedures in place guard against abuse as far as is possible. Any employer who uses violence towards an employee would be subject to the criminal law.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the extent to which immigration procedures may contribute to an increase in the number of individuals working in domestic service but unregistered as such. [39963]

Mr. Kirkhope: None. Current procedures are designed to ensure that only those domestic workers entitled to work as such in the United Kingdom are admitted or allowed to remain.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are allowed to remain in the United Kingdom only because they have a contract of employment. [39946]

Mr. Kirkhope: None. A person subject to immigration control needs to qualify for leave to remain under the immigration rules, or, in the case of overseas domestic workers, under the terms of the relevant concession.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of (a) the numbers of those people brought into the United Kingdom as domestic employees and (b) the percentage of those who suffer mistreatment and abuse. [39948]

Mr. Kirkhope: Comprehensive information on domestic workers admitted to the United Kingdom is not available. There are some entry clearance data for the 21 posts abroad which are likely to deal with the vast majority of applications by domestic workers. In the first six months of this year, nearly 6,300 visas were issued at these posts to domestic workers.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will inform in-country asylum seekers from countries who have undergone events likely to give rise to a well-founded fear of persecution that their entitlement to social security benefits will not cease on 8 January 1996. [41036]

Mr. Kirkhope: If declarations are made in respect of individual countries in accordance with the proposed benefit regulations, nationals of the countries concerned who submitted in-country asylum applications would be informed, as would relevant organisations and voluntary groups.

The benefit entitlement of all in-country applicants whose claims were lodged before 12 October will be protected until the next decision on their claim, regardless of whether their countries have undergone such events.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of those applying for asylum in 1994 had children with them in the United Kingdom; what percentage of the total this represents; and how many children were involved; [41502]

(2) how many persons applied to the United Kingdom for asylum in 1994; and how many were successful. [41499]

Mr. Kirkhope: In 1994, 32,830 principal applicants applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. Of those, approximately 4,000, 12 per cent., were accompanied by dependants. The estimated total number of dependants was 9,400, of whom approximately half were minor children.

In 1994, 825 principal applicants were granted asylum and a further 3,660 were refused asylum but granted exceptional leave: 16,500 were refused asylum.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of those seeking asylum do so (a) at the port of entry and (b) within the United Kingdom mainland after entry. [41500]

Mr. Kirkhope: In the last year, October 1994 to September 1995, there have been 40,180 applications for asylum. Of these, approximately 30 per cent. were made at the port of entry and 70 per cent. made after entry into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people are currently awaiting a decision on their application for asylum in the United Kingdom; and what is the date of the oldest application; [41498]

(2) how many of those currently awaiting determination of their applications for asylum in the United Kingdom submitted their application (a) after their existing leave to remain had expired and (b) within three weeks of its expiry. [41496]

Mr. Kirkhope: The number of outstanding applications for asylum in the United Kingdom as at 30 September 1995 was 64,415. The oldest outstanding application for asylum is not separately identifiable.

Of the 64,415 outstanding asylum applications, approximately 31,000 were lodged by people who had previously been given leave to enter or leave to remain in the United Kingdom. An estimated 7,200 of these applications were lodged after such leave had expired. Information regarding the number of these applications submitted within three weeks of their leave expiring is not readily available.

Remand Prisoners

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of remand prisoners who have been held in custody for a period in excess of three months. [41091]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Sir John Hunt, dated 6 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what is the current number of remand prisoners who have been held in custody for a period in excess of three months.

The latest provisional information relates to the length of time since first reception into a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales on 30 June 1995 and is given in the attached table.

Remand prisoners in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1995 held on remand for over 3 months[1]

On 30 June 1995
Number on remand for over 3 months	[2]4,200

[1] Awaiting trial or sentence. Time since first reception on remand into a Prison Service establishment. This includes any intervening time spent on bail, but excludes any time spent in police cells beforehand.

[2] Rounded provisional estimate.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of his Department's inspectors monitor the use of research animals by personal licensees, project licence holders and designated establishments; and if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the inspection system. [41041]

Mr. Kirkhope: All members of the animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate are involved in monitoring the use of animals in research. I am satisfied that the system is fully effective in delivering the objectives of the legislation.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of (a) personal licensees, (b) project licence holders and (c) designated establishments in the United Kingdom are permitted to carry out research on animals. [41042]

Mr. Kirkhope: At 31 December 1994, there were 15,807 personal licensees, 4,013 project licence holders and 331 certificates of designation.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many procedures on animals were carried out for tobacco research in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; and if he will give details of the experiments carried out for tobacco research; [41043]

(2) how many procedures on animals were carried out for alcohol research in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; and if he will make a statement; [41044]

(3) if he will list the areas of research which were responsible for the increased use of primates between 1993 and 1994; [41046]

(4) if he will list the pharmaceutical products which use primates in their research; and what was the number of primates used in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994 for each product. [41086]

Mr. Kirkhope: The numbers of procedures on animals are listed in "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain" for 1993, Cm 2746, and 1994, Cm 3012.

Prior to 1 January, figures for the number of animal used in fundamental or applied research involving tobacco or its products were not separately recorded.

The number of procedures for alcohol research for 1993 was 7,328 and for 1994, 9,119.

The increase in the use if primates is attributable to increased demands for regulatory testing of medical and dental products.

Primates are used in many ares of medical research. Where regulatory testing is concerned, it is not always known, at the time of testing, the product for which individual ingredients may be used.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the reasons for the delays in publishing "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals Great Britain" for (a) 1993 and (b) 1994. [41045]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the replies which the then Under-Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 18 January, Official Report, column 527, and the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 27 January, Official Report, column 455. It was not practical to publish in July this year since the returns were not complete by that date. The annual Command Paper was last published in July in 1992, and for reasons explained in the earlier replies the annual publication is likely to appear in the autumn in future.

Sentenced Prisoners Convention

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many countries have ratified the European Council convention concerning the return of sentenced prisoners; how many have agreements with the United Kingdom; how many British citizens have been repatriated to prisons in the United Kingdom over the last five years to date; what discussions have taken place with each country to determine the principles of repatriation agreements; if he will list the main features of each such agreement; what arrangements exist to review them; if the receiving country may reduce the sentence imposed by another jurisdiction; and if he will make a statement; [41047]

(2) how many British citizens given prison sentences in America have been repatriated to prisons in the United Kingdom in the last five years, to date; what prior agreement was reached in each case on the sentence to be served in the United Kingdom; what principles were agreed in discussions between both Governments before repatriation procedures were agreed; what arrangements were made for reviewing such procedures; and if he will make a statement; [41084]

(3) if Her Majesty's Government reserve the right to arrange to vary any prison sentence set by an overseas jurisdiction in the case of any person legally repatriated to prison in the United Kingdom under international agreement; how many such persons in the last five years, to date, applied for such a variation to be applied; to whom such applications have been made; and if he will make a statement. [41085]

Miss Widdecombe: The Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons has been ratified by the United Kingdom and 31 other countries. The United Kingdom and four other countries have ratified the Commonwealth repatriation scheme. The United Kingdom has also entered into a bilateral prisoner repatriation agreement with Thailand.

The principles of repatriation are set out in each of the three agreements, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The main features of all three agreements are that: repatriation requires the consent of both jurisdictions and the prisoner concerned; the prisoner's sentence is not subject to further appeal and has at least six months left to run, and the prisoner is a national of the jurisdiction to which repatriation is sought and the acts which gave rise to the sentence would have constituted a criminal offence there.

The operation of the convention is reviewed by the European committee on crime problems of the Council of Europe. The Commonwealth scheme may be reviewed by the Commonwealth Secretariat. The bilateral agreement may be reviewed by either jurisdiction.

All repatriation requests are considered on their individual merits in consultation with the foreign jurisdiction. The United Kingdom has opted to conduct repatriation arrangements on the basis of continued enforcement of the original sentence. Under these arrangements, the jurisdiction responsible for administering a prisoner's sentence following repatriation is bound by the legal nature and duration of the original sentence. It is not therefore possible for the United Kingdom to vary or reduce the sentence imposed by a foreign jurisdiction. If, however, a foreign sentence is by its nature or duration incompatible with the law of the United Kingdom, the sentence may be adapted to a sanction prescribed in law for a similar offence. Any such adaptation must not aggravate by its nature or duration the sanction imposed by the sentencing state or exceed the maximum prescribed by law in the United Kingdom. Since 1990, the United Kingdom has conducted one repatriation of a British prisoner on the basis of the original sentence being adapted in this way with the consent of the sentencing jurisdiction and the prisoner concerned.

Between 1990 and 1994, 44 British prisoners were repatriated to the United Kingdom from foreign jurisdictions, including 11 prisoners repatriated from the United States of America. In each case, repatriation was conducted on the basis of both jurisdictions and the prisoner concerned consenting to the arrangements to be made for the continued enforcement of the sentence imposed.

Internet

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what investigations his Department has made into the practicality of the regulation of material available on the Internet; [41819]

(2) what representations he has received about the possible regulation of material available on the Internet. [41817]

Mr. Kirkhope: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of letters expressing concern about the availability of obscene and pornographic material on the Internet. The interdepartmental group on obscenity is examining this issue and hopes shortly to be discussing it with Internet service providers.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is responsible for more general questions relating to the regulation of the Internet and other computer networks.

Industry is responsible for more general questions relating to the regulation of the Internet and other computer networks.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers are available to the police to take action against users who make material available on the Internet which would be illegal in any other medium. [41818]

Mr. Kirkhope: The provisions of the criminal law apply to material disseminated on the Internet in the same way as to material disseminated on other media. It is, for example, an offence to publish obscene material or child pornography on the Internet. We have recently taken action in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to ensure that our controls keep pace with advances in technology. This has included clarification of the law to assist the police in gaining access to computer bulletin boards.

Ridgewell Air Force Base

Sir Alan Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to the former Air Force base at Ridgewell in Essex as the site for a new high security prison; and if he will make a statement. [41709]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Sir Alan Haselhurst, dated 6 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the former airforce base at Ridgewell in Essex as I have operational responsibility for the Prison Service.

The Prison Service has not been considering this site for a new high security prison. If the site is available, the Prison Service will examine its suitability as a potential site for new prison development.

Prisons Ombudsman

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of cases referred to the prisons ombudsman since his appointment. [40943]

Miss Widdecombe: The prisons ombudsman had received 1,810 letters of complaint by 31 October 1995, of which 464 were eligible for investigation by his office; the eligibility of a further 159 was being considered.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of persons in the last 12 months who have been caught trying to take illegal drugs into prison while visiting an inmate. [41859]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 6 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of persons in the last 12 months who have been caught trying to take illegal drugs into prison while visiting an inmate.

Between 1 January and 30 September this year, the total number of incidents reported to Prison Service headquarters of visitors caught trying to take illegal drugs into prison while visiting an inmate was 1,109.

Visitors' Visas

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors' visas were (a) granted and (b) refused from applicants in (i) Pakistan, (ii) India, (iii) Bangladesh and (iv) Nigeria in (1) 1992, (2) 1993, and (3) 1994. [41723]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on visas granted and refused by country of application is published in table 2.1 of the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issued on 10 August 1995, Cm 2935, by HMSO, a copy of which is in the Library.

Fires

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) deaths and (b) severe injuries from fires occurred in houses in multiple occupation for the years 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95. [41053]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information about deaths and injuries in fires in houses in multiple occupation, attended by local authority fire brigades, is published in table G of the Home Office publication "Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1993", available in the Library; 1993 is the latest year for which such statistics are available.

Discretionary Life Sentences

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has issued a notice of appeal against the High Court judgment concerning the case of Paul Norwey, Stephen Nordone, Sean Kinsella, Noel Gibson and Brendan Dowd; what action he is taking to change procedures concerning discretionary life sentence prisoners applying for parole; and if he will make a statement. [40565]

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon and learned Friend has decided not to appeal against the High Court judgment in this case. Arrangements are now in hand to ensure that the cases of discretionary life sentence prisoners are referred to the Parole Board so that they may be heard by a discretionary lifer panel immediately on expiry of the prisoners' tariffs or shortly thereafter. It will be entirely a matter for the panel to decide whether to direct release.

New Prisons

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the prisons to be built by 2000, with the costs of each. [40459]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 6 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about new prisons to be built by the year 2000.

Six new prisons are planned to be built under the private sector design, construct, manage and finance (DCMF) initiative announced by the Home Secretary on 2 September 1993. The first two prisons will be at Bridgend in South Wales and at Fazakerley on Merseyside. These are due to open in 1997–98. A site for a third prison has been identified in the Salford area of Greater Manchester, but the local planning authority have objected to the proposal. The Prison Service is considering making a request to the Secretary of State for the Environment to determine the dispute and this could lead to a public inquiry. Site searching for the remainder of the DCMF projects is in progress and it is too early to give locations and likely timescales.

In addition to the six new DCMF prisons, the former Lowdham Grange prison near Nottingham will be rebuilt as a 500 bed, category B prison to be operated by the private sector. The prison is planned to open during 1997–98.

An annual management charge will be paid, subject to contract, so far as Fazakerley and Bridgend prisons, are concerned. Costs are not available at this time. Costs for Lowdham Grange and the other DCMF prisons are not yet known.

Prison Escorts

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will break down the savings achieved for each privatised prison escort area, showing how the savings are achieved; [40463]

(2) what is the cost for letting each escort contract; to whom each contract has been let; what is the budget reduction for each area as a result of the privatisation of the escort service, to how many staff posts is this equivalent; and what redundancies have occurred so far. [40462]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 6 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the contracted out court escort service.

To date contracts have been implemented for the provision of this service in four of the eight court escort areas in England and Wales. This work was previously undertaken by the Prison Service and the police.

The attached table shows the contractor in each area together with information about costs and, insofar as the Prison Service is concerned, budget reductions expressed in financial and staffing terms. The savings relate to posts in the police and Prison Service deployed on court escort duties on a full time and part-time basis and vehicle mileage costs.

The actual level of reduction in respect of police service posts could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Decisions about how to manage the reductions, which were effected by top slicing police service budgets, were taken locally.

The direct costs to the Prison Service of the process of letting the contracts were approximately £150,000 per area.

Area	Contractor	Annual cost £ million[1]	Previous cost £ million[2]	Saving £ million	Budgetary reduction (Prison Service) £ million[3]	Number of staff posts lost (Prison Service)[4]	Redundancies

6 (Merseyside, Greater Manchester North Wales)	Group 4 Court Services	12.5	14.7	2.2	2.7	124	—

[1] Contract cost based on first year of full operation.

[2] Equivalent cost of the Police and Prison Service operation prior to contracting out (includes overheads, vehicle costs, catering and medical support).

[3] Budgetary reductions relates to Prison Service only.

[4] The posts shown as being given up were those sufficient to meet the cost of the Prison Service contribution to the contract cost. Other officers previously employed on court escort work were redeployed to other operational duties.

Certified National Accommodation

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of certified national accommodation for each of the next five years. [40458]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 6 November 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about the estimate of certified normal accommodation in prisons in England and Wales for each of the next five years.

The most recent available projections were those published in May as part of the Prison Service's 1995 corporate plan. Revised and updated projections will be published in the new year as part of the 1996 corporate plan.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Salaries

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest full-time salary paid to any employee in his (i) Department (ii) agencies and (iii) non-departmental public bodies in (1) 1994–95 and (2) 1995–96.

Mr. Newton: It is the Government's normal policy to publish civil servants' salaries in bands. Accordingly, the lowest full-time salary in payment within the Privy Council Office fell within the band £10,000 to £14,999 in both 1994–95 and 1995–96. The highest full-time salary fell within the band £65,000 to £69,999 in both years.

I am not responsible for any agencies or non-departmental public bodies.

Annual Remuneration

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will estimate the number of individuals in his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies whose annual remuneration including benefits in kind exceeded (i) £100,000, (ii) £200,000 and (ii) £300,000 in (1) 1985–86, (2) 1990–91, (3) 1992–93 and (4) 1994–95 and (5) 1995–96.

Mr. Newton: No member of the Privy Council Office staff receives or has received annual remuneration in excess of £100,000. I am not responsible for any agencies or non-departmental public bodies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Strangers' Cafeteria

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if the staff who work in the Strangers' Cafeteria have yet been consulted on the proposed rearrangement of the cafeteria. [41387]

Mr. Beith [holding answer 3 November 1995]: Yes. The management of the Refreshment Department has actively sought the views of staff who work in both the Members' and Strangers' Cafeterias since proposals were first made for the modernisation of these outlets in a consultant's report in July 1992.

Payment of Claims

Mr. Stern: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will highlight, in the 1995–96 and subsequent reports of the Commission, in how many cases claims submitted by the hon. Members to the Fees Office are delayed for more than 50 per cent. of the average number of days for the year claimed. [40275]

Mr. Beith: At present such statistics are not collected. A monitoring exercise such as the one described by the hon. Gentleman could be implemented only at disproportionate cost and with a loss of effective processing time which would lead to additional delays.

Mr. Stern: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what steps he is taking to restore the average delay in payment of claims submitted by hon. Members to the Fees Office to the levels achieved in 1993–94. [40274]

Mr. Beith: The average delay in payment fluctuates with the number of claims received and available resources. The current turnaround of claims is better than the level recorded in the Commission's annual report for 1993–94 and therefore restoration measures are not required.

Staff (Ethnic Monitoring)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what proportion of those employed in domestic service in the House are from ethnic minority backgrounds. [39943]

Mr. Beith: Ethnic monitoring of staff employed by the Commission has been in place since 1988. This is carried out on a voluntary basis and not all staff choose to respond to the ethnic monitoring questionnaire. The current figures for staff in the respective ethnic groupings are as follows:

	Numbers of staff	Percentage
White	877	64.9
Asian (East African)	1	0.01
Asian (Indian)	12	0.9
Asian (Other)	8	0.6
Black (African)	23	1.7
Black (Carribbean)	26	1.9
Black (Other)	3	0.2
Other	8	0.6
Questionnaires not returned	394	29.1
Total	1,352

Contracted-out Services

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, which House of Commons work has now been contracted out; if he will give the date when the contract commenced and the numbers of workers; and what numbers of staff are not subject to any contracting out arrangements. [39323]

Mr. Beith [holding answer 23 October 1995]: Services are contracted out by House Departments where this can meet the requirements of the House and provide benefits in quality, efficiency and value for money. The area where this is done on the largest scale is new works and maintenance of the parliamentary estate, where 96 per cent. of the work is contracted out by the Parliamentary Works Directorate. A team of 97 directly employed labour provides a service in dealing with emergencies, urgent minor requests and shift working to attend boilers and other plant.

If the hon. Member has any particular areas on which he would like detailed information, I would ask him to contact the Director of Works or the relevant Head of Department.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what access provision is being made for disabled people in the new parliamentary building; what organisations have been consulted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: A ramp is provided between the pavement to the main entrance and the main courtyard level, a rise of 0.5 m. The lifts at each corner of the courtyard will reach all floors of the building. The six Members' rooms on the sixth floor are the only rooms not readily accessible to disabled persons, as they are reached from the floor below by spiral staircases. There are lavatories for the disabled on all the main floors. The new parliamentary building has been designed according to good practice and current regulations. Consultation with appropriate organisations is undertaken from time to time as necessary but has not so far taken place in connection with the new parliamentary building.

Decanting of Parliamentary Buildings

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee which buildings in the Palace of Westminster were decanted to be refurbished or cabled during the summer recess; if he will place the tender specifications in the Library; what delays there have been in the work contracted; what fines have been levied on the contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: The parts of the Palace of Westminster decanted for summer recess works were the Upper Committee Corridor North in the Commons and Principal Floor West Front and the Lord Chancellor's Department in the other place. The ground floor of the Norman Shaw North building and No. 2 The Abbey Garden were also vacated.

Tender specifications for specific contracts can be made available by the Director of Parliamentary Works should the hon. Member wish to consult him. All offices were available for occupation when the House returned from the recess in October. No fines have been levied on the contractors.

Travel Costs

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council what would be the reduction of the annual total costs of travel by hon. Members if the travel allowance rates for staff in the Treasury were substituted for the rates that may be claimed.

Mr. Newton: This information is not available and could be produced only at a disproportionate cost.

Charity Payroll Giving

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 303, if he will list by party affiliation the 45 right hon. and hon. Members who are signed up to the charity payroll giving scheme operated by the Fees Office.

Mr. Newton: The party affiliation of the 45 right hon. and hon. Members who participate in the charity payroll giving scheme operated by the Fees Office is not a matter of public record.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many orders were put before Parliament in each of the years between 1979–94 during parliamentary recesses; and if he will indicate those Government Ministers responsible for those orders and the number of orders per Government Department.

Mr. Newton: The numbers of statutory instruments laid before the House of Commons in each year from 1979 to 1994, during parliamentary recesses, including Christmas, Easter, Whitsun and summer are as follows:

1979: 236

1980: 216

1981: 206

1982: 233

1983: 170

1984: 207

1985: 161

1986: 258

1987: 232

1988: 267

1989: 253

1990: 231

1991: 323

1992: 275

1993: 293

1994: 425

It would not be possible, except at disproportionate cost, to provide figures by reference to the presenting Minister or Government Department.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many orders were laid before Parliament during the summer adjournment; by which bodies; and on which date.

Mr. Newton: The number of statutory instruments laid before the House of Commons during the summer adjournment was 260. The Departments responsible were the Treasury (18), the Home Office (eight), the Department of Trade and Industry (13), the Department of Transport (16), the Privy Council (five), the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (18), the Department of the Environment (29), the Welsh Office (eight), the Department of Social Security (10), the Scottish Office (54), the Department of National Heritage (three), the Northern Ireland Office (nine), the Department of Education and Employment (12), the Department of Health (41) and the Lord Chancellor's Department (12). There were four Instruments from the General Synod, relating to ecclesiastical law, which were laid in the name of the Clerk of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Deregulation

38. Mr. Denham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on progress towards deregulation. [39725]

Mr. Freeman: Among recent initiatives, we have agreed to launch a joint initiative with the French Government to consider the reduction of regulatory burdens on small businesses.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 410, what progress is being made towards realising the target of repealing those regulations identified as unnecessary burdens to business; how many of these will be repealed by the end of the year; and if he will make a statement. [41574]

Mr. Freeman: Over 1,000 regulations have been targeted by Departments for repeal or amendment to remove unnecessary burdens on business and we are on target to have dealt with over half of those by the end of the year.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what new deregulation initiatives he is considering. [39726]

Mr. Freeman: With the help of the deregulation task force, we continue to identify changes to existing rules and requirements to reduce the burdens they impose without removing necessary protections. Particular areas the task force will be focusing on over the next few months include the labour market, planning, building regulations, financial services, the health sector and different approaches to regulation. We are also working to make enforcement provisions fairer, more transparent and more consistent, including use of the new powers in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. In order to ensure that new requirements are introduced only where they are really needed, Ministers have agreed to certify when regulation is brought forward that the regulation strikes an appropriate balance between cost and benefit.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the rules and regulations he proposes to repeal or amend by means of a reference to the Deregulation Committee before the end of 1995, and if he will make a statement. [41546]

Mr. Freeman: The Cabinet Office provides the Deregulation Committee with a monthly statement showing those deregulation proposals which are the subject of consultation and an indication of those which may be brought forward as draft proposals in the following two months. Copies of the October statement have been placed in the Vote Office.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40745]

Mr. Freeman: The cost of ministerial transport for Ministers located in the Cabinet Office, excluding VAT, in each of the last five financial years up to 31 March 1995 is as follows:

1990–91: £82,950
1991–92: £94,916
1992–93: £102,076
1993–94: £102,596
1994–95: £132,479

No allowances were paid to Ministers for the use of their own vehicles during this period.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Farming and Forestry Industry (Accidents)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer on 16 October, Official Report, column 178, what action his Department is taking to reduce the number of fatal accidents in the farming and forestry industry. [38867]

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture's health and safety inspectorate will, through its on-going programme of statutory inspections and accident prevention education, continue to work towards improving health and safety awareness in the farming and forestry industry. There are also strong links developing with the Republic of Ireland on this matter to share information and experience.

Ormeau Road Arrests

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were arrested or charged for disturbance on the lower Ormeau road over the marching season; and how many of these people are from the lower Ormeau road. [39365]

Sir John Wheeler: A total of 26 arrests were made during the "marching season" on the lower Ormeau road. Of these, 17 were from the lower Ormeau road area and nine were from elsewhere. On all cases files are with the Director of Public Prosecutions for decision.

Domestic Electricity Costs

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes in Northern Ireland are heated solely by electricity. [39637]

Mr. Ancram: Figures for the 1994–95 continuous household survey show that an estimated 9 per cent. of households in Northern Ireland are heated solely by electricity. The 1991 census recorded a total of some 530,000 households in Northern Ireland.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40747]

Sir John Wheeler: Records on ministerial transport, including internal and overseas air transport, are available only for the last three financial years, April to March. These costs, which are greatly inflated by necessary security requirements, were:

1993–94: £992,663
1994–95: £1,041,077
1995–96: £365,641 (to 31 October 1995)

Ministers at the Northern Ireland Office do not use their own vehicles. Consequently, no allowances have been paid.

James Dixon Home, Belfast

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the security costs incurred at the former James Dixon home in Rugby avenue, Belfast since it was vacated by the Eastern health and social services board; and what consideration is being given to making it available for (a) student accommodation and (b) single accommodation by transfer to a registered housing association or similar body. [40886]

Mr. Moss: The building has been unoccupied since June and is currently being secured 24 hours per day at a cost of £2,000 per month.

South and East Belfast Trust has been considering alternative uses for the premises. An approach has been made by the Belfast Community Housing Association and the trust, in conjunction with the Department of Health and Social Services, will be entering into discussions with the housing association in the near future to consider its proposals for the future use of this facility.

Child Support

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those Department of Health and Social Services benefits that are not taken into account in child support assessments; if they are taxable; and if he will make a statement. [40889]

Mr. Moss: The benefits which are disregarded in the calculation of net income under the child support formula are listed in schedule 2 to the Child Support (Maintenance Assessments and Special Cases) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1992. I have arranged for a copy of the regulations to be placed in the library. The social security benefits listed in the schedule are non-taxable.

GPs' Dispensing Lists

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what process of consultation was undergone before it was decided that patients living less than 5 km from a pharmacy would no longer be able to collect medication from a general practitioner's surgery; what considerations underlie the application of the 5 km rule to Northern Ireland and the one-mile rule in Great Britain; what effect the rule change will have on residents of Lisbane, County Down; and if he will make a statement. [41229]

Mr. Moss: Extensive consultation and deliberation have taken place over two and a half years, involving health and social services boards, the Central Services Agency and the representative bodies of both the medical and pharmaceutical professions. Health and social services councils are now going to be consulted about the final draft of the revised guidelines. When boards come to implement the guidelines they will be approaching individual patients about their needs and circumstances, as they review their general practitioners' dispensing lists.

Regulations governing dispensing by doctors in Northern Ireland are similar to those operating in Scotland, but different to those which apply in England and Wales. The guidelines operating under the various regulations are therefore also different. The one-mile rule in England and Wales is actually contained in regulations but is not used in determining whether a patient has serious difficulty in obtaining medication from a pharmacy. Under the revised Northern Ireland guidelines it is proposed to use 5 km distance from a pharmacy as the general basic test for serious difficulty. This is considered reasonable, given that a two-mile rule has been in operation from 1957 and there have been significant improvements in transport and telecommunications since then. In addition, many pharmacies are now providing collection and delivery services, making it easier for patients to get their drugs. Boards will, however, have the flexibility to exercise judgment in relation to individual patients when reasons other than distance exist for serious difficulty. In exercising such judgment, boards will have as their paramount concern the overall needs of patients and their access to the professional services of both general medical practitioners and community pharmacists.

The effect of the changes on the residents of Lisbane, County Down, will not be known until the revised guidelines are applied by the Eastern health and social services board, in relation to individual patients on general practitioners' dispensing lists.

Waste Disposal, Newtownards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment his Department has made of the risks to public health arising from the unofficial dump in the disused quarry at the intersection of the Ballybarnes and Tullynagardy roads in Newtownards; and if he will make a statement about provision of official dumps in the Newtownards area. [41230]

Mr. Moss: The licensing of waste disposal facilities is a matter for the district council—in this case Ards borough council. The council has licensed the site in question at Craiganee quarry and reports that there are no matters relating to the site which constitute a public health nuisance. The council has adopted a 10-year waste disposal plan for the borough which is regularly reviewed.

Stormont Fire

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those recommendations of the Doyle report into the Stormont fire which have already been implemented by Government Departments and those which have not. [41231]

Mr. Moss: The Doyle report made 30 recommendations in relation to fire safety of Crown buildings in Northern Ireland. To date, some 22 of these have been put into practice by Northern Ireland Departments while the remaining eight are in the process of implementation.

Those recommendations which have already been implemented are contained in the following paragraphs of the report:

Paras 1.4.1 to 1.4.3

Paras 1.4.6 to 1.4.12

Paras 1.4.15 to 1.4.16

Paras 1.4.18 to 1.4.23

Paras 1.4.25 to 1.4.28

Roads Expenditure

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the capital expenditure on each class of road in each of the past five years in the borough of ards; when the proposed link road at Portaferry/Comber road, Newtownards was first included in the local area plan; at what stage is the design and acquisition of lands for the road; and if he will make a statement about the programme for construction of this link road. [41232]

Mr. Moss: Details of capital expenditure by roads classification are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate costs. Overall capital expenditure covering major and minor works, traffic management and accident remedial schemes, street lighting and car park provision in the Ards borough council area was for the years in question as follows:

1990–91: £1,101,000

1991–92: £472,000

1992–93: £792,000

1993–94: £612,000

1994–95: £558,000

The Portaferry road-Comber road link, Newtownards appeared in the North Down area plan which was published in 1972. At the moment, design work is at a very preliminary stage and a final line for the road has yet to be determined. The scheme is included in the current major road works programme with a planned starting date in the 1999–2000 financial year, subject to the necessary finance being available.

Health and Social Services Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial reserves have been held (a) by trusts and (b) by health authorities in each region in each of the last three years. [41416]

Mr. Moss: The financial reserves held by health and social services trusts and boards are disclosed in the annual financial accounts.

The reserves held by the health and social services trusts and boards in each area are as follows:

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will itemise the financial reserves of each (a) trust and (b) health authority in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [41426]

Mr. Moss: The financial reserves held by health and social services trusts are disclosed in the annual financial accounts. The tables itemise the reserves held by trusts in each area for 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Continuing Care Beds

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many NHS continuing care beds have been available in each (a) region and (b) district in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [41420]

Mr. Moss: Information is not available in the format requested. The table shows the average number of available beds in long stay wards only for people who have a learning disability or are mentally ill, and the average number of available beds in wards for elderly and young physically disabled patients.

Respite Care Beds

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) NHS and (b) private respite care beds were available (i) by region and (ii) by health authority in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [41408]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Advertising Expenditure

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission how much has been spent on outside advertising agencies for each year since 1979; and if he will list the specific advertising campaigns undertaken by his Department, their purpose and their cost. [32480]

Sir Peter Hordern: The National Audit Office does not engage in advertising campaigns, other than for graduate and specialist recruitment. The costs of advertising for recruitment purposes are currently around £90,000 each year.

DEFENCE

No. 13 Air Experience Flight

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of annual savings to the defence budget of the proposed closure of No. 13 Air Experience Flight, Royal Air Force volunteer reserve. [41389]

Mr. Soames: The estimated annual savings to the defence budget of the closure of No. 13 Air Experience Flight of the Air Cadet Organisation would be £190,000.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the air experience flights of the Royal Air Force volunteer reserve in the United Kingdom identifying which it is planned to (a) close and (b) move in the next three years. [41398]

Mr. Soames: The current air experience flights of the Air Cadet Organisation are listed. A proposal to close No. 13 Air Experience Flight of the Air Cadet Organisation has recently been the subject of consultation and is now receiving consideration. The amalgamation of the flying operations of university air squadrons and air experience flights at regional locations, using the University Air Squadron Bulldog aircraft, has recently been announced and will be implemented in 1996. One of the effects will be that six air experience flights, which are marked with asterisks on the list, will reform at new locations.

Rifle Ammunition

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests have been performed on rifle ammunition purchased from the Portuguese firm INDEP to determine their failure rate; what was the failure rate of the ammunition; what is his Department's standard failure rate of rifle ammunition; if his Department has encountered any technical problems with the ammunition; and if the ammunition purchased from INDEP has been assessed as satisfactory. [41568]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The 7.62 mm sniper rifle round produced by INDEP, which won the recent competition to supply ammunition for the National Rifle Association, has been subjected to three sets of tests. Prior to INDEP's inclusion in the tender invitation list, the design integrity of their round was established. During production, sample rounds underwent a number of acceptance tests examining different aspects of the manufacture of the rounds and their functioning in service weapons. Pass-fail criteria varied from test to test but were rigorous; no critical defects were allowed and major defects could not occur in more than one round in 1,000. To date all acceptance tests have been satisfactory. Finally, following the NRA's reports of misfires, the Defence Test and Evaluation Organisation carried out extensive tests during which over 1,500 rounds of INDEP ammunition were fired from service issue sniper rifles. No misfires occurred. We remain satisfied that the INDEP ammunition is to the specification laid down in the contract.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department purchased rifle ammunition from the Portuguese firm INDEP; how many rounds of ammunition were purchased; and what was the total value of the order. [41567]

Mr. Arbuthnot: INDEP was awarded a contract for 1.3 million rounds of 7.62 mm sniper rifle ammunition on 10 February 1995. The contract value is commercially confidential.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to (a) disband, (b) merge and (c) move any units of the Territorial Army and Royal Naval reserve in Northern Ireland in the next three years. [41400]

Mr. Soames: None.

Anglo-French Defence Measures

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the joint defence measures agreed with the Government of France on 13 October. [41564]

Mr. Soames: The UK-French summit on 30 October reviewed the wide range of bilateral defence co-operation between the United Kingdom and France and agreed to build further on this. Discussions also highlighted a common position on a wide range of defence issues.

Mobile Cellphones

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures his Department possesses to prevent the accidental monitoring of mobile cellphones. [41566]

Mr. Soames: It is MOD policy that only cellphones used by MOD personnel for official use are subjected to monitoring, and the equipment can be programmed to monitor only calls involving specified cellphones.

If a non-MOD call is unintentionally intercepted during a scanning sweep of frequencies then the procedure laid down, in accordance with the Interception of Communications Act 1985, requires the operator to stop monitoring of the call immediately, dispose of all recorded material from that intercept and log the incident.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the rules and regulations he proposes to repeal or amend by means of a reference to the Deregulation Committee before the end of 1995; and if he will make a statement; [41531]

(2) what regulations his Department proposes to repeal by the end of 1995; if he proposes to conduct a compliance cost assessment on each regulation repealed; and what is the estimated cost of undertaking a compliance cost assessment to assess the advantages or disadvantages of such a repeal; [41554]

(3) what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer by the repeal of each rule and regulation which has so far been the subject of a reference to the Deregulation Committee from his Department; and in how many cases a compliance cost assessment has been carried out. [41532]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department is not a regulator of business so it does not refer proposals to the Deregulation Committee. As a non-regulatory Department we are playing a full part in the deregulation initiative by focusing our efforts on relieving unnecessary administrative burdens on our suppliers, streamlining contracts procedures and improving communications.

RAF University Cadetships

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost in the academic year 1996–97 of the travelling and accommodation expenses of students at Queen's university, Belfast holding university cadetships sponsored by the Royal Air Force to attend training at university air squadrons in Great Britain. [41403]

Mr. Soames: There are currently no students at Queen's university holding university cadetships sponsored by the RAF. Assessments of the costs of travel and accommodation for any future students at Queen's university awarded a cadetship sponsored by the RAF in the future will be made as and when awards are approved.

Cadet Forces (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has (a) to disband, (b) merge and (c) move units of the Army Cadet Force and for the Cadet Corps in Northern Ireland in the next three years. [41399]

Mr. Soames: There are currently no plans to disband, merge or move units of the Army Cadet Force or the Combined Cadet Force in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he is making for the Royal Air Force to provide air experience in powered aircraft to cadets of the Air Training Corps and Combined Cadet Force in Northern Ireland following the closure of No. 13 Air Experience Flight of the Royal Air Force volunteer reserve. [41390]

Mr. Soames: A proposal for the closure of No. 13 Air Experience Flight of the Air Cadet Organisation is still receiving consideration. If accepted, air cadets in Northern Ireland would be offered the same level of flying opportunities as cadets on the mainland, the establishment of a volunteer gliding school offering powered gliding, and the provision of opportunities for air experience flights during annual camps on the mainland.

Army Helicopter (Misuse)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will make a statement on the conclusions of his Department's special investigation branch into the allegations concerning the misuse of an Army helicopter to transport a commanding officer to a golf competition in Scotland. [41565]

Mr. Soames: The special investigations branch has completed and submitted a report into the allegations concerning the misuse of an Army helicopter. This is now being considered by my Department and I will advise the hon. Member of the outcome shortly.

University Air Squadron

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the complement of aircraft and qualified flying instructors of university air squadrons in Great Britain to provide training for students from Queen's university, Belfast holding university cadetships sponsored by the Royal Air Force following the closure of Queen's University Air Squadron, Belfast. [41401]

Mr. Soames: At present, there are no plans to increase the complement of aircraft or qualified flying instructors at university air squadrons in Great Britain to provide flying training for students at Queen's University, Belfast holding university cadetships sponsored by the RAF. Should the decision be taken to close the Queen's University Air Squadron, the flying training of any students holding RAF sponsored cadetships would be undertaken from within existing resources.

Radioactive Debris

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made since 1965 by the Meteorological Office of the fallout pattern of radioactive debris arising from the French atmospheric weapon tests conducted in the Algerian Sahara desert between 1960 and 1966; and if he will make a statement on what (a) public protection and (b) information measures have been taken since 1965 in the United Kingdom. [40258]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Meteorological Office makes no assessment of fallout patterns of radioactive debris. It does, however, provide essential meteorological data and forecasts to the other Government Departments with responsibility for public protection and information measures.

AEA Technology, formerly a division of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, has measured the deposition and air concentration of long-lived radioactive material produced as a result of weapons tests in the atmosphere since the late 1950s. Annual reports have been published.

In the event of an accident involving defence nuclear material in the UK, the Ministry of Defence nuclear accident response organisation would work in conjunction with the appropriate civil agencies to ensure an effective response to safeguard the public. Where appropriate, the information necessary to deal with such an event has been issued by the MOD under the provisions of the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992.

Public safety schemes exist in respect of all UK berths used by nuclear powered submarines, and guidance on appropriate protective measures in the event of an accident during the transportation of nuclear weapons has been issued to local authorities and the emergency services.

A national response plan, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, was put in place in 1988 to deal with the possible impact on the UK from overseas nuclear accidents or major radioactive release overseas, of whatever origin.

Air Force Recruitment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current maximum age requirement for recruits to enter the Air Force; what was this age limit two years ago; and if he will make a statement. [41563]

Mr. Soames: The information is as follows:

Years and under

	Age requirement from 1 September 1995	Age requirement two years ago

[1] Exceptionally, recruits could be considered up to the age of 39 years.

[2] Exceptionally, recruits could be considered up to the age of 31 years.

[3] Older candidates could be considered on their merits.

[4] Older candidates could be considered in exceptional circumstances.

Temporary age restrictions have been imposed from 1 September 1995 on entry to training in the RAF. Given reductions and restructuring in the RAF following changes in the strategic environment, these restrictions are necessary to maintain a balanced age-rank structure for the future. The revised age criteria will be kept under regular review.

Training Assistance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which foreign Governments training assistance has been offered since 1992; and what was the total receipt in respect of such assistance in the financial years 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95. [40492]

Mr. Soames: According to available records the following countries have received United Kingdom assistance since 1992:

Country
Albania
Angola
Antigua and Barbuda
Austria
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belarus
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana

Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

The list covers training provided in the UK and training provided by UK service personnel overseas. In addition, forces on exercise overseas often provide limited training to, or train alongside, the armed forces of the host nation. A central record of such training is not maintained.

According to available records the following total receipts were received from foreign Governments in respect of such assistance in financial years 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95:

1992–93: £35,298,325

1993–94: £45,117,356

1994–95: £51,126,747

Military Hospitals (Health Services)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the administrative cost of market testing and contracting out the services provided by the military hospitals at Ruinteln and Wegberg in Germany; when these hospitals will close; how many (a) service personnel and (b) United Kingdom civilian staff will be made redundant; how many organisations made full bids to take over these services; and if the contract was awarded to the lowest bidder. [40760]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my answers to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 16 October 1995, Official Report, columns 32–35. The total cost of mounting the project in terms of the full-time project and in-house bid teams and consultancy support is estimated at some £1,700,000. The Health Alliance submitted the lowest compliant bid to provide full primary, community and secondary health care to the Army and primary and community health care to the RAF in Germany from 1 April 1996.

Royal Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft, of which type, make up No. 32, the Royal Squadron; what is the original capital value of each aircraft; how old each is; and what is its present value. [41383]

Mr. Soames: Details of the composition of No. 32, the Royal Squadron, which is responsible for royal, VIP and other communications flying, are set out in the table. Under the Government's resource accounting initiative, the capital values of all such assets are being identified; however, this work will not be complete until April 1998.

Aircraft of No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron—at 1 November 1995

[1] Aircraft established.

[2] In use reserve.

Mr. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the usage of the royal flight in each of the five years to April 1995 was used by the royal family (a) as a proportion of occasions used and (b) as a proportion of distance covered. [41384]

Mr. Soames: The percentage of passenger carrying flights by the Queen's flight on which a member of the royal family was a passenger in each financial year from 1990–91 to 1994–95 was as follows:

1990–91: 94 per cent.

1991–92: 95 per cent.

1993–94: 94 per cent.

1993–94: 90 per cent.

1994–95: 88 per cent.

Information on distance covered could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Weapons, France

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial arrangements are in place governing the Franco-British Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine. [41447]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 23 October, Official Report, column 476.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the memoranda of understanding which currently exist between Britain and France with regard to all aspects of nuclear weapons; and if he will set out the purpose of each memorandum giving the date on which each one was signed, whether its text is still classified, on what dates each one has been amended, why it was amended on each occasion and what other countries are party to it. [41446]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 24 October, Official Report, column 587.

Jobs, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of (a) defence and (b) defence-related jobs in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement. [41250]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information is not available in the form requested. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey) on Monday 16 October, Official Report, columns 32–33. There are currently 423 service men and 1,285 civilians based in Clwyd, mainly at RAF Sealand.

Military Hospitals, Germany

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the revenue cost of running (a) Rinteln and (b) Wegberg military hospital in Germany in each of the last five years: and what the annual cost will be of replacement medical services provided by the Health Alliance. [40762]

Mr. Soames: The running costs for the British military hospital Rinteln and the RAF hospital Wegberg in the last five years, including an estimate of expenditure for the current financial year, are as follows:

		£ million
	RAF (H) Wegberg	BMH Rinteln
1991–92	10.7	9.2
1992–93	11.7	10.6
1993–94	12.2	13.2
1994–95	12.3	15.7
1995–96	12.5	16.6

It is not possible to give comparable figures for the replacement service as there will be a fundamental change in the method of provision of health care services and there will be overlap with other elements of the health care service in Germany.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on capital projects at (a) Rinteln and (b) Wegberg military hospitals in Germany in each of the last five years. [40761]

Mr. Soames: There has been no capital expenditure at RAF hospital Wegberg in the last five years. Capital expenditure at the British military hospital Rinteln in the last five years, in deutschmark millions, was:

	BMH Rinteln
1993–94	2.6
1994–95	0.3
1995–96	8.4

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of (a) his Department's invitation to tender documents and (b) the service specification that forms part of the contract awarded to the Health Alliance for replacing the health services provided currently by the military hospitals at Rinteln and Wegberg. [40763]

Mr. Soames: A copy of the invitation to tender will be placed in the Library of the House. A copy of the statement of requirement—service specification—is already available in the Library of the House.

Corporate Head Office Technology System

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the future of the corporate head office technology system; if he intends to update the Unix-based OfficePower system; and how CHOTS will relate to the relocated Procurement Executive. [41119]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Unix-based corporate headquarters office technology system is currently being upgraded for the fourth time since the start of implementation in 1991. This latest upgrade delivers OfficePower Version 7 replacing the existing version of OfficePower 450 on CHOTS. There are no plans to update OfficePower beyond version 7.

A review involving a wide range of existing and potential CHOTS users established a clear need to operate a range of modern commercial software on the CHOTS workstation. As a result, it was agreed in May 1995 that a further development be undertaken. This work is now well under way with the objective of providing MicroSoft Windows applications on CHOTS. The full extent to which current and future CHOTS installations will use this development is still under consideration.

A number of CHOTS terminals will be installed at Abbey Wood. These terminals, plus connections with other IT systems, at Abbey Wood will allow the relocated Procurement Executive headquarters to communicate with the wider CHOTS population.

Gurkha Troops

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Gurkha troops qualify for the same pay and conditions as their British counterparts. [41108]

Mr. Soames: Pay and conditions of service for Gurkhas serving the Crown are largely governed by the 1947 tripartite agreement, between the Governments of the United Kingdom, India and Nepal. Under the terms of this agreement, Gurkha basic pay is linked to Indian army rates of pay. British Gurkhas do, however, receive a substantial addition to their basic pay which takes into account the cost of living at their duty station. In the United Kingdom, where the tasks carried out by Gurkhas are similar to their regular counterparts, the addition is calculated to ensure comparability. British Gurkha conditions of service are also governed by the tripartite agreement and are comparable to those in the Indian Army; they do, however, recognise the unique cultural and religious character of British Gurkha personnel.

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are currently employed in his Department and in related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work force; and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41124]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Breakdowns by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—that is normally those engaged for a period up to 12 months, but exceptionally up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis for 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Employees (Disabled People)

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many registered disabled civilians are employed by his Ministry. [41507]

Mr. Arbuthnot: At 1 April 1995 my Department and its agencies employed 1,355 registered disabled civilians, representing 1.1 per cent. of all civilian staff.

Gulf War (Misappropriated Funds)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons why £43,000 was misappropriated from public funds during the Gulf war; and to which cost centre the sum was reimbursed in the transaction mentioned at page 20 of his departmental appropriation accounts, 1994–95, volume 1, class 1 on defence, HC paper 757–I, of 17 October. [41469]

Mr. Soames: The sum of £43,000 was reimbursed in the transaction mentioned at page 20 of the MOD's departmental appropriation accounts, 1994–95, volume 1, class 1 on defence, HC paper 757–I, of 17 October, following the conviction of an officer who admitted he had defrauded the MOD of that sum while on service in the middle east between May 1992 and October 1993.

By their nature, consolidated fund extra receipts are sums that the MOD is not allowed to retain for the benefit of defence votes. Therefore, no departmental cost centre has been reimbursed with this recovery.

VC10 Aircraft (Repainting)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) United Kingdom and (b) non-United Kingdom companies bid for the contract A3a/453 with his Department for re-painting of RAF VC10 aircraft; on what grounds Sogerma-Socea of Bordeaux was selected; and if he will make a statement. [41322]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Three companies bid for the contract for repainting RAF VC10 aircraft, two UK and one non-UK. The contract was placed on the basis of the lowest price and lowest risk. None of the bidders proposed to paint the aircraft in the UK.

Nuclear Weapons (Legality)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what official monitoring his Department has of the proceeding begun at the International Court of Justice in The Hague on 30 October on the legality of nuclear weapons. [41470]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have maintained a close interest in the requests by the World Health Organisation and the UN General Assembly to the International Court of Justice for advisory opinions on the legality of nuclear weapons since May 1993.

Indonesian Pilots (Training)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made to train Indonesian pilots at RAF Valley. [41385]

Mr. Soames: It is not Government policy to reveal specific details of training undertaken by overseas students in the United Kingdom.

Field Ambulances

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement regarding the order for field ambulances. [41279]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We expect to make an announcement by early 1996.

Departmental Properties, Southampton

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many domestic properties owned by his Department are unoccupied in Marchwood and Calshot, near Southampton. [41455]

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September 1995, there were 54 vacant married quarters at Marchwood and Calshot. Of these, 30 were awaiting demolition as part of the plan to demolish 64 underscaled maisonettes and redevelop the area with houses. The remainder of the vacant properties were either awaiting major maintenance work, already allocated to service families due to move in shortly or formed part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available to house entitled service personnel.

Royal Welch Fusiliers (Gorazde)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the statement of the General-Secretary of the United Nations in respect of the Royal Welch Fusiliers in Gorazde. [41285]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 3 November 1995]: The UN Secretary-General's statement of 18 August reflected the British Government's decision not to replace the Royal Welch Fusiliers in Gorazde at the end of their tour. British troops has served in the town for 18 months. The London conference in July, and subsequent air action by NATO, made abundantly clear the international community's resolve to deter attacks on Gorazde and other safe areas.

Solvent Buoyage

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers of 31 October, Official Report, column 165, on Solvent buoyage, if he will define the limits of the Dockyard port; and if his answers include the navigation buoys laid in the Solvent by the Navy outside the entrance to Portsmouth harbour. [41368]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 3 November 1995]: The limits of the dockyard port of Portsmouth are defined at paragraph 3 of Statutory Instrument 1978 No. 1881, the Dockyard Port of Portsmouth Order 1978, a copy of which is found in the Library of the House. All navigation buoys located within the limits of the Portsmouth dockyard port area are the responsibility of the Queen's harbour master, Portsmouth.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 165, if the Queen's harbour master charges light dues on the Navy's buoyage in the Solvent to merchant shipping. [41369]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 3 November 1995]: The Queen's harbour master at Portsmouth does not charge any dues for buoyage within the area for which he is responsible.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Regeneration, Sheffield

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many initiatives have been taken since June 1987 to deal with urban dereliction and inner-city decay in Sheffield by means of encouraging development and improvements to the city; if he will list each initiative, indicating the amounts expended under each heading; and if he will include grants which have been made to Sheffield, including all funding from European Union sources. [40572]

Mr. Curry: Between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1996, estimated, Sheffield metropolitan district will have benefited from approximately £262.688 million of grant funding from United Kingdom Government—Department of the Environment—and European Union sources for regeneration schemes. The amount for each initiative is set out in the table.

	£ million
Urban programme	58.017
English partnerships[1]	10.986
Estate action	55.776[2]
Urban development corporation	93.210
Urban partnership fund	0.675
Challenge fund	2.568
European regional development fund	39.830
European social fund[3]	1.626

[1] Includes city grant and derelict land grant prior to 1 April 1994.

[2] Grant and SCAs.

[3] From 1 January 1994. Earlier figures are available only on a county basis.

Ministerial Transport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of ministerial transport in each of the past five years; what allowance has been paid to Ministers who use their own vehicles; and what has been the cost in each of the past five years. [40735]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is provided in respect of all DOE Ministers:

1990–91: £270,000

1991–92: £265,000

1992–93: £254,000

1993–94: £258,000

1994–95: £258,000

All figures are exclusive of VAT.

No DOE Ministers use their own vehicles for official purposes.

Meetings with Local Authorities

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the delegations from local authorities whose meetings with Ministers in his Department have been cancelled in the past two weeks. [40654]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding reply given Tuesday 31 October 1995]: No ministerial meetings with local authorities have been cancelled within the past two weeks. However, Earl Ferrers, the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, was obliged to withdraw from attending the Association of District Councils conference on 31 October.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times in the past year he has met local authority organisations to discuss the services that they provide and the means by which they are financed. [41138]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State met representatives of the local authority associations on six occasions in the past year to discuss a range of issues affecting local government.

Carers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995 is to cost local authorities in (a) England and (b) the west midlands; and if local authorities will receive extra funding from central Government to meet the cost of implementation. [41014]

Sir Paul Beresford: We do not expect the implementation of the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995 to add significantly to local authorities' costs.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate the Association of Metropolitan Authorities has sent to provide him about the increase in local authority spending needed to provide the same level of public services for the year 1995–96 as in 1994–95 in (a) England and (b) the west midlands. [41011]

Sir Paul Beresford: The local authority associations submitted a joint report in October 1994 which indicated that local authorities in England would need to increase aggregate expenditure in 1995–96 by approximately £3 billion at 1994–95 prices over 1994–95. There were no separate figures for the west midlands.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the increase in local authority spending needed to provide the same level of public services as in 1994–905 for the year 1995–96 in (a) England and (b) the west midlands. [41010]

Sir Paul Beresford: Each year, the Government estimate the total revenue spending which authorities in England should incur. This is known as total standard spending and mounted to £43.507 billion in 1995–96 including provision of £50 million for the transitional costs of local government reorganisation. In 1994–95, TSS amounted to £42.664 billion including provision of £10 million for local government reorganisation. Authorities have discretion within their capping limits to spend more than this on services.

In arriving at a figure for 1995–96, the Government took account not only of demographic pressures and inflation but of the scope for efficiency gains and re-prioritising. TSS was distributed to local authorities through standard spending assessment which reflect local circumstances.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times a month he has met the Chancellor of the Exchequer to discuss exclusively the spending requirements of local authorities. [41012]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend has met his right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on numerous occasions in recent months. The spending requirements of local authorities have been among the many subjects they have discussed.

South Yorkshire Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available additional finance under the Bellwin scheme, or any other scheme, to South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority in view of its unforeseen expenditure in 1995. [41365]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend has recently considered a request from the South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority for support through the Bellwin scheme for additional expenditure incurred as a consequence of the increased demand for fire services during the recent drought. The Bellwin scheme is intended to support expenditure resulting from sudden one-off emergencies, rather than in response to conditions which have led to an increased demand for an authority's normal services over a prolonged period. My right hon. Friend has decided, therefore, not to establish a Bellwin scheme of financial assistance for South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority on this occasion. The authority has been advised accordingly. We have no plans to make any additional grants available in respect of this expenditure.

Goole

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers he has and in what circumstances to refer back the Local Government Commission's recommendations concerning Goole and rural Goole for reconsideration. [41610]

Sir Paul Beresford: Where a report on a review is submitted to the Secretary of State by the Commission he may, under section 15(6) of the Local Government Act 1992, if he thinks fit, direct the commission to conduct a further review of any area to which the report relates and to make revised recommendations as respects that area.

Further Education Development Association

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grant his Department has paid to the Further Education Development Association; on what date this grant was made; what consultation with local authorities preceded payment; and what statutory provisions govern such payment. [41806]

Sir Paul Beresford: Each year my right hon. Friend makes a determination of the amount of revenue support grant payable in the forthcoming financial year to bodies specified in regulations made under section 76(4) of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. In the Local Government Finance Report 1995–96, approved by this House on 1 February, the amount of £71,656 was determined as payable in 1995–96 to the staff college. This amount was in accordance with the expressed wishes of the local authority associations, which my right hon. Friend consulted before determining the sum concerned. My Department makes payments of revenue support grant in 12 monthly instalments. From 7 April 1995, the Further Education Development Agency became the sole trustee of the staff college and in this capacity has been paid revenue support grant of £41,797 to date in 1995–96.

Somerset House

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what uses Somerset house is currently put. [40231]

Mr. Gummer: The east, west and new wings of Somerset house are occupied by the London headquarters of the Inland Revenue. The south wing is occupied by the principal registry of the family division of the High Court. The north wing of the building is leased to the Courtauld Institute of the university of London for an art gallery and library.

Town Centre Rents

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the impact of upward-only rent reviews on the town centre property market. [40232]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None.

The Government considered the issue of upward-only rent reviews in their review of commercial property leases concluded in 1994. We urged the commercial property industry to introduce a code of practice dealing with upward-only rent reviews, among other issues. The industry plans to publish a code very soon.

Domestic Water Meters

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 410, what proportion of domestic premises in each of the English regional water companies were fitted with water meters in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1992–93. [41223]

Mr. Clappison: In 1993–94 and 1994–95 the proportion of metered water customers of the 10 water and sewerage companies was as follows:

Households percentage[1]

	1994–95	1993—9
Anglian	11.2	6.1
Dwr Cymru	2.7	2.5
North West	4.1	3.0
Northumbrian	0.6	0.4
Severn Trent	7.0	6.2
South West	6.9	5.4
Southern	11.2	10.5
Thames	4.8	4.1
Wessex	8.4	6.6
Yorkshire	5.4	4.1

[1] Company estimates. Comparable information for 1992–93 is not available.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 410, what is the current charge made by each of the English regional water companies for the installation of a water meter in domestic premises. [41222]

Mr. Clappison: Where water companies adopt a programme of metering they do not make a charge to customers for the cost of installing the meter. Where a customer chooses to have a meter, the customer pays for the installation. The amount varies between companies and Ofwat is pressing hard to secure lower installation charges where companies' charges are too high. The current charges made by each of the water companies are shown in tables 5.1 and 5.2 in Ofwat's 1995–96 report on tariff structures and charges, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Environment Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the timetable for establishing a UK environment agency; how many staff will it employ and at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [41520]

Mr. Clappison: The Government are not intending to establish a UK environment agency. However, the Environment Agency for England and Wales was established on 8 August and is planning to take over the functions of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, the National Rivers Authority and the local waste regulation authorities on 1 April 1996. Approximately 9,000 staff will be transferred to the Environment Agency from the predecessor bodies. Staffing costs will be met out of the agency's provision which will be determined in the light of the Government's decisions on public expenditure, to be announced by the Chancellor later this month.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rules and regulations he proposes to repeal or amend by means of a reference to the Deregulation Committee before the end of 1995; and if he will make a statement. [41521]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer to the oral answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster earlier today.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer by repeal of each rule and regulation which has so far been the subject of a reference to the Deregulation Committee from his Department; and in how many cases a compliance cost assessment has been carried out. [41522]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has not yet laid any draft order before the Committee.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations his Department proposes to repeal by the end of 1995; if he proposes to conduct a compliance cost assessment on each regulation repealed; and what is the estimated cost of undertaking a compliance cost assessment to assess the advantages or disadvantages of such a repeal. [41550]

Sir Paul Beresford: In response to recommendations made by the Health and Safety Commission in its review of regulations to simplify and clarify health and safety law, I will shortly be laying before Parliament the Health and Safety (Repeals and Revocations) Regulations 1995 which will repeal:

Section 133 of the Factories Act 1961
Homework Orders 1911, 1912, 1913, 1929 and 1938
The Slaughterhouse Order 1962
The Slaughterhouse (No. 1) Regulations 1962
The Slaughterhouse (No. 2) Regulations 1962
The Railway Running Sheds Order 1961
The Railway Running Sheds (No. 1) Regulations 1961
The Railway Running Sheds (No. 2) Regulations 1961
The Hours of Employment (Conventions) Acts 1936
The Horizontal Milling Machines (Amendment) Regulations 1934

This programme of repeals is concerned with reducing the burden of regulation on business. As they do not impose any new costs on business a cost-benefit assessment was not necessary.

I will also be laying before Parliament before the end of the year the Health and Safety Information for Employees (Modification and Repeals) Regulations 1995, which will remove 53 legal requirements to display posters and notices. However, it is estimated that these proposals will result in an overall estimated cost saving of £1.4 million over 10 years.

The cost to the Health and Safety Executive of producing a cost-benefit assessment will vary depending upon the complexity of the proposed regulatory package, and the amount of supporting information that needs to be collected. A cost-benefit assessment for a relatively straightforward proposal to repeal regulations, such as those of posters and notices, would typically be in the region of £5,000.

Housing (Pensioners)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what national, regional and local figures his Department maintains on forms of housing tenure among pensioners. [41415]

Mr. Clappison: Information on the tenure of pensioners is available from the 1991 census and from regular interview surveys, notably the survey of English housing, the general household survey and the labour force survey. The household surveys can provide national and regional figures but sample sizes are not large enough to provide reliable figures for smaller areas. The House of Commons Library holds reports on the census and on all these surveys.

National and regional information is also available from a special survey sponsored by my Department in 1991 and 1992. The results are published as "A National Survey of Elderly People in the Community", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Fireworks

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where each of the container loads of Red Lion fireworks were stored; for how long, and what monitoring was carried out during storage. [41728]

Sir Paul Beresford: The nominated legal place of keeping required for Red Lion fireworks was at Chorley. Samples were taken of the fireworks held there and submitted to compliance testing at recognised test houses. Seven container loads were moved to Chorley on 16 and 17 September and three of those were subsequently re-exported on 23 September.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports the Health and Safety Executive has received from Cleveland trading standards departments about the number of fireworks produced by Black Cat which contain sulphur chlorate, and what response the HSE has made. [41774]

Sir Paul Beresford: The HSE received information from Cleveland trading standards department of first one and then a further eight fireworks sold by Black Cat that were alleged to contain sulphur and chlorate admixtures.

Each firework type mentioned was tested by the health and safety laboratory for the HSE, the results were evaluated and as a result a general recall was ordered for the "Thunderstorm". Results obtained for the remainder were sent in writing to the Cleveland trading standards department on 1 November 1995.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration the HSE has given to prosecuting Kanash Ltd. and the Royal Ordnance factory in respect of Red Lion fireworks and if he will make a statement. [41778]

Sir Paul Beresford: The HSE issued notices to Kanash Ltd. to prohibit any further distribution or sale of those Red Lion fireworks which failed spot checks. The question of legal proceedings is under consideration.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information about compliance with BS 7114 appeared on the "Thunderstorm" firework produced by Red Lion Fireworks; and what assessment he has made as to the extent of such compliance. [41787]

Sir Paul Beresford: The label on the "Thunderstorm" firework says that is complies with BS7114:2:88. Tests for compliance are carried out by trading standard officers.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when and by whom the HSE was informed of the presence of sulphur chlorate in "Thunderstorm" fireworks, produced by Black Cat; and what action was taken on the basis of the information supplied. [41772]

Sir Paul Beresford: Information was received in two ways. The more comprehensive was provided by trading standards offices in Cleveland on 26 October and led to the further sampling and testing by HSE on 27 and 28 and the general recall then immediately ordered.

Earlier information received from a competitor company on 3 and 17 October was less precise and came only after HSE had visited Black Cat as part of its national campaign.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where and when were tests carried out on the consignment of Red Lion fireworks; what were the results; and when they were communicated to the HSE. [41776]

Sir Paul Beresford: The sequence of events was set out by my right hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Competition and Consumer Affairs on 1 November 1995, Official Report, columns 273–74.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which companies' firework products were tested by the Health and Safety Executive for sulphur chlorate between 1965 and 1995; which products were involved; and what were the results and dates of the tests. [41790]

Sir Paul Beresford: Due to statutory restrictions on disclosure of information it is not possible in the time available to list the names of the companies involved. Information for years prior to 1984 would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Year	Number of companies	Number of fireworks tested	Number fail test	Number pass test
1995*	13	30	3	27
1993	Not recorded	17	0	3
1992	Not recorded	3	0	17
1991	1	1	0	1
1990	1	1	1	0
1989	—	—	—	—
1988	1	3	0	3
1987	11	126	3	123
1986	10	80	9	71
1985	—	—	—	—
1984	5	47	0	47
Total		311	16	295

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are now the whereabouts of the container loads of Red Lion fireworks. [41729]

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand that some fireworks remain in the leased depot at Chorley, but the bulk were distributed to various parts of the United Kingdom. The importer is co-operating with the Health and Safety Executive in providing full details and is recalling all its imported fireworks.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many container loads of Red Lion fireworks were at the Royal Ordnance depot in Chorley; for how long; and what tests were carried out there. [41775]

Sir Paul Beresford: Seven container loads of fireworks were moved to Chorley on 16 and 17 September when released from the port of importation. Three of them were re-exported on 23 September.

Samples were taken for testing at recognised test houses in Derbyshire and Yorkshire, and later by HSE for check test purposes.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment is sulphur chlorate is permitted as a constituent of fireworks. [41789]

Sir Paul Beresford: Order in Council 15 of 30 April 1894 to the Explosives Act 1875 prohibits the manufacture, import, keeping, conveyance or sale of any fireworks containing an admixture of sulphur and chlorate.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements the Health and Safety Executive put in place to investigate and monitor Kanash Ltd. and Red Lion fireworks. [41727]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive made arrangements to receive test reports from recognised test houses in Great Britain—to show compliance with British standard 7114:1988 and with Order in Council 15 on the prohibition of admixtures of sulphur with a chlorate before distribution could begin. All results were satisfactory and authorisation was given. However, two fireworks failed spot checks and prohibitions were then placed on any further distribution of them.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the steps taken by the HSE to ensure the withdrawal of "Thunderstorm" fireworks from sale. [41773]

Sir Paul Beresford: The distributor, Black Cat, was required to stop any further distribution and to make arrangments to recover all "Thunderstorm" fireworks or selection boxes which contained that item from its retail outlets. At the same time, a press notice was issued to advise the public that a fault had been detected and that the firework or selection box should be returned to the place of purchase.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what attempts the HSE have made to trace buyers of Red Lion fireworks; and what records Kanash Ltd. has provided to assist them. [41777]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive issued a press notice to alert the public and Kanash Ltd. has been co-operating with officials in recalling the fireworks in question.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Kanash Ltd. applied to the Health and Safety Executive for approval to import Red Lion fireworks to the United Kingdom; what was the Health and Safety Executive's response to that application; and what was the date of that response. [41724]

Sir Paul Beresford: The sequence of events was set out by my right hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Competition and Consumer Affairs on 1 November 1995, Official Report, columns 273–74.

Mr. Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the terms of the approval given to Kanash Ltd. regarding the import of Red Lion fireworks. [41725]

Sir Paul Beresford: Kanash Ltd. was required to show evidence of compliance with conditions for authorisation as set out in section 40(9) of the Explosives Act 1875, as amended.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for the import of explosive devices into the United Kingdom of non-compliance with BS7114. [41768]

Sir Paul Beresford: BS7114 relates only to fireworks. Compliance with that standard is one of the main conditions to be satisfied for the authorisation of any firework and is an important element in deciding if any particular firework is safe. Non-compliance means that the firework cannot be supplied in Great Britain.

Housing Improvement Grants

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum paid towards housing improvement grants by English local authorities annually since 1979. [41720]

Mr. Clappison: The table shows total payments of all types of house renovation grant by local authorities in England, as reported to the Department. It covers payments under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, the Housing Act 1985 and earlier legislation. The figures include estimates to cover local authorities that did not provide this information to the Department.

House renovation grants: total final grants payments

England	£ million
1979	100.2
1980	127.3
1981	148.2
1982	282.2
1983	655.5
1984	839.4
1985	525.1
1986	394.9
1987	362.0
1988	247.2
1989	328.7
1990	314.0
1991	299.4
1992	398.9
1993	428.7
1994	468.4

Canary Wharf

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total contribution from public funds to the Canary wharf office complex from (a) grants, (b) subsidies, and (c) write-offs. [41722]

Sir Paul Beresford: No grants or subsidies have been provided by the London Docklands development corporation. As a result of Olympia and York—the developers of Canary wharf—going into administration, the LDDC, in common with other creditors, received 15p in the pound on its debts outstanding as at spring 1992 with Olympia and York contractors and Olympia and York Canary Wharf Ltd. The LDDC, therefore, wrote off 85 per cent. of its debt which amounted to £608,167.

Dangerous Wild Animals

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many licences have been issued by local authorities to private individuals to keep dangerous wild animals. [41721]

Mr. Clappison: This information is not held centrally since licensing under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 is the responsibility of district councils and the councils of London boroughs.

HEALTH

Doncaster Health Commission

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the legal fees incurred by Doncaster health commission form part of its management running costs. [39007]

Mr. Sackville: Yes.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the recommendation made by his departmental scientist and others that a second dose of measles, mumps and rubella vaccine should be administered before school age has been implemented. [40079]

Mr. Sackville: The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation's recommendation is presently under consideration.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the likelihood of the adverse reactions to the administration of both MR and MMR vaccines; and what account is taken of the possibility of under-reporting of (a) rash, (b) fever, (c) arthritis in all children, (d) arthritis in females of child-bearing age, (e) meningitis, (f) encephalitis and (g) convulsions following such vaccinations. [40063]

Mr. Sackville: The measles and rubella components of the MR vaccine are the same as those in MMR and the profile of adverse reactions to these components of both vaccines is the same. Prior to the national introduction of MMR vaccine in the United Kingdom in 1988, post-immunisation symptoms were assessed, using active surveillance, in more than 10,000 children, including some for whom it was the second dose of measles. Published studies from the United States, which used active and passive reporting systems, have also been considered by my Department.

It is well established that there is under-reporting of suspected adverse reactions to any medicinal product, but serious conditions are more likely to be reported. This fact is taken into account when assessing data from spontaneous reports. However, in respect of MR vaccine, doctors were asked by the chief medical officer to report all reactions. It is likely that this, combined with the widespread awareness and magnitude of the campaign, led to enhanced compliance with the reporting of certain conditions that may not be casually related to the vaccine. The public health laboratory service is conducting on-going studies to look at MMR immunisation and meningitis, encephalitis and convulsions.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice is given to parents of children who have suffered life-threatening anaphylaxis following egg ingestion before the planned administration of MR vaccine. [40071]

Mr. Sackville: The leaflet "Measles: Why every child in school needs to be protected from measles this autumn", containing a consent form, was sent to all parents before immunisation took place; it stated that MR injection should not be given if their child has had a serious life-threatening reaction after eating eggs. This advice was also given to all health professionals.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what survey or other scientific information underlay his Department's press release of 28 July 1994 on the plans for a nationwide measles vaccine campaign. [40075]

Mr. Sackville: A list of articles and scientific papers will be placed in the Library, all of which have been published and underpinned the decision of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation to recommend to Ministers that a measles immunisation campaign was necessary.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the average length of the immunity established in children vaccinated with MMR or MR vaccinations. [40067]

Mr. Sackville: Follow-up of the first children to receive measles vaccine in the United Kingdom 30 years ago has shown that immunity to measles persists at least this length of time. Rubella vaccine for school girls and adult women was introduced 25 years ago and immunity has been shown to persist in this group for at least this long. The combined MMR vaccine was only introduced for young children in the UK in 1988 but studies in other countries show persistence of immunity in this age group for at least 20 years. However, most of this information relates to persistence under conditions where the natural diseases are still circulating and may be boosting immunity. Also, with each vaccine there is a proportion of children—5 to 10 per cent.—who do not develop immunity the first time that they are vaccinated.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to arrange for public access to the data held at the National Institute for Biological Standards on the effects of vaccines upon children known to suffer from allergies. [40081]

Mr. Sackville: The National Institute for Biological Standards and Control does not hold information on the effects of vaccines upon children known to suffer from allergies.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish a scheme to encourage parents or guardians to submit their own reports on suspected vaccine damage from MMR or MR directly to (a) the Committee on Safety of Medicines and (b) the Medicines Control Agency. [40065]

Mr. Sackville: We have no such plans. Parents and guardians are, however, recommended to discuss any concerns with their family doctor. Health professionals are encouraged to report suspected adverse reactions to the Medicines Control Agency. It is important that the details of the patient's medical condition and medication that has been taken are known. Therefore, it is most appropriate to obtain reports of suspected vaccine damage from the patient's doctor who will be able to supply all the information needed.

All reports of suspected adverse drug reactions are assessed by professional staff of the MCA. The Committee on Safety of Medicines is an independent expert committee that advises the licensing authority and Ministers on matters relating to the safety, quality and efficacy of medicines.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the scientific papers on the association between the RA 27/3 rubella vaccine and arthritis of which his Department took account in formulating the national campaign of MR vaccination last November. [40080]

Mr. Sackville: A comprehensive list of papers is contained in the publication "Adverse effects of pertussis and rubella vaccine" published by the United States National Academy Press, ISBN 0 309 0449 5. A copy of the extract will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what follow-up his Department has established in respect of reported cases of convulsions linked to vaccinations. [40064]

Mr. Sackville: Follow-up is carried out after a serious reaction is reported under the yellow card system to obtain further details of the patient's medical history and other factors relevant to the reaction, in order to assess whether the reaction is likely to be associated with the vaccine. This procedure is carried out by the professional staff of the Medicines Control Agency.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the children for whom there are reports of suspected damage from the administration of MR vaccine were known to have a history of (a) asthma, (b) allergies and (c) fitios febrile convulsions. [40070]

Mr. Sackville: Over 8 million children in the United Kingdom have been immunised with MR vaccine. By October 1995, the Medicines Control Agency had received 2,735 suspected adverse reactions affecting 1,202 children. Some children were reported as having more than one reaction. However, the receipt of a report of a reaction does not necessarily mean that it has been caused by the vaccine.

Of the 1,202 children with suspected reactions to MR vaccine, 41 were reported as having a history of asthma—or chest symptoms suggestive of asthma—32 were reported as having preexisting allergic conditions and four febrile convulsions.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many instances financial penalties have been applied to the manufacturers of the measles-rubella vaccine used in the vaccination campaign begun in November 1994 because of an identified fault in the supply of vaccines or instruments as to its preparation. [40078]

Mr. Sackville: None. Deliveries of the vaccine and the immunisation equipment were made on time. Surplus stocks of vaccine occurred because of an excess in the amount of diluent provided. These surplus stocks have been returned to the supplier and credits have been received.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what information he has received in regard to the number of children who have suffered physical or psychological trauma as a suspected result of immunisation against measles. [40365]

Mr. Sackville: To October 1995, the Medicines Control Agency has received reports of 2,690 physical reactions relating to the MMR campaign, out of approximately 8 million children who received MR vaccine in the United Kingdom. For MMR vaccine, since 1987, the MCA have received 4,264 reports of physical reactions and 38 psychiatric/psychological reactions. Some 9.6 million doses of MMR have been distributed in the UK since the vaccine was introduced. However, the receipt of a report of a reaction does not necessarily mean that it has been caused by the vaccine.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been carried out by his Department of the effects of booster shots of measles vaccinations. [40266]

Mr. Sackville: Studies have been carried out by the public health laboratory service since 1987 in this country and there are a number of other international publications.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specialist medical advice is available from the health service to counsel and support children who have suffered from the suspected adverse effects of measles vaccination. [40269]

Mr. Sackville: All children with illness, of whatever sort, receive advice and support from appropriate medical specialists.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of all letters received by his Department's principal medical officer from (a) the United States Government's health authorities and (b) the US national immunisation program in the past year on measles immunisation programmes; and if he will make a statement on the advice received from his American counterpart on measles immunisation. [40287]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The Department's principal medical officer has not received letters from the United States Government's health authority or the US national immunisation programme in the past year on measles immunisation.

In 1994, advice on adverse reactions following a second dose of MMR was received from US authorities and this was included in information sent to all doctors in September 1994; a copy of this information is in the Library.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish a structured interview programme in respect of families alleging deleterious effects from immunisation against measles. [40270]

Mr. Sackville: There is already a well-established satisfactory system in place for monitoring adverse reactions to all medicines, including vaccines.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out (a) the month of manufacture of the component constituents, (b) the date of cultivation of the viruses and (c) the dates of alteration of the viruses used in the measles and rubella vaccination campaign launched in November 1994. [40284]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 31 October 1995]: Two manufacturers supplied the vaccines used in the measles and rubella vaccination campaign. The finished batch products, produced in August and September 1994 were manufactured from a number of bulk component constituents each of which was made over a period of several months in 1989, 1992, 1993 and 1994. Cultivation of the viruses used in these batches occurred during manufacture of the bulk component constituents. The viruses were obtained from master seed viruses attenuated some 25 to 30 years ago.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation was made by his Department of the reasons why the Trivirix MMR vaccine was withdrawn from use in Canada in May 1990; what considerations led to his Department's to withdraw the MMR vaccine from use in the United Kingdom; and when it was withdrawn. [40288]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The decisions that were taken by the Canadian authorities to discontinue using Urabe strain mumps vaccines were known to other licensing authorities. At that time, there was insufficient evidence of a problem with the strain of mumps vaccine in the United Kingdom for a change in vaccine policy to be advised.

Alerted to the existence of a potential problem of mumps vaccine virus meningitis by the Canadians, the Department of Health commissioned the public health laboratory service to undertake a study which allowed the detailed monitoring of possible vaccine associated cases. The studies undertaken were of an intensity that had not been undertaken anywhere else in the world. This involved 13 health districts. Some 28 vaccine associated cases were identified, all in recipients of MMR vaccines containing the Urabe mumps strain, indicating a risk of one in 11,000 with the vaccines.

As soon as data were available confirming the extent of the risk, showing that an alternative vaccine did not have this level of risk and was equally effective, and adequate alternative supplies were available, the Urabe vaccines were replaced. This occurred in September 1992.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the evidence his Department has evaluated in respect of suspected links between vaccinations administered for tuberculosis and (a) epileptic fits and (b) febrile convulsions. [40730]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 November 1995]: All reports of suspected adverse reactions to vaccines are regularly reviewed by professional staff of the Medicines Control Agency. The report of a reaction does not necessarily mean it was caused by the vaccine.

Since 1963, reactions have been reported in 795 people who had received BCG vaccine. In 11 children suspected reaction were classified as "convulsions". Six of these reactions were closely related to immunisation and were associated with fainting. The number that were febrile convulsions cannot be identified from the available information. Approximately 500,000 BCG vaccinations are given each year mostly in schoolchildren aged 10 to 13 years.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans exist to introduce improved vaccine monitoring of the side effects of the administration of MMR vaccinations. [40069]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to change the monitoring of the side effects of the administration of MMR vaccine. There is a well-established satisfactory system in place already for monitoring adverse reactions to all medicines, including vaccines.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what survey his Department has conducted of children vaccinated against measles, mumps and rubella in the past year in regard to the numbers and the proportion suffering from a reaction rash to the administration of the vaccine. [40072]

Mr. Sackville: Between 26 October 1994 and 26 October 1995, there have been 220 spontaneous reports in the United Kingdom of suspected adverse reactions in patients who have received measles, mumps and rubella vaccine. Of these, 67 were rashes or other similar skin reactions. However, the receipt of a report of a reaction does not necessarily mean that it has been caused by a vaccine. There have been 950,000 doses of MMR distributed in the UK in the past year.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been done by his Department, or consultants to his Department, into the causes of sub-acute sclerosing panencephalitis; and what steps have been taken to combat this disease. [40076]

Mr. Sackville: Sub-acute sclerosing panencephalitis was shown to be due to wild measles virus in 1967 by a United Kingdom virologist working in Belfast. The effects on SSPE of the introduction of measles vaccination in 1968 has been investigated by the public health laboratory service which keeps a register of all cases. This surveillance has shown that the vaccine protects against SSPE and that the incidence of this condition has dramatically decreased since routine measles immunisation was introduced.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what study his Department has set up to correlate vaccination records for MMR with (a) school attendance records, (b) hospital admission records and (c) general practitioners' records. [40068]

Mr. Sackville: The public health laboratory service is conducting studies to look at adverse events associated with MMR vaccination using hospital admissions data and general practioners' records. Pilot studies in single districts with hospital records have been published. Larger studies using both data sets are in progress. MMR is given routinely at 12 to 15 months, an age when children do not attend school. No study has been set up to look at school attendance records.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made by his Department of secondary complications arising from (a) measles, (b) mumps and (c) rubella. [40077]

Mr. Sackville: A number of investigations have been carried out by the public health laboratory service over the last 30 years that have looked at the severity and complications of natural measles, mumps and rubella infection. These studies have been based on hospital admissions and laboratory confirmed cases. Numerous other studies, both in this country and abroad, have also been conducted and these have been considered by my Department. Studies continue to confirm that there is significant morbidity associated with measles and mumps infection and with rubella infection during pregnancy.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what variation has been recorded in the incidences of congenital rubella syndrome in the United Kingdom since 1986. [40073]

Mr. Sackville: The number of reported cases of congenital rubella in the United Kingdom since 1986 is shown in the table.

	Number of Cases
1986	30
1987	40
1988	25
1989	15
1990	13
1991	3
1992	[1]7
1993	3
1994	7

[1] Includes triplets (thus, number of affected pregnancies = 5).

These was a substantial drop in the number of cases following the introduction of MMR in October 988 and an increase in 1994. The figures for the most recent years—1990 onwards—are not complete as some affected children are not diagnosed or reported until they are older.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment hid Department has made as to whether natural measles normally convey life-long immunity. [40061]

Mr. Sackville: It is established medical fact that measles is a serious disease which does convey life-long immunity for those who survive it.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department was informed of the likelihood of a measles epidemic in the winter of 1994–95. [40268]

Mr. Sackville: Evidence was presented to the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation in November 1993 that pointed to an epidemic between 1996 and 1997. By the middle of 1994, it became apparent that an epidemic could occur earlier.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent information he has received from the World Health Organisation in regard to its assessment of the spread of measles. [40271]

Mr. Sackville: The conclusions and recommendations of the 10th meeting of the World Health Organisation's European advisory group on the expanded programme on immunisation held in Copenhagen on 24 to 25 April stated:

> "single dose measles immunisation strategies would not reach the Regional targets and with such strategies there would continue to be recurrent epidemics. The alternative augmented strategies will impose higher resources requirements but will be cost-effective by preventing cyclical epidemics".

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the (a) expected and (b) actual number of deaths from measles in each year since 1987; what is the expected number of deaths for the next year; and what is the mortality rate from measles; [40272]

(2) which historic outbreaks of measles were considered when assessing the number of children expected to die of measles before the establishment of the measles immunisation campaign in November 1994; and how many deaths occurred in each such epidemic. [40676]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 November 1995]: Measles has been a notifiable disease since 1940. Epidemics, with associated deaths occurred regularly until the introduction of vaccine in 1968. This historic data, along with notifications and deaths from 1968 to 1993, were used in making predictions for future epidemics. Details of deaths since 1987 are shown in the table.

In predicting deaths in future epidemics, consideration was given to the expectation than an epidemic would primarily affect older individuals than previously. In such individuals, case fatality rates from measles are much higher.

Deaths recorded at Office of Population Censuses and Surveys having measles as an underlying cause for all ages in England and Wales 1987–94

Year	Total expected	Total observed
1987	6	6
1988	1	16
1989[1]	7	3
1990[1]	2	1
1991[1]	1	1
1992[1]	1	2
1993[1]	1	4
1994[1]	3	[2]1

[1] After the introduction of MMR vaccine in 1988, measles notification are not an accurate measure of the incidence of disease (Brown et al, British Medical Journal 1994, so for 1989–94 notifications are corrected for misdiagnosis before applying mortality rates.

[2] Provisional figure.

No deaths due to indigenously acquired acute measles are expected within the five to 16 year age group in 1996.

The age specific case fatality rates from measles during the period of 1971–88 were:

Age group	Deaths per 100,000 cases
<1 year	41
1-4 years	16
5-9 years	10
10-14 years	32
15-24 years	89
25+ years	92

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources were given to each area health authority to support the vaccination campaign against measles and rubella started in November 1994. [40286]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 31 October 1995]: District health authorities were supplied free of charge with measles and rubella vaccine, syringes, needles, sharps containers and publicity materials. Implementation costs were met from existing national health service resources.

Immunisation Campaigns

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter on the measles and rubella immunisation campaign by the chief medical officer sent to all doctors on 27 September 1994; and if he will indicate whether his chief medical officer received any negative responses to his letter. [40074]

Mr. Sackville: A copy of the letter is available in the Library. The letter was sent to over 90,000 health care professionals and the chief medical officer received 35 written replies to his letter, only two of which were negative about the campaign.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which countries in the European Union have conducted immunisation campaigns against measles, mumps and rubella in the past 10 years. [40235]

Mr. Sackville: All countries of the European Union have immunisation programmes that include MMR vaccine. Almost all of them follow two dose programmes for MMR.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings (a) he, (b) other departmental Ministers or (c) departmental officials have had for the past two years with representatives of the Justice Awareness and Basic Support group to discuss problems with immunisation campaigns conducted by his Department. [40267]

Mr. Sackville: I am not aware that the Justice Awareness and Basic Support group have formally requested a meeting with Ministers or officials.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the measles innoculation campaign of winter 1994–95. [40285]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 31 October 1995]: The campaign was highly effective. Some 92 per cent. of the children aged five to 16 years were immunised. In much of the country, measles virus transmission has been interrupted. An epidemic has been averted. Since January 1995, there have been approximately 50 confirmed cases, of which eight were imported.

Cemfuel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 567, what assessment he has made of the second report of the Environment Committee on burning of secondary liquid fuel in cement kilns, HC479 of Session 1994–95; and if he will commission studies into the possible health effects of burning cemfuel. [40452]

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health will contribute to the Government response to the Environment Committee report. We have no plans to commission any studies on this subject.

Internet

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in (a) Sheffield, (b) Yorkshire and (c) Humberside have been connected to the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [40574]

Mr. Sackville: Records are not available centrally of individual connections to the Internet by prospective national health service users. However, framework contracts have been awarded to British Telecom and Mercury for wide area network services to establish a NHS-wide networking service to support the business requirements of NHS organisations. This electronic communications infrastructure dedicated to the NHS will, in turn, be able to be connected to the Internet through secure, centrally managed, gateways. It will remain for individual organisations to decide whether to take up the option of being connected to the Internet through the secure gateway available as part of the NHS-wide networking service.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many psychiatric hospitals are due to close (a) in 1996 and (b) in years subsequent to 1996; [41103]

(2) how many psychiatric hospitals have closed in 1995 and in each year since 1979. [41100]

Mr. Bowis: Information is available on the closure of large mental illness hospitals in the report "Survey of English Mental Hospitals March 1994—Monitoring the Closure of the Water Towers", copies of which are available in the Library. Information for 1994–95 is not available centrally.

Residential Care Homes and Nursing Homes

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct the social services inspectorate to consult proprietors of private residential homes and nursing homes in Coventry about the impact of Coventry social services department's variation from the conditions of registration with particular reference to staffing requirements. [40896]

Mr. Bowis: We have reminded local and health authorities, in recently published guidance, of the need to consult all providers about local standards. Copies of the guidance LAC(95)12 and HSG(95)41 are available in the Library. Representations by proprietors of residential care or nursing homes in Coventry should be made through the independent unit advisory panel, the local authority complaints procedure or the local government ombudsman.

Temporary and Part-time Staff

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are currently employed in his Department and related agencies on (a) temporary or casual employment contracts and (b) part-time employment contracts, given as an actual figure and as a proportion of the total work force; and what were the corresponding figures for five years ago. [41120]

Mr. Sackville: Breakdowns by Department and executive agency for 1 April 1995 of the number of permanent staff, the number of casual staff—that is, normally those engaged for a period of up to 12 months, but exceptionally up to two years—and of the number of part-time staff are presented in the civil service staff in post summary table for 1 April 1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Estimates on a comparable basis for 1 April 1990 have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Adipose Tissue

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into causes of layers of adipose tissue on the wall of the abdomen, tapering to the hip bones; and if he will make a statement. [40953]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 October, Official Report, columns 35–37.

Evaluation of research into abdominal obesity is covered by "Reversing the increasing problem of obesity in England: a report from the Nutrition and Physical Activity Task Forces", recently published by my Department.

Beta-Interferon

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to restrict the use of beta-interferon to controlled trials; and if he will make a statement. [41508]

Mr. Sackville: Currently there are no marketing authorisations—product licences—for beta-interferon in the United Kingdom but approval has been given for clinical trials to test the efficacy of beta-interferon in multiple sclerosis.

In addition to the use of beta-interferon in controlled clinical trials, if a doctor identifies the need to treat a patient using this unlicensed medicine, he would be able to do so on a "named-patient" basis in accordance with section 9(1) of the Medicines Act 1968 without the patient taking part in a clinical trial and without the doctor notifying the licensing authority. However, a doctor prescribing an unlicensed product does so entirely on his own responsibility. To stop such a use of beta-interferon would be a restriction on clinical freedom and prevent a doctor from offering his patient what in his clinical judgment is the most appropriate treatment for that patient.

NHS Estates Agency

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the framework document for the NHS Estates agency. [42095]

Mr. Sackville: I have today published the agency's new framework document, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Nut Allergies

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken since May 1994 to ensure that all general practitioners in England and Wales make it a rule to refer patients with nut allergy to a specialist allergy clinic. [41135]

Mr. Sackville: The chief medical officer's update No. 2, which was sent to all doctors in May 1994, included advice on the management of peanut anaphylaxis. In October 1994, the Royal College of Physicians and the Royal College of Pathologists jointly produced guidelines on good allergy practice and standards of care for providers and purchasers of allergy services within the NHS. The treatment of individual patients is a matter of professional clinical judgment.

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths from peanut allergy have been recorded in the past 12 months. [41134]
